The lodges, the clubs, the theatres, and political gatherings are crowded by men who never enter church doors. Men swarm at all places but religious gatherings. These things are patent to all. The shepherds take counsel together to amend the evil, but they never think it necessary to amend their ways. Few as the churches are, in proportion to saloons and population, only sensational methods can attract an audience. To raise funds they compete with the popcorn vendor, the peanut peddler, and the seller of icecream, oysters and summer drinks, and vie with the theatre and variety shows, and even meditate opening saloons for religious cocktails and eye-openers. Where will the end be? "There is a way that seemeth right to a man, but the end thereof is (not universal conversion, but) death."

"Physicians heal thyself" is the reply of the intelligent pagan to the misguided missionary—"First convert your own heathen and amend your own ways and then it will be time to reform us."

Thinking ministers have told the writer that the true test of a church's living faith is the average attendance at prayer meeting, and they claim this is usually below 10 per cent of the membership. Lately the writer attended the regular prayer-meeting of a church of about 1000 members. There was to have been a baptism, but the candidates did not appear, the pastor was absent, and one old gentleman, the writer and two ladies were the only ones attending. The excuse was rain, but the streets were full of vehicles and pedestrians on their way to business and various resorts, or to the opera to hear Miss Spicy, (in an almost imaginary costume), elaborating the supposition that an immoral life is compatible with the loftiest sentiments of virtue and that a happy blending of open vice with gushing sentimentality, is the ideal of womanhood. How is it that Christian men and women can afford to hire a carriage and pay two or three dollars to encourage Miss Spicy in gilding vice, and yet groan over a dime contributed to the Lord? There must be some process of reasoning by this out, for the reference is to those of estimable worldly character even if somewhat distorted on points.

There is not a really Christian nation on earth. The very best are only enlightened heathen nations, slightly leavened by Christianity—of fifteen hundred million souls Christianity claims two hundred millions. These are Protestant, Greek and Roman Catholics, Armenians, Abyssinians, Atheists, Agnostics, everything-arians and nothing-arians. How many of these will Christ own, think you? How many of them are agonizing to enter the strait gate?

After 100 years under the iron gaunt of Britain, India claims two and a half million Christians, such as they are. Given a heathen population of 300,000,000, increasing by birth-rate 3,000,000 yearly; how long will it take to convert them at the rate of 2,500,000 every hundred years? And what would become of these Christians if England was driven out?

In China a few ill-supplied, heroic missionaries, are forcibly held in place by foreign war ships while their converts seem to be massacred as fast as made.

In Africa the False Prophet and the British Lion are grappled in a death struggle over its benighted millions; on the one side they are offered death, slavery or Islam; on the other, civilization and the inevitable rum bottle.

In Turkey, the Sultan, (encouraged for political purposes, by the Czar, the Head of the Greek Church,) is butchering off his Christian subjects in defiance of the "Christian" Powers; all of whom, (including the United States) are very much shocked, thinking something ought to be done, but declining to do it themselves.

In Japan a few missionaries are tolerated, partly from policy, and partly in sheer contempt of their influence.

In the South Seas, New Zealand, Tasmania and Oceanica, the missionaries certainly converted such natives as had not eaten each other or been destroyed in the process of improving their former benighted condition, but there is nothing to show for it, as they subsequently could not stand so much prosperity and happiness and rapidly succumbed to ruin and disease.

In Tasmania but one remains—in New Zealand a few are yet existing until their room is required by the whites: New Guinea is now in process of civilization: a few more ship-loads of whiskey, a few more maxim guns, so shall their civilization come upon them as one that travelleth and their destruction as an armed man. In our own country it is the same. Civilization was introduced by Pizarro, Cortez and the Jesuits and history records the felicitous results. Where are the former inhabitants of our own United States? How many of these will rise up and call us blessed? How many of them will plead for us at the bar of God? What has civilization or the Church done for them? We see a few poor, wretched, ignorant, drunken, demoralized, starving worms, occasionally turning in sheer desperation on their tormentors and oppressors, as all that is left of God's children committed to our charge when he directed the footsteps of our fathers to this broad land. What hope of the future can the Church derive from such scenes as these? When will these ill-advised prophets understand that civilization and Christianity are not synonymous or convertible terms? India is a civilized country. She has universities, colleges and schools; a free press, the railroad, telegraph and telephone. She has electric lighted cities and idol temples and the most famous irrigation system of the world, a marvel of engineering ability and unprecedented cost. Her women are queens and rulers and teachers, and Lawyers and doctors and famed philanthropists, poets artists and missionaries. Her men are elected to the English Parliament by British electors over British opponents; they sit in India in the Chief Council, on the Supreme Bench, are magistrates and army officers. Her merchants sail ships on every sea and compete in the cotton and tea markets of the world. Yet they remain heathen, but a very unsignificant few have embraced Christianity. They say they have weighed it in the balance and found it wanting; and they are not fools but are casuists and theological critics, equal, at least, to the best any where. The same seems true of the Japanese.

The majority of these men, (as we do,) judge by Christ's rule: "By their fruits ye shall know them," and they condemn the ordinary representatives of Christianity as a degree more crafty, selfish and bigoted than themselves. They cannot, or do not, distinguish between the true and the false, and so reject the Christian creed in toto.

This claim of a man produced millennium is but a dream born of ambition, pride and folly. A dream that would rob Christ of his mission, God of his glory, and base salvation on works and not on grace. It is contrary to Scripture and existing facts. It is the Apotheosis of unbelief, and the sublimity of conceit—the strong delusion of 2 Thess. ii. 11: "Verily man at his best is altogether vanity." Psa. xxxix. 5: "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean (?) not one." Job xiv. 4.

"The world is very evil, the times are waxing late.
Be sober, and keep vigil, the Judge is at the gate.
The Judge that comes in mercy, the Judge that comes with might,
To turn back the evil, to disclose the right—
And every eye shall see him, behold the King's array!
Behold the God in beauty, the low hath passed away.
But now we watch and struggle, but now we live in hope.
And Zion in her anguish with Babylon must cope,—
And he, whom now we trust in, shall then be seen and known.
And they, that know and see him, shall have him for their own—
Exalt oft dust and ashes, the Lord shall be thy pearl.
His only, his forever, thou shalt be and thou art."

A Letter to a Converted Jew.

Dear Brother Lichtenstein:

I see by a late number of the Jewish Christian that you are associated with Mr. Warszawiak in the mission work among the Jews. I was highly pleased with this announcement; and especially as you had been laboring in the Baptist church. Now my object in writing to you, is to call your attention to the subject of baptism. I see by the Jewish Christian that most and perhaps all of the converts to Christianity from Judaism unite with the Presbyterian church, hence they are not baptized but rantized, (sprinkled), which is called baptism. If I understand the subject of baptism correctly: sprinkling a few drops of water on a man's forehead is not a valid Scriptural baptism. "To the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20. Paul in describing baptism in Rom. vi. 3, 4, said—"Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? "Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we should walk in newness of life," 5 verse. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." If I understand this quotation correctly, Paul is trying to show, that when the sinner is dead to sin, he must be buried with Christ in baptism, so that rising from the watery grave, may typify a resurrection from the dead, as Christ was raised from the death state. Again, Col ii. 12. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God who hath raised him from the dead." Paul is evidently trying to teach that to arise from the baptismal grave, elicits faith in the resurrection like as Christ was raised from the dead. How can a few drops of water sprinkled on a man's forehead show a faith in the resurrection? Who can imagine? Again—Gal. iii. 27, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ," 29 v. "And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." In order to be of the seed of Abraham, we must be adopted into the family of Abraham through Christ. And this adoption can take place only by baptism, not by rantism.

It is very evident that a burial with Christ in baptism was taught and practiced by the Apostles to teach a faith in the resurrection; and secondly, is necessary for the remission of sins. Peter, on the day of Pentecost, said to the enquiring Jews—"Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Ananias also said to Saul, Acts xxii. 16, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins." Saul had become to be a praying man, yet his sins were still upon him and could be washed away only by baptism.

But I may be asked if I believe baptism is necessary for salvation? God has commanded me not to lie, steal nor commit adultery, and if I do not abstain from these, how can I expect salvation?—No more can I if I do not comply with God's requirements in regard to baptism, for our Lord Jesus Christ commanded it. The Savior has given no command to be trifled with.

God's command by Peter on the day day of Pentecost is; "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins." Now if we think that sprinkling a few drops of water on our foreheads is a burial with Christ in baptism: it may be found that we have made a mistake.

When Christ was crucified and his side was pierced by the soldier's spear, there came out blood and water. The issuance of water with the blood shows that water is just as necessary as the blood in cleansing the sinner from his sins. Indeed, baptism in water is a symbolic application of the blood of Christ. An alien cannot get remission of his sins and induction into the family of Christ by prayer, but only in God's appointed way, but when once in the family of Christ, if he sin, he has an advocate with the Father, even Jesus Christ the righteous.

Again—Jesus said—John iii. 5, "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Now what is it to be born of water? Jesus makes use of natural things to illustrate spiritual things. To be born of flesh is to come out of flesh, so, to be born of water is to come out of water. I believe Jesus meant just what he said. Jesus went to John the Baptist to be baptized. He said—"Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." It was necessary for Jesus to be washed because he was not only to be a King but a Priest, and all who aspire to be kings and priests and to reign over the nations must be washed as Jesus was to fulfill the right cousnes which those offices demand. In the ancient Jewish economy there was a sea, (or baptistry as it is now called,) for the priests to wash in 2 Chron. iv. 6. This was by God's command. So Christ must needs be washed to fulfill all righteousness, and if we neglect this important duty and thus do not fulfill the righteousness attained by being baptized, it will be found in the great day of assize that our garments are defiled and need washing. See Rev. vii. 14, 15, we shall be recovered in the innumerable multitude "before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple."

Yours for the gospel truth.

DANIEL HOWARD.

M. JOBLIN, Corresponding Editor.

PLYMOUTH, IND. MAY 6, 1896.

WILL our correspondent please take notice that as yet we have no Greek type, and excuse the leaving out of the same in their articles. We hope soon to have some.

WE have printed the letter to Dr. Talmage and J. A. Conant written by Bro. and Sister Howard and printed in issue of April 22, in tract form, and can supply them at two cents each, or 15 cents a dozen.

WE have been disappointed in not receiving our regular copy from Bro. Joblin this week. For some reason it has missed getting here. Hope to have it for next week's issue.—Later just as we are ready for the press Brother Joblin's copy came.

WE see that Ingersoll has been challenged to a joint debate on his Bible lectures before three judges and two tirekeepers for points, the victor to receive 65 per cent of net receipts after paying expenses. The challenger is Mr. Thomas Kenyon, of Providence, R. I.

As true as anything in the book is Prov. xxii. 6, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Can it be said that a child is faithfully dealt with who is trained five or six years more to fit him to live three-score years and ten, than he is to live always?

A remarkable action on the subject of usury has been taken by the trustees of a Jewish synagogue at Glasgow, Scotland. A member of the synagogue was proved by evidence in a lawsuit to have charged extortional interest. The trustees notified him that in consequence of his conduct they would decline to rent him a pew in the building, after the term for which he paid had expired.

INGERSOLL has paid another visit to Cleveland, and delivered his "latest and greatest" lecture, "Why I am an agnostic," which we reviewed shortly after, before a good audience, and we had the satisfaction to learn that one gentleman present who shook and the churches with disgust, was convinced, after all, that God had stooped down to us with a revelation of his purpose in regard to man and earth. He attended the preaching service again the following Sunday, bringing another gentleman with him. Ingersoll went from Cleveland to Chicago where he spoke at one of the city churches being escorted to the pulpit by the pastor. Then the tenth chapter of Luke was read, "Nearer my God to thee," and "America" were sung, then the Pastor asked for a special blessing on their guest.—who is endeavoring to make the world better. He said this was no time to disagree with the beliefs of man. No matter whether a man believes in God or not; if he expounded the truth then the truth was there; and God was there. The subject of discussion was arbitration, treatment of criminals, homes on the prairies, the tenement system, divorce, capital and labor. On concluding the applause was loud and long, and then all sang, "Blest be the sacred tie that binds," and the pronouncing of the benediction closed the meeting. What next?

Dear Restitution:

I wish to take a small part in the wonderful class meeting that has been going on so long, which so many have been taking part in. I find the names of so many that I formed the acquaintance of a long time ago, amongst them the name of Sister E. Plummer of Oregon (I suppose she still lives there), consort of Philomen Plummer, known as Uncle Phil, one of the grandest and best men I ever knew, of whom I first learned the truth, who now sleeps in Jesus. May God's blessing rest upon him and preserve him blameless until the appearing of the Life-Giver. There was I. P. Bitner whose testimony has the right ring. He spoke my sentiments. O there are too many to name all speaking of that grand and glorious day, the coming of the Lord of life and glory, all desiring the day to come, and I with the rest. Oh, what a glorious and grand reunion will take place at that time, when Jesus who is the Captain of our salvation shall appear and wake up the sleeping saints, draw them from their dusty beds, when they can say, O grave where is thy victory; and the living righteous can say, O death where is thy sting; and they both can shout thanks be to God who has given us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord. The outlook now seems to point to the near approach of the Life-Giver. Brethren, wont it be nice when the Lord shall reign over all the earth. In that day there shall be one Lord and his name one, when righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Glorious time, may it soon come. May God's blessing rest on the entire family of God, is my prayer. Your brother in the blessed hope.

LOTT CLOVER.

Dear Restitution:

Find enclosed $1.50 for THE RESTITUTION. I thought I would have my name enrolled on your list once more among the other brothers and sisters. It has been some time since I have taken that good paper. Brother Simpson gave me one and I had it read to me, and it made my very soul rejoice to hear from the good Christian work that is going on. There is no one of the faith living close to me but me and my husband as we have no preacher now, but thanks be to God for he has said where there are two or three meeting in his name he would be in their midst. Bro. Brant has been preaching for us here a while back and we have been having some pretty good meetings, but it seems as though when the Word of God is preached in the church they want to close the door on the men that preach the gospel. Oh brothers and sisters, let us not let that scatter our faith. Thanks be to the King, the soon coming King that my faith is built firm. Brothers and sisters, let us be in our faith as firm and solid as the man that built his house on the solid rock when the winds blew and the rain fell, but the house fell not; Christ also promised us that whosoever believeth in him should have eternal life, let us all try to be in the number that have got such a glorious promise. Let us throw off malice, envy and strife and fill our hearts with pure love for Christ says, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give unto every man according as his works may be." So let us all be careful for Christ says: "For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good and sinneth not." Eccl. vii. 20. But I can speak for one that I am trying to live so that I will not be ashamed when Christ comes or calls for me, although I have my losses and crosses. Though if we be not cross-bearers we will not be crown-wearers; my children in number are six, four girls and two boys, they have none of them tasted the love of Christ. But I hope, trust and pray that they will turn and seek salvation before it is forever too late. For the Lord says the day will come when no man can work. Now brothers and sisters, we should watch ourselves very closely and walk in the path of righteousness.

"Today, if you will hear his voice,
Now is the time, make your choice:
Say will you to the Kingdom go?
Say will you have this Christ, or no?"

I want all of the brothers and sisters of the Church of God to pray for me when it goes well with you, that is my prayer.

Your Sister in the Abrahamic faith.
MRS. R. C. ELLIOT.

Editor Restitution:

As the time has arrived for renewing subscription to our excellent paper, sent to our beloved Father W. M. Buzzell, who is now asleep in Jesus, dying July 28, 1865. We renew for 1896. Our father took THE RESTITUTIONS from the very first and many a joyful hour he studied the various phases of discussions, by our brethren concerning the tidings of the coming and kingdom of his Anointed Messiah, the excellent type of the life everlasting. Father was not a hobbyist, nor did he gender to liberalism, that is, that all these phases were sanctified by the truth, but were means to arrive at the truth of the sanctified One.

He always believed in liberal discussion, but in the Spirit of the crucified One. Ours is an age of determination. Right we must maintain, and truth we must gird ourselves with, if we ever arrive to the status of manhood Jesus exhorted us to, if we intend to hear the image of his heavenly life.

If we cannot have discussion, fear lest we retrograde, once is, or may be a life of stubbornness, what is food and help to one, may be a stone to another. God desires us to be all to all, if savored with truth.

May our Motto be, the text of our beloved father's demise, as found in Titus ii. 13. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ, all else that may be written by our brethren, we can use to clear the mists from our beclouded vision, that we may see the waymarks God has placed in his mine of riches, the sacred Volume, that "he that readeth may run and not weary, and walk and not faint," which ultimately would be the case if the jewels of Divine Writ, were not strewn along our path, as stars in our diadem we would become as Sodom, and fall an easy prey for Babylon. Yours in hope of the truth.

R. M. and E. M. REYNOLDS.

Dear Restitution:

We cannot do without the paper, for it is all the preaching we have here. There are six of the one faith out here. I have never heard the gospel preached since our dear Bro. S. T. Hook preached for us. If any of the brethren come out this way please call on us, they can get off at Cardond Station, Ind. I would love to hear the gospel preached once more as Bro. Hook preached it. He is the one that showed us the error of mistaken doctrine. May God bless him is my prayer. I will say to the dear brothers and sisters that we are sound in the faith, looking for Jesus to come and change our vile bodies that we may be fashioned like his own glorious body. Pray for us that we may not prove unfaithful. Dear brothers, it is a good thing to be established in the faith and not carried about with every wind of doctrine. I want Bro. Wilson to explain Revelations xvii. And I want to see who is the daughter and what is the mark of the beast and the number of his name. This request is for the benefit of our opponents.

We remain your Brother in Christ.
J. M. COPELAND.

Grumble Tone.

There was a boy named Grumble Tone, who ran away to sea.
"I'm sick of things on land," he said, "as sick as I can be!"
A life upon the bounding wave will suit a lad like me!"

The seething ocean billows failed to stimulate his mirth.
For he did not like the vessel, nor the dizzy, rolling berth,
And he thought the sea was almost as unpleasant as the earth.

He wandered into foreign lands, he saw such wondrous sight,
But nothing that he heard or saw seemed just exactly right;
And so he journeyed on and on, still seeking for delight.

He talked with kings and ladies fair; he dined in courts, they say,
But always found the people dull, and longed to get away
To search for that mysterious land where he should like to stay.

He wandered over all the world, his hair grew white as snow;
He reached that final bourne at last where all of us must go,
But never found the land he sought. The reason would you know?

The reason was that, north or south, wherever his steps were bent,
On land or sea, in court or hall, he found but discontent;
For he took his disposition with him everywhere he went.

The Story of Israel Beyond the Sea. No. 49.

THE SOLOTHN ANNUAL EX. XXII. 20-33.

We have learned a great deal about angels, but there is much more to learn, and I want you to keep on with the lesson. I want you to think how God cares for you by sending his dear angels to watch over and guard you. Psa. xxxiv. 7. And that by and by, if you are good and obedient to Jesus, you will be gathered by those blessed beings and made equal to them. Matt. xxiv. 31; Luke xx. 36.

But now, we must go back to our chapter. Isaiah, calls the angel that led the children of Israel into Canaan, "The Angel of God's Presence," do you understand what that means? I think I can explain it so you can. If your teacher should leave the school-room for a time and should appoint some one else to hear the classes, while she was absent, would you not have to obey the appointed teacher, just the same as if your own teacher was present? Would you not have to learn your lessons just the same, and behave just as carefully? Certainly you would. Your teacher would be present in the one who was acting for her, and you would be graded in the report for the term, for that day, the same as for other days.

Just so it was, that God, was present to the Israelites. They had to be very careful to obey the Angel, for when he spoke, it was the same as if God were speaking. Whatever he said, God, had told him to say. If they provoked him, by acting naughty, it would be provoking God. The Angel would not forgive them, if they sinned. God had given him no right to do this. But if they obeyed his voice, then would the kind, heavenly Father, "Be an enemy to their enemies, and an adversary to their adversaries." He would bless their bread and their water and take sickness away from the midst of them. They would have plenty of cattle and sheep, and would destroy all the wicked people to whom they should come. But they must make no covenant with these people, nor with their gods. They must not bow down to them nor serve them, nor do after their works, but must overthrow them and break down their image.

We remember how dreadfully wicked idol worshipers are. We must never forget it.

We must not be deceived into thinking, that they may after all, be good, —that perhaps, even they may be Christians. We can feel sorry for them, and can try to help them to see the truth, but we must not believe their doctrines. We must be just as careful as the Israelites were commanded to be, lest we be led into doing the same wicked things that idolators do.

God did not want the Hivite, the Canaanite and the Hittite, to dwell in Canaan, lest they should make his people sin against him.

But there is something curious in our lesson. It is about hornets. Do you suppose hornets could drive the inhabitants of a land out of their country? I should not wonder. Mr. Elnathan Rockwell, an early settler of McLean Co., Illinois, tells us about some terrible yellow-jackets that were nearly as big as bumble-bees. They made their nests in the prairie-grasses. Their stingers were half as long as their bodies. They stung cattle to death. But hogs did not care for them. Their hides were too thick to be hurt by the sting. The men scattered corn around the nests, the yellow-jackets came out to drive away the hogs that were eating the corn, but the prairie-rooters, rooted up the nests, and then went and rolled in a puddle and drowned the ugly insects.

There was also a green-headed fly that lived in the prairie-grass, that would gnaw horses and oxen to death if driven in the hay time, or even by moon-light. God could have made these yellow-jackets and flies so numerous, that no one could have lived in that part of Illinoise. What do you think about it?

AUNTIE WISE.

"Will You Laugh to Me Again, Mother?"

It was little three-year-old Maisel who asked this question one morning in the early spring. She had been bringing me the first spring flowers, and oh, how 'buful' she thought those bright yellow dandelions were! I had enjoyed them, too, and had responded to her enthusiasm with words of appreciation and thanks; but it was the smile which seemed to delight the little darling most, and as she started out to hunt for more flowers, she came back to ask in her own earnest, winsome way, 'Will you laugh to me again, mother?'

It was a simple question, or rather request, but it almost startled me, and started a new train of thought.

Was that dear little heart hungry for more brightness, and thus seeking for it as the vine sends forth its tiny branches in search of the sunshine?

While careful, and perhaps too often troubled, about household duties, striving to have everything as comfortable as possible for the dear husband and little ones, had I been failing to give them the smiles and sunshine which their hearts craved, and which I could so gladly and easily give them?

When I was quite young, I remember being touched by hearing a little child say, 'Mamma, they are the laughingest folks at Uncle P——'s I ever saw. I wish we had more laughin' at our house.' Ah! perhaps our little ones often wish for 'more laughin' at our house,' though they do not say so. Surely we should strive in every way to gladden their young lives, and be careful that by our care-worn or frowning faces we do not repel their natural light-heartedness.

Phillips Brooks once said that 'the truest humor is the bloom of the highest life,' and while we should never encourage silly simpering and giggling, should we not seek to cultivate in ourselves and in our children that 'true humor' which, like the sunshine, always carries with it gladness and bloom?

Books on Christian evidences are read by the few, but "living epistles are known and read of all men." A gospel life is an ever-recurring incarnation of Christ.

Selected.

A Rich Promise.

"He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment. I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels."

"He that overcometh." Aye, 'tis to him the promise was made so full of rich, precious meaning; 'tis he who shall wear a robe of spotless purity—who shall be acknowledged by the blessed Savior.

What is it to overcome? Ah! how much, only they can answer who have been buffeted by temptation and trial—who have met with adversity in many forms, and who, through all, have maintained a hopeful, patient trust in the goodness and wisdom of our heavenly Father!

If poverty walks like a grim phantom by our side, while we struggle bravely, earnestly, though without avail, to place even a slight distance between ourselves and the dark shadow, how our hearts almost rise up in rebellion that Providence has placed us in such circumstances, while our neighbor, who leads a thankless life, receives all the richest worldly gifts which mankind ever enjoyed, ignoring the source from which they come to him, and we feel as if we ought to murmur—as if human endurance could not hold out against such proofs—that "the good things of earth are unequally divided; if, in such a trying position, we are enabled to overcome—to look up with child-like faith and trust, and say, "Thy will be done." What a conquest! what a victory! what a reward is in store for us, as overcomers.

If we have a few idols treasured in the innermost recesses of our hearts, sheltered, as we fancy, from the very breath of harm; if, one by one, we are compelled to take them from their sacred niches—to snap asunder the cords of love which hold them, and lay them passively in the hand of the Destroyer, to watch his ruthless movements as he crushes to atoms our cherished treasures, while our bleeding hearts yearn vainly for their restoration; if we can accept the lesson, the pain, the chastisement, and its sure alleviation; if we can say: "The Lord reigneth, let the earth rejoice," then are we overcomers—then may we hope for the promised reward, which the continuation of such trust, confidence, and obedience is sure to bring to us.

Oh! how many thousand ways there are in which we may overcome. We know that our hearts are selfish, that our hearts are blinded. How important it is that we should continually look above for light, for wisdom, and for strength, that at last we may be received by the Great Father, as overcomers, and may receive the promised, precious reward.—E. S. G.

The End Draws Near.

Everything is getting ripe. The progress of our age is so swift as to almost dazzle our eyes and paralyze our brains. Science is leaping forward with gigantic strides, every week brings some new discovery that almost takes away our breath, and every new discovery is but a stepping-stone to clearer light and wider knowledge of nature's mysteries. Christ is getting the forces and agencies ready for his kingdom and his reign. Men are building more wisely than they know. All the forces of civilization today are but great providential trains which God is laying for some glorious hour when he will touch the train and the powers of evil will collapse and the kingdom of righteousness shall come.

God truly is shortening the days. Everything is moving with accelerated ratio. Wickedness is throwing its dark shadows with a deeper density through the very intensity of the light that is shining from above. Are we optimists or pessimists? We are both. The world was never so bad, the world was never so good as it is today. The evil is growing worse, the good is growing better. The light and shade are both deepening. The wheat is ripening for the sickle, the vintage is ripening for the judgment, the world is growing old, and the end is drawing near. Come, Lord Jesus, come swiftly.

The Special Evangelist Fund.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

Kind Words.

As the breath of the dew to the tender plant, they gently fall upon the drooping heart, refreshing its withered tendrils, and sooth its burning woes. Bright vases they are, in life's great desert. Who can estimate the pangs they have alleviated, or the good works that they have accomplished?

Long after they are uttered do they reverberate in the soul's inner chamber, and sing low, sweet, liquid strains, that quell all the raging storms that may have before existed. And oh! when the heart is sad, and like a broken harp the sweetest chords of pleasure cease to vibrate, who can tell the power of one kind word? One little word of tenderness, gushing in upon the soul, will sweep the long neglected chords, and awaken once more the most pleasant strains.

When borne down with the trials and troubles of life, we are ready to sink fainting by the way, how like the cheering rays of sunshine, do kind words come. They disperse the clouds, dispel the gloom, and drive sorrow far away.

Kind words are like jewels in the heart, never to be forgotten, but, perhaps, to cheer, by their memory, a long and life. While words of cruelty are like darts in the bosom, wounding and leaving scars, that will be borne to the grave by the victim.

Why is it, then, that we do not always seek, by kind words, to scatter sunbeams along the pathway of others?

Is There Any Mother There?

A little girl once followed the workmen from her father's grounds, when they went home to their dinner, because she was very fond of a kind old man who was one of them. When he looked from his door, he saw her sitting on a log, waiting for him, and invited her to go into the cottage. She looked in, saw the strange faces around the table, and hesitated. When he urged her, she raised her sweet little face and inquired:

"Is there any mother here?"

"Yes my dear, there is a mother in here," he answered.

"Oh! then I'll go in; for I'm not afraid if there's a mother there!"

Her child's experience had told her she could place confidence in a mother's sympathy. A home may be called small and mean, but if is the shrine of a mother's love, it is a happier place than a palace would be without this blessed presence.

Pearls in Christ's Crown.

Some writer thus consoles Christian sufferers: "Oh! the wisdom, goodness, and mercy of God! He can take the pains and agonies of the sick one, and work them all into jewels which will sparkle in the crown of Christ forever! All our sorrows and suffering, and our very tears, will thus become a part of his own glorious crown. We wonder often that the good, the meek, are made to suffer so long and fearfully; but when we look upon the jewels which he thus makes up, we shall not cease to wonder. Not one pang or sorrow could be spared, and have the jewels in his crown that they are. O sufferer on the bed of pain! our Lord makes pearls for the crown of earthly monarchs; and, in the same way, he is fitting thee to be a crown of glory in his own diadem. Patiently, patiently suffer his will, and thou wilt hereafter see that it was all to make thee more glorious in the eternal kingdom."

He Loves to be Trusted.

It is often given as a wonderful proof of confidence in a friend, that once when the great Grecian emperor, Alexander, was ill, it was told him in a letter that his physician intended to give him poison under the form of medicine. The emperor put the note under his pillow. The physician came, poured out the potion, and gave it to him. He looked his friend full in the face, drank the contents of the goblet, then handed him the letter. It was a beautiful trust.

Like confidence are we to have in the will of Christ. We are never to doubt his love or his wisdom. Whatever he gives us we are to accept with childlike trust, though it be something that we think may even slay us. There is no other full proof of unquestioning friendship.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Infinite toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist, but by ascending a little you may often look over it altogether. So it is with moral improvements; we wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit, or with a slanderous report, which would have no hold upon us if we ascend into a higher moral atmosphere.

The Three Weddings.

The figure of the marriage relation is made use of in the Scriptures to illustrate the relation between God and his people in three different instances. The first instance is referred to in Ezek. xv. 8, where God represents that he spread his skirt over Jerusalem (the ancient form of marriage among the Jews) "And I spread my skirt over thee.. ....Yea I swear unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God and thou becamest mine."

The covenant here mentioned, which was made with Israel at the base of Sinai, was broken by Israel, though God was an husband unto them, (Jer. xxxi. 32,) and in turn the Lord has judged them as women that break wedlock are judged. Ezek. xvi. 38. The object of this union was to subjugate the nations of earth by placing Israel over them. Exod. xix. 6, as the holy nation, which, being like God and in unison with him, should propagate their species, by enforcing holiness among the nations, thus filling all the earth with God's glory. Num. xiv. 21.

This object would have been accomplished under the direction of Jesus, had they accepted him as their head, but since they broke the covenant by rejecting him, the second instance is inaugurated by his "skirt" being spread over the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius, 10th of Acts, not as a nation, however, but the believers among them as well as among the Jews who constitute the holy nation. I Pet. ii. 9, and are made one with Christ, and are reckoned as the bride of Christ; the object of this union being as before to propagate their species and thus complete the requisite number to make up the body of Christ, but while sustaining the relation of bride and Christ, and being joint-heirs with Christ, they are reckoned as servants and bidden as servant-guests to the marriage of the Lamb. Rev. xix. 7-9. See also Matt. xxii. 1-10. They go as the ten virgins to meet the Bridegroom. Matt. xxv. 1, but are taught to take the lowest room, (which is that of servants) that they may be promoted to a higher position at the coming of Christ. Luke xiv. 8-10, and having rightly interpreted the signs by which the Master has made known the things for his servants to do Rev. i. 1. they are thus furnished with oil in their vessels to keep their lights burning till the Bridegroom comes, and like two olive branches with two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves they become instrumental in removing the iniquity of that land in one day. Zech. iii. 9 and the bride having made herself ready, the third and last marriage takes place, the new covenant is completed with the house of Israel and the house of Judah, and the Lord will be their God and they shall be his people Jer. xxxi. 31-34, thus will he remember his covenant with them in the days of their youth, (Ezek. xvi. 60) but the saints, now reckoned as the bride of Christ, are then made immortal and become actual members of the corporate body of Christ and together with their Head, Jesus, enter upon their inheritance. Then will be fulfilled the prophecy of Isa. lxii. 4-5, "Thou shalt no more be termed forsaken, neither shall thy land may more be termed desolate, but thou shalt be called Heph Ye Bah and thy land Beulah for the Lord delighteth in thee and thy land shall be married, for as a young man marrieth a virgin so shall thy sons marry thee."

TO RECAPITULATE.

The covenant made with Israel (Jerusalem) at the base of Sinai, was on the condition that they keep his (God's) commandments, which would make a holy nation of them, thus furnishing the requisite number to officer the kingdom, as members of the coporate body of Christ. This condition they violated by rejecting the Savior, however, some individuals did receive him, become his disciples, and serve him. These were just of the right stamp for officers in the kingdom, but the number was incomplete, hence his union with them in the capacity of husband, "always even unto the end of the world." Matt. xxviii. 20. While they were making disciples to fill out the number, for until the number is complete nothing can be done in the way of subjugating the nations, and the nationality of Israel must remain suspended, but when the number is complete, Jesus will return and build up the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, (Acts xv.) and make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah in their national capacity, but this time it is Jesus and the saints in their corporate capacity that are reckoned as the bridegroom, the house of sons enter into the marriage relation with the house of servants (Israel according to the flesh) and the kingdom of God is established. This will be the "marriage of the Lamb," when the bride has made herself ready, and the work of propagation will proceed according to the original purpose of God, and continue till the nations are all made holy and "the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." Isa. xi. 1. Hab. ii. 14. Remembering that the old covenant, "the bride" was Jerusalem Ezek. xvi. 1, which of course embodies both the children of Israel and their land, and according to the prophet Isa. lxii. 4, 5, the land, (including also the people and the city) is to be the bride of the sons of "Zion," (Jerusalem). Also when the angel showed John the bride the Lamb's wife, he saw the new Jerusalem, the capital city of the land of Israel is the age to come and to all eternity, which will be the subject of another article if acceptable to the editor.

"The Glory."—No. 1.

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, Rightly dividing the Word of Truth." 2 Tim. ii. 15.

The glory that the Bible speaks of, or in other words, the glory of God as revealed unto us, or brought down to us, as stated in the Bible, is a grand and most glorious theme to contemplate, and I long to enjoy, and to share, and shine in its radiant splendor, as it shall be given to those tried and worthy ones in that bright world to come. Hence we do desire as our text affirms, to rightly divide the Word of Truth upon this subject, so that we may prove a true, and efficient workman, that needeth not to be ashamed, and thus stand approved of God. But in order to do this successfully, we find that our duty is to study, and that to make the Scriptures harmonize upon every Bible subject, which they will do when rightly understood. Webster says glory coincides with clear, and bright, and the primary sense seems to be to open, to expand, and to enlarge, and we may add that anything that is brought clear, and plain, and bright to our understanding, as well as to our eyes is a glory. We also say then on the outset, that there are degrees in glory, and besides there are also different kinds of glory of things in this life, one kind of dress, and keeping in the height of fashion. Another kind is of wearing of gold, and having it so very costly, or having it in shape to appear so very bright in the wearing. And still another kind in silver, and having the degrees in the amount, or in the appearance. And yet another kind in brass, and the glory to extend in the amount or in the appearance, or in both as you like best. And also another kind. The many kinds of flowers that bloom so prettily which our Savior said that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. There is another glory to that, the Bible speaks of that also belongs to this life, found in Rom. v. 3, which says, But we glory in tribulation also, here the word "also" presents thought to our mind that this glorying is in addition to something else that has been previously studied and by examining the previous chapter, we find that the apostle Paul was writing to the Roman brethren about the promise made to Abraham, and of Abraham's faith, or belief in the same, and of his works of righteousness to obtain the things promised, that through Abraham and his seed. That they should be the heirs of the world was truly inspiring, and elevating not only this, but that he should be the Father of many nations and through him and his seed, should all the nations of the earth be blessed. And that Jesus is the Anointed one. The Jewish Messiah, is the seed and heir here spoken of, and that all the saints are joint-heirs with him to this same promise, through whom this great work is to be done. Now then the Apostle Paul in commenting upon this in the commencement of the 5th chapter, says, Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus, the Anointed Messiah, by whom also we have access by faith into this grace (or favor) wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. Then comes in the saying, and not only so, but we glory in tribulation also, so that it is an evident fact that in order to be alive in the cause of truth, we must glory in tribulation also. Knowing these things to be facts, it gives us strength, knowledge and wisdom to know in what spirit we are to receive all our trials and troubles and tribulations, that we may receive therein a spirit of glory rather than any other way. And by doing so, we shall be able to grasp them more with a free will to endure them than to regret them, and be under fear, and also be like the apostles that when they departed from the presence of the council rejoicing that they were accounted worthy to suffer shame for his name. Acts v. 41. Again there is quite another glory which the apostles had which they received direct from the throne of God on the day of Pentecost and in the name of Jesus which was the holy spirit, or wisdom, or power to enable them to do miracles to confirm the Word, Mark xvi. 20. What a power, and what a glory and honor they had to make a man every whit whole just by saying over a few words and besides how easy it was to do such cures. Besides every body was made every whit whole of whatever kind of disease he had. Acts v. 15, 16. What a glory it was to do any and all kinds of cures just as fast as they would come to them. And besides doing such wonderful cures they were at the same time confirming the word spoken. What a glory?

Prophecy.

Editor Restitution:

As there has been considerable said of late on the revelation that God has given us by the Prophet Ezekiel, concerning the Gog—power of the last days, I would like with your permission to add a few words and give my understanding of this great power.

In the first place the prophet is to prophesy against Gog, the chief prince of Meshech, Tubal, Persia, Ethiopia, Libia, Gomer and Togarmah. We have only to turn to Genesis 10th chapter to find out who Gomer, Magog, Tubal, Meshech, Togarmah and Tarshish are. We are told by this people the descendants of Noah through the line of Japhet that the Isles of the Gentiles were divided or settled.

There should not be any misunderstanding as to this power and its chief prince, the (Czar of Russia), who is prince, king, lord, ruler, dictator and pope or head of the Greek church, hence the title God has given him for over 2500 years ago. Ezek. xxxviii. 7. God warns him to be prepared and prepare himself and all his bands and many people with thee. And that after many days thou shalt be visited in the latter years, and are to come up against my people Israel. That have returned and are dwelling safely without fenced or walled cities or any defence. This Gog power under the leadership of its chief prince the Czar leads the powers mentioned, but declare Sheba the merchants of Tarshis with all the young lions, England and her entire forces, enquires of Gog if he has come up to take a spoil? It is evident that England is the power that asks this question, for she is interested, from the fact that if Russia gets control of the Holy Land, she has the key that unlocks the way to India. I understand this is the day when God gathers all nations against Jerusalem to battle. Zech. xiv. When God will go forth and fight against these nations as when he fought in the day of battle. Zech. xiv. 3. God meets this mighty force that comes against his people Israel, and rains upon them an overflowing rain of great hailstones, fire and brimstone.

I understand this is the day of Jacob's trouble. Jer. xxx. 7. But God will save him (Jacob) out of it, with an overthrow of Jacob's enemies and from that day and forward, Israel will know that the Lord is their God. Zek. xxxix. 21.

After this God will send many fishers and fish for them, and many hunters and hunt for them. Jer. xvi. 10. This will be the day that Israel will not say the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, but the Lord liveth that brought up the children out of the land of the North, and from all the lands whither I have driven them. Jer. xvi. 14, 15.

It is evident that God has not as yet sent out his fishers and hunters, and there is no Scripture to show that he will fish and hunt for them until after their enemies are destroyed. I understand that Gog is overthrown and buried, or the Satan or enemy of God, (Rev. xx.) is bound for a thousand years, or cast in the bottomless pit or death. When the thousand years are expired this Satan, Devil, Serpent or Dragon, Power or Enemy of God will be resurrected; and as this power went down trying to take the city of Jerusalem it comes up with the same devilish disposition that he goes down with and again make the second and last attempt to take the city. Here they meet with the last and final destruction, ending in the second death. And my understanding of the Scripture or prophecies on the subject is the Gog that goes down at the coming of Jesus, is the same Gog that comes up at the end of the thousand years. The great harlot having sat for centuries upon the scarlet beast. The beast of the sea in another phase, at least goeth into perdition for ever. Amen. Then will the nations clap their hands and shout for joy unto God with the voice of triumph.

Yours earnestly believing and searching for the truth.

D. M. HOOLER.

Is There a God? John 1. 2, 3.

Take a pencil and write down all the good gifts we have received from an unseen hand.

First, count all the bread grains. Wouldn't one kind do as well? All kinds of meat would't one kind have done? All kind of fruits. Many an earthly parent would have said "one kind of fruit is sufficient no need of so much variety." Next come the clothing material, from the cotton ball, up to the silk worm.

The wool off the humble sheep's back to the costliest furs.

All kinds of birds, some for use, and some for beauty, and some to make home pleasant by their happy songs. And not least of all our gifts are our ornamental trees. And countless millions of beautiful flowers, and precious stones, and precious metals, created for our pleasure. Just think how much we have left out, and yet there are men who will say there is no God.

We can go on all our life and not be half done counting all the blessings, all the gifts given for use and for pleasure by a kind and indulgent Father. How could we accept all these good things and then say "there is no God."

If there is no God what governs the universe? If a farmer sows wheat why not expect a crop of corn or barley to come up instead of the grain sowed? No, no! we always know when planting that every seed will bring its own kind, and will as long as God rules the ages.

Our Heavenly Father gave all these gifts to man and yet there are those who accept them with proud disregard of the true source. They think if they have good crops or are fortunate in what they undertake it is all a result of their good management and industry. Do they ever stop for a moment to think if he willed it so he could withhold the rain and blast the crops and they could do nothing?

Read his fate, "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay-tree. Yet he passed away, and lo, he was not: yea I sought him, but he could not be found." Psa. xxxvii. 35, 36

What else has God offered us as a free gift? See Rom vi. 23, "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." What else has he promised to those who love and obey him? See James ii. 5; Rev. v. 9, 10; ii. 7, 17, 25; I Peter v. 4. Get your Bible and read these texts, don't just take my word for it.

To me it would be horrible to think that there is no God.

Report.

Editor Restitution:

Again I crave space in your column to report a meeting we had here five miles north of Wheatland, Mo. Brethren Blowers of Halfway, and Frank Fowler, of Pittsburg this county, came Saturday before the fifth Sunday in March, and preached to the people three discourses. Brother Fowler preached Saturday night on "What is man?" Demonstrating the fact that man is clay, dust, and that God is man's Creator. The subject was well handled. Brother Blowers followed, clinching the argument in his usual logical and masterly manner. Although our audience was small on account of measels in the neighborhood yet the best of attention was given to the message. Sunday at eleven, Brother Blowers discoursed on "The things concerning the kingdom of God, and name of Christ," proving that the kingdom of God is not of this world, not from this time, that it is not hard for a rich man to get into a popular church, but it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. That any one must be born again to enter the kingdom, which flesh and blood can not inherit.

Sunday night Brother Blowers preached on the "State of man in death," called sometimes the intermediate state of man, showing clearly by the Scriptures of truth that man in death is totally unconscious till the resurrection brings him back to life. We were sorry to close the meetings but owing to sickness in the community it was closed for a time. Brother Fowler has promised to come and preach for us occasionally. Brother Blowers will come some time next summer and hold a week's meeting for us.

Announcement.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at Moorlee school house in Furnas County, commencing Friday, May 29th and holding over Sunday.

We would be glad to have as many of the brothers and sisters at this meeting as can possibly come. We could encourage one another by our presence, and help to make the meeting a pleasant and profitable one. Come in the spirit of the Master and we feel sure that you will be repaid for so doing. Each congregation is requested to send in a report, and also their vote as to where they wish the next Annual Conference to be held.

Yours in love of the truth.

REXA M. GORDON, Sec.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of the Adelphonic Faith in Indiana, will be held at the Antioch Meeting-house, five miles South of Plymouth, commencing on Friday June 12, 1896, at 2 P. M. and continuing over the following Sunday. Believing as we do that the gospel dispensation is very near to its close, and the day is far spent, let us be up and doing lest the night cometh when no man can work and we be overtaken as a thief in the night.

To all of like precious faith, we say come. Come and enjoy another good meeting, renew your strength and energy in the cause and encourage others.

J. F. WAGONER, Pres.
A. C. ROBERTS, Sec.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God, in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Brady, Kalamazoo Co., Michigan, commencing Thursday evening June 4th, 1896, and continue over the following Sunday.

Friends coming from the North, reach Vicksburg via the G. R. and I. R. R., which leaves Grand Rapids at 2: p. m. and will be met Thursday and Friday. Those coming from Hastings will take the G. R. and I. at Kalamazoo. All friends coming from the north will be met at Vicksburg. Those coming from the south will be met at Meadon, on Thursday and Friday. The train reaches Meadon about 11 A. M. There will be no special teams to meet friends on Saturday for the brethren all wish to have some good of the meeting themselves and it is hoped all who wish to attend will make an effort to reach there by Thursday or Friday. Elder L. C. Chase of Adrian, Michigan, has promised to be with us, also Elder B. W. Woodward of Dutton Michigan. It is not often we have an opportunity of meeting together from different points of the State, to hear and to study God's Word. So come all that can and help to make this our Annual Conference as interesting as possible. The brethren and sisters of Brady send a most cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. All will be heartily welcomed.

EMMA JACKMAN, Sec.

Perspiration contains at least one per cent. of solid matter compounded of substances noxious to life. The quantity perspired daily by an average-sized adult ranges from 25 to 35 ounces. If exercise be neglected, the poisonous matter can only be partly carried away from the blood by the insensible perspiration, through the medium of the lungs, liver, kidneys, and bowels, which it is hardly necessary to observe, imposes additional labor upon these organs, and eventually occasions their disease.

Here is a splendid opportunity of visiting the west. The Nickel Plate Road has authorized low excursion rates to Ottawa, Kansas, on May 17th, 21st, and 22nd for the Annual Convention of the Dunkard's, which convenes at Ottawa on May 20th. Tickets may be extended thirty days from the date of issue by depositing them with the joint agent at Ottawa. The uniform courtesy of employes, the best of roadbeds, and the splendid modern equipments of this Line has made it the Popular Low Rate Line for all points west.—May 21.

All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord; and shall glorify thy name. For thou art great and dost wondrous things.

Special rates have been authorized via the Nickel Plate Road to Ottawa, Kan., on May 17th, 21st, and 22nd for the Annual Dunkard's Convention. Tickets may be extended thirty days by depositing them with the joint agent. Any agent of this Popular Low Rate Line will be pleased to furnish information.—May 21.

Hesaias. (Isa' C. V.) Chap. 24.

1. Lo the Lord is bringing to naught the inhabited, and he will desolate it and uncover the face of it and scatter those who inhabit it.

2. And the laity will be as the priest and the servant, as the lord and the female-courtier as the lady; the one who buyeth as the one that selleth, the one who borroweth as the one who lendeth, and one who oweth, as the one whom he oweth.

3. The land will be corrupted with corruption and the land will be plundered with plundering. For the mouth of the Lord hath said it.

4. The land hath sorrowed, the inhabited hath become corrupt, the uplifted ones of the land have sorrowed:

5. And she (the land) hath transgressed because of those who inhabit her, because they have evaded the law and changed the statutes, an age-lasting covenant.

6. Therefore a curse will devour the land, because those who inhabit it have sinned. Therefore those who dwell in the land will be beggars, and few men will have been left.

7. Wine will sorrow, the vine will sorrow, all the things that rejoice the soul will sigh.

8. The rejoicing of the tympana hath ceased the voice of the cithern hath ceased.

9. They have been put to shame; they drank not wine; bitter hath become the strong drink to those who drink it.

10. Every city hath become desolate; it will close the house so that it shall not be entered.

11. There will be an ololu for the wine everywhere; all the rejoicing of the land hath ceased; all the rejoicing of the land hath passed away.

12. And cities will have been left desolate, and houses will perish forsaken.

13. All these things will be in the land in the midst of the nations: in the way one will glean an olive-orchard, even so will they glean them; and if the vintage shall cease;

14. They will call for help, and those who have been left upon the land will have rejoiced together with the glory of the Lord: The water of the sea will have been disturbed.

15. Therefore will the glory of the Lord be in the islands of the sea: the name of the Lord will be removed.

16. O Lord God of Israel, from the four wings of the earth have we heard it—hope for the truly-reverent: and they will say woe unto those who set aside. Ye who set aside the law.

17. Fear and a pit and snare are there for you who dwell on the earth:

18. And it will be that the one who escapeth the fear will fall into the pit: and the one who getteth out of the pit will be taken by the snare; because windows from out of the heavens have been opened, and the foundations of the earth will have been shaken.

19. They will have been disturbed and the earth will have been stricken with loss of way.

20. It hath inclined out like a drunken man and one who staggereth with drunkenness, and the earth will have been shaken like a watchman's hut in a vineyard; for the transgression hath become strong upon it, and it will fall and not be able to arise.

21. And God will bring his hand upon the cosmos of the heavens, and upon the kings of the earth:

22. And they will gather together an assemblage thereof into a prison-house and they will shut them up in a walled-place; at the end of many generations will be their visitation.

23. And the brick will have disintegrated and the wall fall because the Lord will reign as King from out Sinon and from out Hierousalem, and will have been glorified in the sight of the elders.

Chapter 25.

1. O Lord God, I shall glorify thee, I shall hymn thy name, because thou hast caused wondrous things, ancient truthful counsel. May it have come to pass.

2. Because thou hast made cities into a mound of earth, walled cities so that their foundations shall not fall; a city of the irreverent shall not have been built forever (for the animate-age).

3. Therefore the beggar-laity will commend thee (bless) and cities of unjust men will commend thee.

4. For thou hast become unto every lowly city a responsive-helper, and unto the people discouraged because of need of a shelter; From wicked men wilt thou deliver them; a shelter will thou be for those who thirst and spirit for men who are being wronged:

5. Because dispirited men who thirst will there be in Sinon by reason of irreverent men, to whom thou hast given us up.

6. And the Lord of Sabaoth will do (the caused doing meant) for all the nations; Upon this mountain will they drink, rejoicing will they drink wine.

7. They will anoint themselves with myrrh on this mountain. Deliver all these things to the nations: For it is the counsel for all the nations.

8. Death hath drunk it down: Thou hast become strong: and again hath the Lord God taken away every tear from every face; the reproach of the laity hath he taken away from all the earth: For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

9. And they will say in that day, Lo our God in whom we have hoped and he will save us. He is Lord. "We have waited for him and let us be glad and rejoice in our salvation.

10. God will give rest on this mountain, and the Moabitis will have been trodden down in the way they tread a threshing-floor with heavy wagons:

11. And he will give rein to his hands in the way even he hath humbled to destroy and he will humble his haughty pride for the things he hath laid his hands on:

12. And the uplifting of the wall of the refuge will he humble, and it will go down to the foundation.

Chapter 26.

1. In that day will they sing this song in respect to the land of Jouduia: Lo a strong city! And an instrumental-salvation will dispose the wall and the outer-wall.

2. May ye have opened gateways; May a laity that watcheth to guard righteousness and watcheth to guard truth have entered in:

3. A laity that interveneth for truth and watcheth to guard peace; because in thee.

4. They have hoped, O Lord, during the animate-age, thou great, thou eternal God;

5. Thou who hast humbled and brought down the dwellers in high places; who hast cast down walled-cities and brought them down to their foundation;

6. And feet of meek and lowly ones will tread them.

7. An upright way hath there become for truly-reverent ones, the way for the truly-reverent even that hath been prepared.

8. For the way of the Lord is a judicial-way. We have hoped in thy name and in thy remembrance.

9. In which our soul longeth. From out night my soul dawneth unto thee, O God, because thy commandments are light upon the earth: May ye have learned righteousness ye who dwell upon the earth.

10. For the irreverent one hath ceased. Every one who shall not have learned righteousness upon the earth shall not do truth: May the irreverent one have been taken away, that he may not have seen the glory of the Lord.

11. O Lord, thy arm is uplifted and they have not perceived it; but when they know it they will have been put to shame: Zeal will lay hold of an unchastened laity and fire will devour the adversaries.

12. O Lord our God, grant us peace; for thou hast given us all things.

13. O Lord our God, take possession of us: O Lord besides thee we know no other; thy name we name.

14. The dead cease; know life and the physicians cannot rise up: Therefore hast thou brought upon and destroyed and taken away every male of them.

15. Mayest thou have added bad things to them, O Lord, mayest thou have added bad things to the renowned of the earth.

16. O Lord, in tribulation have I remembered thee; in a little tribulation hath been thy chastening of us.

17. And as she who suffereth birth-pangs is drawing nigh to bring forth and on account of her birth-pangs hath cried out, even so have we become for thy Beloved.

18. Because of fear of thee have we received in womb, and suffered birth-pang and brought forth: Thy spirit of salvation have we created (caused) on the earth: We shall not fall (fall) but all who dwell on the earth will fall (fall).

19. The dead will arise, and those in the memorial tombs will have been awakened, and those in the earth will have rejoiced; For the dew that is from thee is their healing: but the earth of the irreverent will fall (fall).

20. Go my laity: may ye have entered into thy inner-chambers may ye have closed thy doors: May ye have hid for a little time as it were, as it were, until the wrath of the Lord shall have passed by.

21. For lo, the Lord from his sanctuary is bringing his wrath upon those who dwell upon the earth; and the earth will uncover its blood, and will not cover those who have been taken away.

Comment.

The 24th chapter opens with a prophecy of woe and desolation on God's chosen land and people, and the woe gradually widens out in its effect until it takes in the cosmos or the whole world. This begins to be apparent in the 14th and 15th verses, becomes more evident in the 19th and 20th verses and fully so in the 21st verse. The glory of the coming kingdom also begins to be manifest in the 15th verse, the retribution upon "the nations" "who know not God" more than hinted at in the 22nd verse and the coming glory and full assertion of the kingdom asserted in the 23d verse with which the chapter appropriately closes. This 23rd verse correlates with the "2300 days" of Daniel's prophecy, and ushers in the 24 or numerical consummation.

The 25th chapter is a review of God's providential chastening and the way he is going to assert righteousness on the earth: a prophecy of the restoration of his laity and how the nations of the earth will be blessed through them and this restoration. The iron sceptre that breaketh in pieces the kingdoms of the earth "like a potter's vessel" becomes apparent in this prophecy. The chapter closes with the coming downfall of the Moabitis and the next chapter the 26th opens with the corresponding exultation of Joudain and all that these two names in their broader significance in prophecy imply.

The gospel-clarion begins to ring out in this chapter. Observe the "all things" of the 12th verse so emphasized later by Paul, and from the 14th verse on we see how the necessity of a resurrection becomes apparent if the glory and the blessings are ever to be realized by God's people. Note how this teaching exactly agrees with Paul's teaching that "we have a life that is hid with Christ in God"—"to be made manifest at the great day." Observe how differently this translation reads from the C. V. or the R. V. and how exactly it harmonizes with the fuller revelation of the new and later covenant Scriptures.

The Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus.

Editors Eagle:

Our next Sunday school lesson will be the above parable and as there is a wide difference of opinion as to its meaning, I desire to present brief testimony as to what it can not and what it may typify. In passing it may be noted that no parable primarily teaches doctrine. Scripture truth is taught in plain, literal language.

Let it be understood that the beggar is represented as dying, but not as being buried and being put into hades. On the contrary he was (figuratively) carried by angels into Abraham's bosom. The rich man is figured as placed in hades, here wrongly translated hell. Hades, in the Hebrew sheol, literally is the grave, the tomb, the place of deposition of the dead. It is also may dark or invisible place. Heathen philosophers have given it special meanings to correspond to their ideas concerning the unseen.

In God's plan all classes of the dead, good and bad alike, go to hades. In Gen. xliv., we read that Jacob's gray hairs could be brought with sorrow to sheole. In Num. xvi., Korah and his associates went to sheole alive by being swallowed up in the earth. Jesus remained in hades three days. Hades will give up its dead through the resurrection. In hades there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom. Eccl. ix. 10. God only hath immortality. We are told to seek for it and, if found worthy, shall put it on at the resurrection.

In other parables where a man is made the symbol for instruction he represents a whole class of men. The parable of the rich man and the beggar is no exception. Jesus delivered it especially for the Pharisees. The rich man, clothed in purple and fine linen and faring sumptuously, represents those who had been favored by God. Who could be so well represented by the symbol as the Jewish nation, and especially the Scribes and Pharisees who had Moses and the prophets as their guides. But the old dispensation ceased, died. The Jews were no longer to be God's chosen people. The Gentiles should through Christ become Abraham's seed. They had been the poor, the outcast. Now they became the messengers of salvation: while the Jews were to become the despised of all lands.

If Lazarus represents the house of Judah, the two tribes that returned from the captivity, the five brothers would properly represent the ten lost tribes.

I regret that want of time prevents a more complete statement of Scripture testimony but I hope this brief article will be sufficient to direct the reader's thoughts.

Starving the Soul.

Robert Cecil used to say: "I feel that all I know and all I teach will do nothing for my soul, if I spend my time as some people do; in business or company. My soul starves to death in the best company; and God is often lost in prayers and ordinances. 'Enter into thy closet,' said Christ, 'and shut thy door.' Shut thy door means much. It means shut out not only nonsense but business; not only the company abroad but the company at home. It means let the poor soul have a little rest and refreshment, and God have opportunity to speak to thee in a still small voice—or he will speak to thee in thunder."

God denies a Christian nothing but with a design to give him something better.—Cecil.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall County, Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Some will say, "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Lord Jesus, Come Quickly.

Come quickly, come quickly!
Lord Jesus, come quickly.
With promised reward.
Earth's night is so dreary,
Our eyes are so weary,
Awaiting our Lord.

We've wandered and waited,
Like children belated
In some stormy night;
Our sad vigils keeping,
While praying and weeping,
And longing for light.

Our moments of gladness
Are mingled with sadness,
And sorrow and tears;
We feel we are strangers,
Surrounded with dangers,
And trials and fears.

O Jesus, be near us,
Continue to cheer us
In life's gloomy path.
Whatever befide us,
Dear Savior, provide us
A triumph in death.

Lord Jesus, come quickly!
We pray thee come quickly,
And scatter the night:
We pray for the gleaming,
The sign of thy coming—
We pray for the light.

"The Glory."—No. 2.

Again we have another kind of glory "that according as it is written, he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." 1 Cor. i. 31; 2 Cor. x. 17. Now comes one all-important question, what is it to glory in the Lord? How many can answer this right off-hand? Hands up, we think that we do not see very many hands up. But first we want to say that this glorying comes through two channels, first in knowing, second in doing, faith and works. With this understanding before us, let me here ask, does the Bible give us sufficient knowledge on this subject? We answer at once that it does, and that too most completely so, in proof of this I ask you to come with me to the 9th chapter of Jeremiah, that good old chapter which is one of the best that there is in the whole Bible, besides we would recommend the reading of the whole chapter quite often. Although he never did know that his writings were to be divided up into chapters and verses as it now is at all. Yet at the same time it is just the thing for study, and references. But we now call your special attention to the 23 and 24th verses, which reads as follows: "Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither, let the mighty man glory in his might. Let not the rich man glory in his riches." Now this verse tells us what not to glory in. Then the important question arises, what are we to glory in? but hold a minute, till we read the next verse, then let us have, and do what it says, "but let him that glorieth, glory in this that he understandeth, and knoweth me, that I am the Lord, which exercise loving kindness, judgment and righteousness in the earth, for in these things I delight saith the Lord." In the above two verses, we have a full and complete description of how we are to glory, and that all of this heap of glory is to be exercised in this life, of what we are not to glory in as well as to what we are to glory in which is, that we understand and know the Lord. But what does our understanding, and knowing the Lord, consist of? It does not leave us in the dark with regard to this. But goes on to say, that "I am the Lord which exercise loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth, for in these things I delight saith the Lord." It is a blessed good thing for us as well as for the whole nation of Israel to know that our Father in heaven is exercised in these three great principles, with which we have to deal, and besides it speaks volumes for us his erring creatures, not only this but that he takes special delight in these things, and that too, first and foremost and in front of all the rest, he takes special delight in being exercised in loving kindness first, then judgment, and then righteousness. Now then it is also a well settled fact that this is an individual affair, and that every one that desires to be a true child of God, and that is walking by faith and not by sight, should thus glory. Now comes three more all important questions, how are we thus to glory?

1. How are we to glory individually? In knowing and understanding how the Lord is exercising loving kindness in the earth, or towards us, or over us, his creatures?

2. How are we to glory individually in knowing and understanding how the Lord is exercising judgment in the earth or to reward us, or over us his creatures?

3. How are we to glory individually in knowing and understanding how the lord is exercising righteousness in the earth, or toward us, or over us, his creatures?

The above three questions are here propounded and now demand an answer. If we are to know, and to understand about these three great principles, how far is our knowledge to extend? Where is the limit of it? With these thoughts before us, we will endeavor to answer number one first, which says, How are we to glory individually in knowing and understanding how the Lord is exercising loving kindness in the earth or towards us, or over us his creatures? How was it in the days of Jeremiah? who was a prophet of the Lord sent directly to the nation of Israel. It is a fact beyond dispute that the Lord did exercise loving-kindness in the earth. It must have been within Jeremiah's reach. In his own neighborhood where he could have access to it at any time, know and understand all about it, otherwise it would have done him no good so that he could not know and understand all about it. In order to glory in it he must have had free access at all time to know and understand before he could glory in it. Now then what are the facts in the case? We find by investigation that Jeremiah was a chosen vessel of the Lord, and according to Jer. i. 5, the Lord knew him before he was conceived, and before he was born the Lord sanctified and ordained him a prophet to the nation of Israel, not only to the nation of Israel, but in fact to all nations of the earth, according to Jer. xxv., with the wine cup of his fury that is to be poured out on them on account of their many sins, and all kinds of wickedness. Not only this, but that he did have free access to all of God's promises and laws, besides being chosen and selected as a fit spokesman to make known some of God's prophetical revelations to the children of men, along with the whole nation of Israel, for we read in Rom. iii. 2, "for that unto them were committed the oracles of God" to them alone, and he still further says in Isaiah v. 25, also ix. 12, 17, 21, also x. 4, that after they had committed so many kinds of wickedness that his anger was not turned away but his arm was stretched out still, and all these things teach us how very much the God of heaven was exercised in loving-kindness in giving all his promises to them, and the laws for them to obey, and serve him that they might obtain the things promised, and not only this but that he gave them the seasons of the year, and the former and latter rains so that they were abundantly blessed in so many ways. These all teaching us how the Lord was wholly exercised in loving-kindness towards them. But now how stands the case with us? How are we to glory in knowing and understanding how the Lord is exercising loving-kindness in the earth or towards us, or over us his creatures? We answer in so many ways, and yet a oneness in each and every one of them. First, in that we have a being, an existence, to live by breathing, and enjoying the right use of our five senses. In addition to this the exercise of our reason, and good common sense, good sound judgment or justice. Second, by living in a land where Bibles exist. Third, more than all the rest, that our Father in heaven has been, and still is pleased to reveal his will unto us. Fourth, that we understand and know what the will of the Lord is. Fifth, that this will embodies all his promises concerning the good of his creatures. Sixth, that his promises embody the gospel of the kingdom of God. Seventh, that the gospel is good news, or glad tidings concerning the kingdom of God. Eighth, that the good news, or glad tidings concerning the kingdom of God are, "In thee, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Ninth, that Jesus means Savior, and that he is our Savior, and that this Savior is the Anointed Messiah, and that this Anointed Messiah, and all the saints, are this seed here spoken of in the singular number through whom all the nations of the earth are to be blessed. Tenth, that these promises or the great bulk of them relate to the future, and are to take place on this earth. After our Savior returns from high heaven, the throne of God, where he is now interceding for his waiting people, the second time without sin unto salvation. Now to know and understand these things is to see how our heavenly Father is being wholly exercised in loving-kindness in the earth toward us, or over us his creatures. Now how much are we therefore to glory in these things? Just as much as we are able to, the glory is unlimited, we need not be afraid of glorying too much in these things.

J. A. MOYER.

The Law.

Dear Restitution:

As the sabbath question is being discussed a good deal of late I would like to add a short piece. God called Abraham out from his kindred and people, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xxii. 18. This wonderful promise was given to Abraham while he was yet childless and 430 years pass, and his seed has multiplied until there are millions, when Moses was raised up and he led his brethren out of Egyptian bondage and God gave them the law and organized the Levitical priesthood and through them the law was given to the people. This was not the fulfillment of the promise only in type, for Paul says, "On account of transgressions the law was added till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." Gal. iii. 19. This law was only given to one nation instead of all nations. It was an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. A man was found gathering sticks on the sabbath day and was commanded to be stoned to death. Num. xv. Paul speaks of it as follows, "But if the ministrations of death written and engraven on stones, came with glory so the children of Israel could not look steadfastly upon the face of Moses for the glory of his face, which glory was passing away." 2 Cor. iii. 7. This law was given to the children of Israel by the Aaronic priesthood. "But when the fulness of the time came, God sent forth his son born of a woman, born under the law that he might redeem them which were under the law." Gal. iv. 4. Which was Jesus of Nazareth born of the Virgin Mary of the tribe of Judah, of which there is no mention made of any priest. Again the Apostle says, "For the priesthood being changed there is made of necessity a change also of the law." Heb. vii. 12. Some say this has reference to priests, but I find no change of law relating to priests; but when Jesus who is our High Priest was asked what is the first commandment he said: "Hear O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind and with all thy strength: and the second is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There are none other commandments greater than these." Mark xii. 30-31. He has made no reference to the law engraven on stone, but gives us a new one, "not carnal but one after the power of an endless life" that is if kept until the end will give eternal life. The old covenant which was the covenant of death was to cease with the Levitical priesthood. "For there is a disannulling of a foregoing commandment because of its weakness and unprofitableness." Heb. vii. 18. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell (sheol) shall not stand," Isa. xxviii. 18. "Having blotted out the bond, written in ordinances that were against us, which was contrary to us and he hath taken it out of the way, nailing it to the cross." Col. ii. 14. Jesus having been raised from the dead and exalted, given a name which is above every name. He is our Lord and our High-priest, our Mediator and our coming King: he ever liveth to intercede for us. We can see very plainly why it was disannulled, for it stood in the way of the new covenant of love, written in the heart: a law that would compel all people to keep the first day or Sunday holy, without excepting those who feel it their conscientious duty to keep the seventh day, would be a violation of the second commandment. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and again "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." Matt. vii. 12. I find no law commanding the observance of a sabbath day, under the new covenant. "The law is not made for the righteous, but for the unholy." 1 Tim. i. 9. Can we who keep the first day say we are more holy than those who keep the seventh day, that we must make a law to make them keep the first day. Paul says, "He that regardeth the day regardeth it unto the Lord." Rom. xiv. 6. Also let no man therefore judge you in meat or in drink or a sabbath day, which are a shadow of the things to come. I do not think we have any thing to do with making law in these Gentile governments, but contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and look for the coming of him who is to reign in righteousness.

Essay—"Our Treasure."

"For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." Matt. vi. 21.

Christian friends and neighbors, let us each one examine ourselves and see if we can find where our treasure is. Let us see where our highest ambitions are. Are our thoughts engaged at home on the farm trying to out-do our neighbors? Are we planning every day how to drive sharp bargains for more money? Is it our greatest desire to horde up wealth? Are our thoughts continually on this theme? If so, there is where we will find our treasure. Have we a tendency to strive for the riches of this world, or are we content with what God has given us? Let us take care that we do not heap treasures for the last days spoken of by the Apostle James 5th chapter, "Go now ye rich men weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you, your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth eaten; your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it by fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days. Behold the hire of the laborers, who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth and the cries of them which reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, ye have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you." It is also true that we read in 1 Tim. v. 8, "But if any provide not for his own and especially for those of his own house he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." We can readily see the difference in spending all of one's time striving for the riches of this world, and in working to provide for our families.

Christ says, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

Paul says, "For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out."

Paul in writing to Timothy told him to "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertain riches; but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy, that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." "Ye cannot serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to one and despise the other, ye can not serve God and mammon." Friends, which will you serve; we cannot serve both, shall we give most of our time and talent to God our Creator, who endowed us with wisdom and understanding? or shall we give it to mammon, will you trust in uncertain riches, or in a living God? Friends, are not these few thoughts worthy of attention? If we give our heart to God, there is our treasure also: but if we give to mammon it is uncertain. I can say with Joshua, "But as for me and my house we will serve the Lord."

Spirit.

Editor Restitution:

Please allow me space in your valuable teacher (THE RESTITUTION) for a few thoughts on the Spirit. Some of the brethren claim that they have the Spirit of the Lord, or Holy Ghost, or Holy Spirit, and that that Spirit directs them and delivers them in the trying hour. Now I want to tell them through your paper what protects and delivers me in the evil hour, my Bible, and it is an Advent Bible too. I find in Gen. xlviii. 16, that Jacob says that the angel of the Lord protected him all through his life. I find also in Psa. xxxiv. 7, that the angel of the Lord encampeth around them that fear him and the angel delivers them. I find also that the angel delivered Daniel out of the mouth of the lions, also in the fiery furnace that the angel was there. I find also that the angels were to watch over Christ, lest at any time he should dash his foot against a stone. I find also in the garden that the angel comforted or strengthened him. I might enumerate, but I think this is enough to establish the point, that we are not guided by a Spirit outside of the Bible, as some claim to be. If Paul, who taught the whole counsel of God to the Church, is not able to guide us safe into the kingdom without a Spirit-guide outside of the Bible, there must be something wrong. But our position is, that if a man follows the teachings of the Bible he will be all right without having the Holy Ghost in him to guide him in his wayfare. Some say they have not the Holy Spirit like the apostles had it. They have some sort of a glad filling, but I have never met the brother or sister that holds to this that was able to demonstrate in what way or what part of the Spirit they had. As an inducement for further investigating I propose to send THE RESTITUTION, prepaid, for one year and a new $3.00 Bible to any brother or sister that can prove to me by Bible, or demonstration by healing, prophecy or tongues that they have the Spirit of Christ, Holy Ghost or Holy Spirit which are synonymous terms. You say if we have not the Spirit of Christ we are none of his. I believe you, only instead of a Spirit-guide it is disposition that is meant in this text, and you get that disposition by conformity to the teachings of Christ. Return good for evil, etc. But you must do it willingly and not by constraint, else you have not the cause at heart. You say you are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise until the day of redemption. I agree with you again, but will you get the Spirit before the seal is broken, which is to be at the resurrection? Therefore, if we have a spirit inside of us we had better discard the Bible, as a man cannot follow two guides. It was necessary for the apostles to have the Holy Spirit, but not us. We have his teachings through the apostles and it is equivalent to having the Holy Spirit, and we pray for the proof if any of the brethren can give it, where any one received the Spirit since the days of the apostles, and they imparted of the Spirit by the laying on of the hands. Brother, who laid his hands on you?

Suggestive Thoughts.

"But ye brethren are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief: ye are all the sons of light, and the sons of the day: we are not of the night or of darkness: so let us not sleep as do the rest." 2 Thess. v. 1-6.

Why not "in darkness?" Because the glorious search-light of prophetic truth has illuminated the pathway right along, even unto the gateway of the City of Peace; and as we draw near to the verdant hills of home, sweet home, that light becomes so intensified, that none need stumble and fall over obstacles scattered all along the way. This light illuminates only the "narrow way," "the broad way" is lighted by the light which comes from worldly wisdom, which is illusive, (and is preferred by many to the search-light of the "narrow way,") and while that light appears to be brilliant, yet it is only a flash-light, which blinds the eyes, so that objects beyond cannot be discerned. Also this broadway there are plenty of blind guides (blinded by worldly wisdom) who are leading multitudes into the ditch.

"The sons of light, and the sons of day," whose minds have been illuminated by the true gospel light, should "not sleep as do the rest," but throw the search-light of truth out from the gospel tower; and let it shine like a bon-con-light from the mountain-top, to be the light of the world. "A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." A community of "children of light," should shine forth as an attractive light in the every locality in which they are found. In addition to holding forth the Word of life, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, (the outgrowth of the true faith) and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Seest thou how faith wrought with his (Abraham's) works, and by works was faith made perfect." "But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" We might also add: "but wilt thou know, O vain man, that works, without the true faith of the gospel is also vain," as to the future? And know this also it is only the "pure in heart," that shall see God. Remember this also that it is not purity shown on the exterior, but it is "in the heart," down-right heart-purity. Would to God, we could all come to realizing sense as to the purity of heart and life required of every one that will be selected as a component part of the "Man-child," that shall rule all nations, and it should be so, because those who cannot rule themselves, in this life will never be able to rule others hereafter. We must practice governing now to show our fitness for such an exalted position hereafter. Beloved in the Lord, let us think seriously about these things.

W. H. WILSON.

An old philosopher, seeing a fop in fine apparel, pointed at him, and said, 'That's pride.' But he was equally right when, seeing certain Spartans who affected to dress meanly, he said, 'And that's pride.' Pride often stands in the doorway, but it can be seen in a corner.

"Do not dwell upon the dark side of things, but on life's brighter aspects. He who goes into his garden to seek for cobwebs and spiders, no doubt will find them, while he who looks for a flower may return into his house with one blooming in his bosom."

That all Scripture is profitable is clearly taught in the Bible; yet very few Christians really believe it, at least they do not act as if they did.—T. M. C. A. Watchman.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all Things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 13, 1896. NUMBER 18.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PLYMOUTH, IND. MAY 13, 1896.

IN our next number we propose to publish an extended article on "Passing Events" in the light of prophecy, compiled from a number of contributors, who are keenly watching for the dawn of day.

DURING the past week the Shah of Persia was assassinated.—It was the plan of the assassin to also kill the grand vizier; and despatches from Constantinople say that the Sultan was thrown into a state of extreme horror when he heard of the fate of the Shah. Foreign telegrams are excluded and the local papers are forbidden to refer to the subject.

That Power of Destiny.

Russia is beginning, not only to feel its importance, but to assert it. It speaks like a giant who has just discovered his strength.

A despatch from St. Petersburg, may 5, says, "Apropos of the visit of Li Hung Chang to St. Petersburg, Prince Ouktomsky, who travelled with the Chinese Statesman, writes:—

"The Chinese envoy has delivered papers which signify eternal friendship between the two great neighboring states. Russia has no need of any alliance. A treaty of with China would only be an annoyance to us. Russia's interest is merely to hold China intact. We shall not permit anyone to play the master in China and we shall not allow anyone to attack the country. If Russia protects China, she protects herself."

Coming from the quarter it does, and printed as it is in official double-leaded type, these statements may be taken as entirely and wholly representing the truth about the much debated relations existing between Russia and China, no treaty, but entire understanding.

A still later despatch says Russia is about to send ships of war to prevent England taking possession of some disputed territory in China, and the daily papers say it will go hard with any power that bothers the celestials.

Godliness with Contentment is Great Gain. 1 Tim. vi. 6.

"A little that a righteous man hath, is better than the riches of many wicked." Psa. xxxvii. 16.

Those who make a trade of religion will never be gainers in the end. Godliness and contentment are constant companions. True contentment grows out of true godliness. The rich in faith are not restless and peevish because they have not so much as their neighbors. Says the wise man, "How much better is it to get wisdom than gold, and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver." Paul looked at matters in this light when he said, "I learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know how to be abased, and I know how to abound: everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. Of course this is a stalwart Christian talking here,—but he was a man of like passions with us; but he had been converted. He was in Christ Jesus, and therefore was a new creature. Old things had passed away. He had died to sin. He had risen with Christ,—he kept his body under. He knew,—and we ought to know, that past things cannot be recalled,—and the future is in the hand of God. And so we find him saying again in the 13th of Heb. v. 5. "Be not of an avaricious disposition. Be satisfied with present things,—why, Paul? For he himself hath said, "No, I will not leave thee; no, nor I will not forsake thee; so that taking courage we may say, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear; what can man do to me? The Lord has answered this by saying that he can kill the body and that is all. It is unwise to be anxious about the future.

1. Because all the future is in God's hands. An infinite, wise and good being is sovereign over all its events. Not one of them can escape his notice or elude his control.

2. Because we have no right to put into one day what belongs to another. The future will have its own cares and anxieties, and plenty of them likely, and they will be along in due time. But they have no business among the cares and anxieties of the present time.

3. Because it is ill treatment of the best advice, and think who was the adviser: "Wherefore, take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

4. Because it implies want of confidence in God. Has he not hitherto dealt graciously with us? Could we have taken as good care of ourselves as he has taken of us? If we can reflect on goodness, can we not anticipate goodness? Has not God laid a noble basis for confidence in all his faithfulness?

5. Because it will needlessly augment present trouble. Are we so well out of trouble now that we need some by way of variety? Or would like more than we now have? Do we want a new stroke of the lash on a place already sore? If so all we have to do is to go into fidgets about the future, and we will be accommodated. But all this is a superfluous addition to present troubles. It makes present burdens heavier, while Christ and reason and experience bid us do no such thing.

6. Anxiety about the future can do no possible good. It cannot better fit us to meet it: but contrariwise it will change nothing appointed to overtake us.

Therefore, all those voices in our ears proclaim to us that it is very poor business to care and trouble ourselves about the future. Let us to our duty and trust in God—then come what may all will be well.

In this, however, as in other subjects, it is easier to preach than to practice. But I am convinced that our acquiescence in these strict rules of life in the narrow way will be in proportion to the closeness of our walk with God, and the measure of the spirit of Christ within us.

Another Talk With The Doctor About Asthma.

He says in his quaint way: "Light sometimes comes to us on the true treatment of disease when we consider the effect of false treatment. It does so in the case of asthma, when we look narrowly into the effects produced by alcohol, tobacco, stramonium, opium, and narcotic drugs. These are largely used in efforts to give relief in this sore trouble, and in various cases relief for a little time is the result of their use. But the very opposite of relief is the result in other cases, while relief is deceitful in all. We have seen a case of asthma terribly aggravated by a small portion of brandy, and also by opium. As to stramonium and other narcotics of which the smoke is used, even fatal effects have been produced by their use. Still there is a sense of relief produced in some cases, and this is sufficient to make poor sufferers go after their remedies. Our present object is to study the principle on which temporary relief is given by such means so as to understand better the true remedy. We know, beyond doubt, that the effect of alcohol and every other narcotic is to lessen the vitality of the nerves affected. If we are truthfully to account for any relief which these things give in asthma we must do so on the idea that they lower vital action—not on the false idea that they increase it. So must we account for the opposite effect when the breathing is made more difficult by the use of such means. If we adhere to a true principle it will carry us in the long run to the right remedy in all such cases. When, for instance, we see a person laboring to breathe, and half a teaspoonful of brandy is given in a little hot water, some slight relief is the result—how do we explain it? Or three or four teaspoonfuls are given and the breathing becomes a great deal more difficult. How do we explain that? We cannot follow on the absurd idea that a small dose is a stimulant while a large dose is a narcotic, as if a substance could give life and take it away, and so have two opposite natures. It is true that a small quantity of a thing will do good, and a large quantity will harm, but look in the small quantity and the large it acts in exactly the same manner. It only acts with sufficient force in the one case, and with the great force in the other. Heat, for instance, as in any heated substance, will cherish when in a moderate degree, and destroy when in a greater; but it always heats—it does not cool the one time and heat the other. Its action is always perfectly identical in nature, be the measure what it may. Nothing so signally proves the irrational state of mind among classes of men as the fundamental error of declaring that a substance can be a stimulant in small doses and a narcotic in large doses. The declaration shows that whole classes of men have failed, though what is called "highly educated," to master the very first elements of physical [illegible] of them, we are to account [illegible] the relief of which a sin[illegible] temporarily healed some times gives, and the [illegible] which a larger quantity causes, we must do so according to the truth that its nature is the same whether in small doses or in larger. So with stramonium and every other narcotic. It is of the greatest importance that the truth should be understood here, for, in the greatest kindness, substances are given in diseases that make the cure of lowed ones impossible. It will be easily seen that if only two or three drops of alcohol are taken they can act upon the tongue alone. Their action will no doubt pass so far to other nerves beyond those directly affected, but the action will be very slight, except on the nerves actually touched by this liquid. If half a teaspoonful be given in a little hot water it will affect little more than the entrance to the stomach so as to dull the action of the sensitive nerves there. It will not much affect the stomach itself, while its influence will not reach the nerves of respiration. Even the indirect influence will not be sufficient to injure the action of these nerves. But the deadening of action in one quarter allows of easier action in another. In cases of inflammatory disease in which the heart's action is at length all but arrested when mortification sets in and the extremities nearly die, the heart's movement becomes quite regular and good. It is no longer required of it to send the circulation over so wide an area, and hence it works easily. It is the same with the dulling of the nerves of the stomach in the case of asthma. That allows of a little easier action in the organs of respiration—hence the relief. But the relief is at the expense of lowered life and reduced chances of recovery from disease."

Address at Breaking of Bread.

The ordinance we have been observing is fraught with many solemn lessons. The night on which it was instituted was a very sad one. Christ knew that his hour was come; the hour he had long been anticipating, as we find by the frequent mention he had made of it. At one time he said, I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished, Luke xii. 50. And again we read "Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them, Behold we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the Scribes, and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock and to scourge, and to crucify him, and the third day he shall rise again." Matt. xx. 17–19.

And on another occasion he said, "Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say? Father save me from this hour, but for this cause came I unto this hour; Father glorify thy name." John xii. 27. Again, when he sat down with the twelve at the last Passover feast, and as he looked at the little Band, with what deep emotion must he have given utterance to the words, "Verily I say unto you that one of you shall betray me." Need we wonder that they were exceeding sorrowful? Why the reading of it, even at this late day is calculated to make any sensitive disposition sorrowful: but think of their feelings when they were informed, "All ye shall be offended because of me this night."

It is true Peter protested "Though all shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." "Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee." Likewise also said all the disciples." This must have yielded little comfort to the Savior, knowing as he did what the outcome would be.

The climax of sorrow was reached a few hours later when in and Gethsemane he exclaimed "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death." This sorrow voiced itself in the petition "O my Father if it be possible let this cup pass from me, nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt," and finding the disciples fast asleep, he saith unto Peter, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour," Matt. xxvi. 38. You that I have watched over with tender solicitude these three years and a-half, took you into my confidence, and made known to you the Father's will, could ye not watch with me one short hour? Then it was that "Being in an agony he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground," Luke xxii. 44. But what of the prediction "All ye shall be offended because of me this night." How did Peter and the rest keep their pledge. "Though I should die with thee yet will I not deny thee." What did the sequel show? Peter indeed showed a somewhat daring spirit when he drew his sword and smote the High Priest's servant, and cut off his ear, but as Jesus was led away to Caiaphas the high priest, Peter followed him afar off, here was the first fatal error, and a few hours later he thrice denied that he knew him. What a spectacle! And what of the other disciples who joined with Peter in protestations of devotion to the Master? Why, "They all forsook him and fled." Matt. xxvi. 56. Forsook whom? A sinful mortal like themselves whose weakness, shortcomings and eccentricities had led him into some extravagant notions, or imprudent actions which could not be justified, so that they had some pretense for their conduct in forsaking him? No, no. They forsook the spotless Son of God, the incarnation of all goodness, the embodiment of every heavenly virtue! Forsook him? Yes, forsook him whose voice rebuked disease, cast out demons, stilled the stormy ocean's wave, and raised the dead. They forsook him and fled strange infatuation. What a solemn warning to all of us! How much need for humility and watchfulness! And what a voice of thunder to any who may be becoming lukewarm, cold, or indifferent. Following Christ afar off is too often the prelude to denying him altogether; one more step in the downward course.

There is however another lesson to be drawn from this painful history which should not be overlooked, and justice demands that it be carefully considered. It is this. It is no uncommon thing to hear people say, "If your faith is the only sound one, or if it is so much better than other peoples, how does it come that so many of your folks relapse into their former ways. Your people do not seem to be any more stable than those of other churches. Why should you then claim so much more for your faith? This has the appearance of sound argument, and for the time being your questioner seems to think he has silenced you. Now to reply: Justice is a great thing, every one commends it. It is an element in the divine character which stands out conspicuously; a lack of this element unfits any one for being a righteous judge. Well we grant that some who apparently embrace the truth fall away. This is the case now, and ever has been, but does that indicate something wrong with the faith, or with the person merely? Is there any inherent defect in the faith, has it lost its power? Is the gospel no longer the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth? This properly enters into the solution of this question. In other words, If a declension among some who have heard the truth from our lips would indicate that the faith we teach is unsound, what would a declension among Christ's own disciples prove? Yet the history shows that of those who heard the truth from his own lips, many went back, and walked no more with him, and of the chosen twelve, as we have seen, one betrayed him, one thrice denied him, and they all forsook him and fled, but no one thinks of blaming the doctrine, or charging the instability of the disciples to that account. It is not the faith that is at fault but the individual who proves untrue to his convictions of truth and duty, makes shipwreck of the faith, and denies the Lord that bought him. Some time ago a man said to one of our people, "I was at the Penitentiary the other day and I saw a man there who believes as you do, that man is not immortal, and that death is the wages of sin. There now, does that not show you the tendency of that doctrine, and that if men do not believe in eternal torment they will fall into crime." My friend replied, "Well I am very sorry that a man holding that belief has fallen into crime, but what about all the others who were in the same Penitentiary, were they not all of your way of thinking? and if so, what does that show of the restraining influence of the doctrine of eternal torment?" and that put a quietus on the Penitentiary question.

The truth of the matter is simply this, man by nature and practice is a sinful creature; God in his great goodness has instituted certain means by which he may be saved, and has designated the gospel as the power he uses for that purpose, and because certain individuals professing to believe the gospel have become recreant, must our faith in the gospel be diminished thereby? Such a conclusion would be unwise, and unreasonable.

If five out of every hundred should fall away, or twenty-five, or fifty, it would be a very painful experience, but it would not lessen my faith in the gospel, or its saving power, or prevent me from proclaiming it abroad as God's good Message.

The parable Christ spoke of the sower who went forth to sow, ought of itself to convince us that we may expect many failures. Some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up; some fell upon stony places where they had no deepness of earth, and when the sun was up they were scorched, and because they had no root they withered away; and some fell among thorns and the thorns sprung up and choked them, and some fell into good ground and brought forth fruit, some a hundred, some sixty, and some thirty fold. Here we have four descriptions of hearers. 1st. The wayside hearers. 2nd. The stony ground hearers. 3rd. Those choked by the thorns, and 4th. The good ground. From this we see that there are many chances that the seed sown will never come to maturity. I tell you failures are very painful, and each one has a duty to perform in trying to prevent them, but why should any ones' faith be diminished because of the inconsistency of professors? If I should apostatize why should that diminish your faith? Your faith is in God not in me, and if one-half of you should apostatize why should my faith be lessened thereby or why should I be relieved of still proclaiming God's method of saving men?

Paul in his second letter to Timothy says, "It is a faithful saying for if we be dead with him we shall also live with him: If we suffer we shall also reign with him: If we deny him he also will deny us. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful, he cannot deny himself," 2 Tim. ii. 11.

Our unbelief or unfaithfulness will work our own ruin, but it will not frustrate God's plans, or hinder the accomplishment of his purposes.

Also in his letter to Titus, Paul shows there are various ways of denying Christ. Some "Profess that they know God, but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient and unto every good work reprobate." Titus i. 16.

A form of godliness without the power, will be of no avail, and from all such we are commanded to turn away. 2 Tim. 3, 5.

It is a fearful thing to deny Christ whether by apostasy from the faith, or by wicked works; his words are, "Whosoever shall deny me before men him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven," but to cheer the child of God, and strengthen him to endure shame and reproach for the name and doctrine of Christ he adds, "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven." Matt. x. 32. O, is that not sufficient to meet every emergency? The glorious anticipation of Christ owning and confessing us before his Father may well sustain us under sickness, trials, scorn, and misrepresentations, incident to the present life; but in order to have this blessed assurance, we must live ever near him, drink deep into his Spirit,—have his word dwelling in us, feed upon it, incorporate it into our spiritual life. It will not do follow him afar off.

May we strive above all things to have his divine approval, to have the light of his countenance shining around our pathway, and then whatever our lot in life may be, whether prosperous or adverse, whether we have many or few trials to bear, with the divine recognition and approbation we will have nothing to fear.

May this be our happy lot.

In conclusion, while we should ever extol and magnify the means God has graciously appointed for man's redemption, and rejoice and glory in our own emancipation let us avoid all vain glory and self-exaltation, seeing we have not attained even to our present imperfect condition through any superiority in ourselves; ever remembering Paul's injunction, Let nothing be done through strife, or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind, saying to ourselves, "Who maketh thee to differ from another, and what hast thou that thou didst not receive?" and Paul's question comes in here opportunely, "Where is boasting then? It is excluded." Completely and forever excluded, and let us not forget that in the highest position we can ever attain to we will be constrained to say, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

Tracts.

We have printed the letter to Dr. Talmage and J. A. Conant written by Bro. and Sister Howard and printed in issue of April 22, in tract form, and can supply them at two cents each, or 15 cents a dozen.—Address: THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

A man never rises above his ideal; for this reason, let your ideals be most lofty and ennobling.

An Early Pioneer has Fallen Asleep.

Our beloved Sister, Mary Ann Boyes, wife of our Brother Benjamin Boyes, peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, at her home, in Geneva, Illinois, on April 29, 1896.

Sister Boyes, whose maiden name was Mary Ann Holroyd, was born in Halifax, England, January 25, 1818. She was married to Benjamin Boyes, in January, 1838, and together with her husband, emigrated to this country in 1844, and settled in Geneva, Ill., and from there they removed to Northfield, and in 1863, again returned to Geneva.

Nine children were born to them, seven of whom survive the mother. They are Mrs. Knowles, who lived with the parents, Mrs. P. T. Bartholomew, of Geneva, Mrs. George Denton and Charles Boyes, of Chicago, Mrs. Nellie Crocker of Hammond, La., Thomas, a resident of Kansas, and Albert, who has cast his lot in Colorado.

Funeral services were held at the family residence on May 2, 1896, attended by a large number of relatives, old-time friends and citizens, who all learned to respect and love the dear Sister. She was then laid to rest, until the archangel's trump shall call to life the peaceful sleepers in Jesus.

Our dear aged Brother Boyes and family have been called upon to endure a double sorrow. On Sunday, May 3, Mrs. Nellie Crocker, their daughter and sister, died at Hammond, Louisiana, and was buried at Geneva, Ill., Wednesday May 6. This occurrence is certainly very sad, and the family may feel well assured of the heart-felt sympathy of all who know them.

In early life Sister Boyes was connected with the Disciple Church, but after coming to this country, through the instrumentality of Dr. John Thomas, and others she learned the way of the Lord more perfectly. Learning the grand gospel message of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, both herself and husband were baptized for the remission of sins, and since then, they have both continued steadfast in the faith, and were not ashamed either to confess or defend it. They both had the courage of their convictions.

In early life Brother and Sister Boyes, my father Joseph Wilson, and Uncles Benjamin and James Wilson, and Brothers Richard and William Appleyard, were all children together, and grew up together and all became obedient to the faith, and never failed to rejoice in it.

On her death-bed Sister Boyes said: "Tell Uncle James (who is in his ninety-first year) to meet me in the kingdom." She frequently exclaimed: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness." The blessed hope was a great source of joy and comfort to her in her last moments.

Before she expired, she reached forth her hand, patted her husband on the cheek, and said loving words of comfort, to cheer his sorrowing heart.

Oh, how sweet the consciousness, that when we come to lay life's burdens down, that we have maintained the faith, and a godly walk in life; it is worth far more than the vanity of this frail life, with its fleeting pleasures.

The day is near at hand when death will give place to life, sorrow and tears to joy and gladness, and never more shall we follow our loved ones to the silent city of the dead. Dear children of God, take courage, rejoice in hope, be steadfast in the faith, the glad day of release so long looked for by worthies of old is about to burst upon the world in all its grandeur, when all the holy sleepers shall come forth from their dusty beds, clothed in immortal youth, singing redemption's song on Zion's glorious heights, shouting triumphant victory over death and the grave. Hallelujah! Praise ye the Lord!

Poetry.

"Pure Words."—Rev. xii.

O Lord, thy words are precious and pure.
Like silver in the furnace tried.
Then are they not for salvation sure,
When seven times they are purified?

And thou hast kept them by thy power,
From all the wiles of wicked men;
O let me linger in this fruitful bower
Let me drink of the sweets of this glen

The glen and the bower is surely thy sword.
It is only thy truth can make free,
O sanctify Lord by thy dear precious Word:
Keep us safe for thy kingdom and thee.

The "Man Child" of Rev. xii. Who is He?

I read Brother W. H. Wilson's article in respect to said Child and what others have said by way of endorsement. Now there are three parties, the woman, the man-child and that remnant of her seed that keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. Now if I were looking here for a party to be caught up to God, or to his throne, or to meet the Lord in the air, I would say that it would be this remnant, at least I would take my chances in this crowd. As the woman brought forth this male-child, she is his mother, why take the child, and leave the mother in the wilderness? But this woman is not Paul's mother and he will be with those that will meet the Lord in the air. Jerusalem that now is, is in bondage with her children, but the exalted Jerusalem is free, and she is our mother. See Gal. iv. 21 to the end of the chapter. Paul here refers in both cases to the literal city. Again we read that the first dominion will come to the tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, and the kingdom will come to the daughter of Jerusalem, the future, the exalted City of the Great King, the Joy of the whole earth is our mother, our homecity.

In the new birth-day when the bride is born from above, the daughter takes the mother's names. Zion, Jerusalem, in other words the citizenship takes the name of the city. Then Palestine will be a heavenly country, the kingdom will be heavenly, Jerusalem will be a heavenly city and the redeemed a heavenly community. Did it ever occur to Brother Wilson and others, that the translators may have been confused as to this woman and child of Rev. xii? They must have thought that this child was God's Anointed. Two Greek words in this connection demand notice, one rendered "caught up," the other "to God." We years ago, like others, was confused over this chapter, and not being a Greek scholar, the best I could do was to turn to the lexicon. The word rendered "caught-up" I found defined to be "borne away," "banished away," "seized as by a wild animal and borne away" without defining the direction taken, up, down, east, west, north or south. The one rendered, "to God and to his throne," in Rev. xiii. 6, and other texts is rendered "against." "The beast opened his mouth in blasphemy against God." If this be correct, this child was Rome, arrayed against God, and against his throne. Jesus said to a certain disciple, "have I been so long time with thee and yet thou hast not known me?" I would say to Brother Wilson and others, has the Man of Sin been with us 1226 years and yet you dont know him? He was to be a child of the church, and to sit as God in the church, the temple of God. Brethren, you remind me of scenes that occured in the times of the crusades. Figuratively speaking the pope stood with club in hand looking for anti-christ to arise. Has not her child been against God and against his throne? Did he not rule the all nations of the vision with a rod of iron this woman having made all the nations drunken with the wine of her fornication? What is left for another anti-christ to do unless he should sober them up? The translators make John to say that, "the woman fled into the wilderness, where she has a place prepared of God," making it appear that God prepared this place for her, but the Greek word "of, of God," has this primary signification, "from, away from, that from which an active person or thing sets off, and it denotes separation." The facts are as follws: —The woman of the vision lusted for place and power in the old dragon's empire, and to this end she brought forth a prince or ruler of nations, and taking another head she separated herself from God. Thus, a place or position was prepared for her where they, the nations fed her. The one body of the church was espoused to Christ, as Christ's virgins, Hale brings forth a male or female before the marriage it is positive evidence that she has fallen. She brought forth a male, took him as husband and he became father to her children—a war occurred in the heaven, the firmament of the dragon's power, between the Michael and his messengers, and the dragon and his messengers. The Michael, this name signifies, "who as God." This is what Paul said of the Man of sin, who as God sitting in the temple of God. As the woman reigned over the kings of the earth, here Michael must have gained the ascendency over the dragon and his messengers. Look at his head and horns and discern the kings over whom she reigned. The vision of chpter xii. closes leaving her in her place in the wilderness, the place for which she lusted when she brought forth a ruler of the nations.

In conclusion, let me say to all who love the truth, I have manuscript on hand for a pamphlet, the title of which is "The Coming of the Day of God," setting forth coming events, the events that usher in this noted day. If there are any that desire to aid in the publication of said work, that God's poor may have the little book, the door is open. Address me at Prescott, Kan., Box 25.

Judge Not.

It is with wonder and astonishment as we sit in profound meditation, recalling to memory the many hearts that have been made to break, and the many eyes that have been made to send forth bitter tears, by the unjust and ungospel judges that darken our land, and cause many to fall by the wayside and there be left to die. O the sad many that have forgotten, or never have known something of the unmeasurable love of our Savior, who suffered no unjust judgment by which we could profit, if we only would stop and deeply consider before we utter words of wounding condemnation. Christ has not called the saints to judge the world yet, be not hasty to take the power of judging to yourself, perhaps you will not be called to the marriage of the Lamb. Think of the many that are trying to cheat the blessed Master out of the honored position that he alone occupies by exalting themselves, speaking great swelling words. Hear him. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." Be patient, dear Souls, if worthy, you will receive the honored reward in due season. Let the matter rest with the one who doeth all things well. "Let every man prove his own work and then shall he have rejoicing in himself and not another." Eph. vi. 4, 5. "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; Prove your own selves." 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Yes, this is what interests every true Christian heart, "Am I in the faith," not is my brother or somebody else, but am I? Do I possess enough of charity to prove myself? Take the X rays and examine your own hearts and lives, and take on, perhaps the much needed repair, before the harvest time appears. Let the angelic reapers weed out the tares in their own good time. If there is to be any casting away, that fair flower of purity, that birth Star of Bethlehem whose brightness far exceeds the noon day sun; and whose life knew no sin, whose heart felt no selfish emotion, bids fear of man's weak, unjust judgment, depart and look far beyond to the age where persecution cannot enter, and while we wait, let us kindle up our smouldering faith with the Christ-like example of love. Don't be hasty in judging, for Paul says, "Him that is weak in the faith receive, but not to judge his doubtful thoughts." Rom. xiv. 1. Why dost thou judge thy brother, or why dost thou set at naught thy brother, for we all shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ." "Let us not therefore judge one another any more, but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." "Wherefore receive ye one an other as Christ also received us to the glory of God." Hear what the just Judge has to say, whose voice has been echoing and re-echoing down the dark and misty past, and today he says, "Judge not." Do you heed his command? He says, "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments," and just so sure as we mount the unauthorized throne of judgment, we do not love the Master. Hear Paul the choosen one, "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his master he standeth or falleth. Yea he shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand." This, brother, seems enough to satisfy any reasonable mind, without giving any more proof, but to the unreasonable mind I will give a few more proof texts; showing if they possess Samson like strength in the faith, aught to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please themselves. Let the past with its blightings and devourings of one another be past with its heartaches and disappointments. Do not require others to measure their knowledge of divine inspiration by your standard, it is far better for them to grow until they meet the stature of a full grown man in Christ Jesus. Now to those with saddened hearts, caused by unjust judgment, Satan is the father of all oppression and his followers belong to the world, "When smitten on the one cheek turn the other also," perhaps they will be ashamed to strike the second time. Paul says, "But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you or of man's judgment. Yea, I judge not mine ownself." "But he that judgest me is the Lord." "Therefore judge nothing before the time until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness and will make manifest the counsels of the heart." 1 Cor. iv. 3, 4, 5. Just think what the Savior suffered for you of untold agony, caused by unjust judgment, and while the enemy death was claiming his life-blood, purchasing the redemption of fallen humanity, his prayer was, "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." Let this spirit be also in you, looking for the soon coming Savior, who will judge the world in righteousness.

THE CALL.

To-day my Brother, Sister dear,
Comes the call to you and me.
"Let your light so shine before the world."
That others the call may see.

Prepare to meet your Savior dear,
When he comes with the thief-like call;
And enter the pavilion of God,
While is poured these vials on all.

Awake ye slumbering virgins wake,
And hear the warning cry:
Behold the darkness draweth near,
That dark, and day is nigh.

But when this mournful time shall end,
The marriage of the Lamb draws near.
An angel chains the demoniac power,
And bids death not appear.

O, what a joyful time 'twill be,
When Christ with the saints will descend,
And begin his triumphal reign of peace
On earth with the children of men.

The sleeping millions will be raised,
In that regeneration day,
And learn the news of our God,
The true life-giving way.

But wo! to this blessed day shall close,
And satan shall be bound again,
O for a faith that will not shrink,
A courage that will stand.

O think my friends, calmly think,
We can escape this fate,
If we heed the call of to-day,
And enter into rest.

Temperance.

It is not good neither to eat flesh nor drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth or is offended or is made weak." Rom. xiv. 21.

In looking over the records of the Patriarchs of Old, Gen. ix. 21, tells that Noah drank of the wine and was drunken. We do not doubt these statements relative to Noah's becoming drunk from wine from his own vineyard. But all temperance people would rather there had been no record of that kind kept against this pious old clergyman. But perhaps he did not know the intoxicating quality of his wine. It seemed disgusting to his sons. But suppose we deny this record. Many of the sons of men of the present day can testify to having seen fathers of high standing (Religiously,) Drunken on native wine and hard cider, and therefore know the consequences of wine drinking, as leading to intemperance, that we who are strong are afraid to drink wine, or beer, for fear we might become excessive drum-drinkers and there by set an example before others who are weaker than ourselves. We therefore are made to deny ourselves on certain occasions. When we see it is our duty to protect, and guide a weak brother who is inclined to excessive uses of meats or drinks, opium, tobacco, passionate, indolent or visionary. Any unprincipled thing or habit which draws the mind and wrecks the body and ruins the souls of men, and brings them into that despotism of habit that nothing short of a moral war of independence which will tax all the strength, can command, and all they can borrow from their neighbors to deliver them, we are commanded to shun. But few people form habits of wrong-doing deliberately, they glide into them by degrees, by falling in company with associates, whose ambitions are inclined along these lines, until we have made shipwrecks of ourselves. So we should look well that we are not drifting, and be right sure we have a fast hold on the helm of self-control that our boat is not liable to drift into that bewildering whirlpool, where the breakers of life forever roar under the lee, and averse gales continually blow on the shore. If we give way to our natural appetites or favorite desires we may be hopelessly ruined and become a castaway and stumbling-block, to many a weak Brother, and thus become accountable for his downfall.

Note.—In the Authorized Version of the Bible, Acts xiii. 20, Paul says that God gave unto Israel "Judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet." Josephus and the Vatican and Syriac Versions, and the Diaglott, confirm the statement of the A. V. The Diaglott adds: "The date given here is at variance with the statement found in 1 Kings vi. 1. The text in Kings has been corrupted by substituting the Hebrew character daleth for hay (he), which is very similar in form. This would make 580 years (instead of 480) from the exode to the building of the temple, and exactly agree with Paul's chronology."

The above chronology is the result of extensive study and research, and is derived from Pagan, Jewish and Christian sources.

Purchased Possession.

A possession has been purchased for the people of God. In Ephesians i. 13, 14, the Holy Spirit is declared to be the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession. In Paul's wonderful defence before Agrippa, instead of claiming a new hope and faith, he declared that he stood and was judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers and for that very hope was accused of the Jews. Acts xxvi. 6-7. Ye heard the gospel that ye believed ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise. Eph. i. 13. When a piece of property is purchased and possession is not immediately given, a deposit is usually made as "earnest money;" in this case we have a purchased possession not yet redeemed and the Spirit is given as an earnest of our inheritance until the redemption take place. "Ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise." Now what possession has been purchased for the people of God? Do you say heaven? Then I ask of whom was it purchased? Was the ownership of heaven ever transferred, and is it purchased and not yet redeemed? Impossible. If we apply this language to the earth all is clear. This possession was lost through the fall of Adam. He purchased the possession with a costly sacrifice and will redeem it when he comes again.

Fred Mishler.

Question.

I ask the brother that signed, Saved by Law or Gospel, to explain, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Why should it be nailed to the Cross? Is it not a fact still we don't believe in God the Holy Ghost, and God the Son, but in the one God and Jesus Christ the Son of God?

Obituary.

Gideon Alspach was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, May 25, 1830, and died in Miami County, Indiana, Mar. 30, 1895, aged 65 years, 10 months and 5 days. Near 30 years ago Bro. Alspach embraced that great central truth of Rev., "Life only through Jesus the Christ by a resurrection from the dead to eternal life." This great central truth was made the basis of remarks by the writer, in which a reasonable solution was given of "why death was permitted to enter the world." The hope of life through Christ the "Life-Giver" was shown to be the foundation of the faith once delivered to the saints.

J. F. Wagoner.

Thos. L. Yories was born in Marshall County, Indiana, Feb. 22, 1848, and died May 3, 1896; aged 48 years, 3 months and 11 days. March 7, 1886 he married Samantha Clevenger. To them were born three children, Howard E., Nora May and James Iden. In November, 1876, his wife died and both sons have followed her. James Iden died in infancy; Howard E. grew to manhood and died but two years ago, June 26th, 1879, he married Hattie E. Deline. To them were born three children, Ida Laverne, William Clyde, and Grove D. His wife and four children are left to mourn his death. Discourse by the writer based on Rom. v. 12. Death was not a factor in the original plan. Life was the basic element in the plan, death only became necessary when the divine law had been disobeyed. Now life only through our Lord Jesus Christ constitutes the Christian hope.

J. F. Wagoner.

Albert J. Overman fell asleep in Jesus of consumption at his home, Bro. Overman was forty-five years, three months and twenty days old. He was a member of the Church of God in Christ at Otto, Kansas, from which place he removed to Oklahoma. His sickness was long and he suffered much, but was kindly cared for by the loving hands of his patient wife. May God bless and support her in her great affliction. The night before his death he called his wife and children around him and bade them all good by, and said he had tried to be a good father to them and wished them to live a good and honest life. The next morning at twenty-five minutes of five he closed his eyes, with the bright hope of soon being awakened by the voice of him who shall call the sleeping saints to arise, and inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. A few words of comfort were spoken by the writer from Job xiv. 14. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss. May the Lord sustain them in their affliction, and our prayer is that they may be an unbroken family around his throne.

R. J. McBride.

James Ralph Hicklin, aged 21 years, 3 months and 20 days, died April 11, 1895 at his father's home Troutdale, Oregon. Elder Steers immersed this young brother seven years ago. In his fourteenth year he began to serve the Master by faith repentance, and obedience. He was well instructed in the plan of salvation. He talked much during his sickness of his purpose if he should recover, of continuing to live a Christian life expressing an abiding hope in his Redeemer. The following are some of his expressions during his sickness, "If I get well no one shall ever see me do wrong." "I am not afraid to die!" His great hope centered in the speedy coming of Christ of which in boyhood he loved to talk and in which he had unshaken faith during his sickness. He was patient throughout his suffering. While we realize that the world is loosing more in the death of a Christian than would be lost in the taking away of one that does evil and opposes good, how full of hope and comfort and assurance to all are the words, "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing but should raise it up again at the last day." How like balm to the wounded heart the recollection of words like, "I am not afraid to die." While we cannot understand in the anguish of parting why even in the strength of early manhood disease and suffering and death should end the work of those to whom we expected many years of life to be added, we know this and it is the hope that gives a sure and steadfast anchorage, the dead do not suffer; the dead will live again. The few years that they sleep will be but as a night of rest from weary toil and the day beyond will be without end. "Be ye ready."

Report of Labor.

I have revisited La Camas, Washington. Began meetings Friday night April 10th.

On Saturday I received a message from Troutdale, Ore. that Brother Ralph Hicklin had died and that his esteemed parents wanted me to attend the funeral. I crossed the Columbia river to their home and on Sunday instead of engaging in burying the believers in La Camas in baptism, we were at Troutdale, assisting in burying a beloved brother in the silent grave.

We resumed our work at LaCamas on Monday evening and continued over the following Sunday, April 19. In the afternoon about five hundred people assembled at a pretty lake a mile from town. From a log on the bank we talked to them of our work of symbolizing the death and burial of Christ, and our hope of life in the resurrection through his name. The crowd of whom many at the start seemed boisterous, and to be there only for sport and amusement, became very quiet and showed more respect and solemnity than we had anticipated. Nine were immersed of whom I believe none had ever heard the tidings concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ before we visted the place in March.

Others will be obedient in the near future.

In the months of March and April, I gave thirty-one discourses in this place.

The members will select officers at my next meeting. I hope they will be a living church. I am to give regular appointments during the summer.

Hesaias. (Isa' C. V.) Chap. 27.

1. In that day God will bring the sanctified and the great and the strong sword upon the dragon a fleeing serpent, upon the dragon a crooked serpent: he will take away the dragon.

2. In that day there will be a beautiful vineyard: to rule over it will be a desirable thing.

3. I am a walled-city, beleaguered city though: in vain do I water it. For by night will it be taken and by day will the wall fall.

4. There is no day that hath not laid hold upon it: Who will set me to watch to guard stubble in the field? Because of this warfare I have rejected it. Accordingly the Lord hath done all that he hath determined: I have been burned down with fire.

5. Those who dwell in it will call for help: Let us make peace with him: Let us make peace;

6. Those who come are offspring of Jakoob. He will bud, and Israel will flower out, and the inhabited will have been filled with his fruit.

7. Shall he not even as he smote in like manner also be smitten? And as he took away in like manner have been taken away?

8. Fighting and reproaching he will send them out: Wast thou not meditating in thy harsh spirit to take them away in a spirit of anger?

9. Therefore Jakoob's transgression will have been taken away; and this is his blessing when he shall take away his sin, whenever they shall make all the stones of their heathen altars to be cut down like fine dust as it were; and their tree-simuli not remain, and their idols shall have been cut off like a forest afar off.

10. The flock that inhabiteth it will be left unrestrained like a flock that hath been forsaken: and it will be a long time for pasturage and there will flocks find rest.

11. And after a time there will be no green thing in it, because of its having become dried up: There will be women coming from gazing there: For it is not a laity that hath understanding: Therefore the One who created them will (or may or can) not pity them nor may the One who moulded them show mercy:

12. And it will be in that day that God will hedge in from the intervening canal of the river unto Brinokorouroun: And may ye have gathered together the sons of Israel:

13. And it will be in that day that they will blow with the great trumpet, and those in the lost country of the Assurians and those lost in Aigupt os will come and worship the Lord upon the sacred mount in Hierousalem.

CHAPTER 28.

1. Woe unto the crown of your haughty pride, O ye birdlings of Ephraim, thou flower that hath fallen off from the glory upon the top of the fat mountain, ye who are drunken without wine.

2. Lo strong and severe is the anger of the Lord, like hail that is borne down, that hath no covering shelter from it, that is borne down with violence, like much water, very much that swelleth through a province, it will give no interval of rest to the hand: With hands.

3. And with feet will the crown of the haughty pride have been trodden down, ye birdlings of Ephraim.

4. And there will be the flower that hath fallen off from the hope of the glory upon the top of the high mountain: Like a forerunner (early fruit) of a fig-tree will it be: The One who seeth it, before he hath taken it in his hand, will he desire to drink it down.

5. In that day the Lord of Sabaoth will be the crown of the hope that hath been plaited of the glory for the remnant of the laity.

6. They will have been left unto a spirit of judgment upon judgment even upon the strength of those who hinder the taking away.

7. For these have been filled with wine; They have gone astray because of strong drink; Priest and prophet have stood out because of the strong drink; they have inordinately desired because of the wine; they have been shaken with drunkenness; This is a common report.

8. A curse will devour this counsel; For this is the counsel that comes of selfishness.

9. To whom have we announced evil things and to whom have we announced intelligence? To you who have been weaned from milk, who have been snatched from the breast.

10. Expect tribulation upon tribulation hope upon hope, yet a little, yet a little.

11. Because of a belittling of lips, through another tongue that they will talk to this laity with:

12. Saying unto them, this is the rest for the one who hungereth and this your fracture, and they have not been willing to hear.

13. And the oracular-word of God to them will be tribulation upon tribulation, hope upon hope, yet a little, yet a little, that they may go their way and fall backward, and be fractured and encounter danger and be taken.

14. Therefore may ye have heard the Word of the Lord, ye men of tribulation and ye rulers of this laity in Hierousaleem:

15. Because ye have said, we have made a covenant with Hades (the grave) and conquets with death, a cyclone that beareth away, if it shall have passed by, will not come upon us: We have made a lie of our hope, and we shall be sheltered with a lie:

16. Therefore thus saith the Lord, the Lord, Lo, I am laying into the foundations of Sion, a precious, chosen, honored, chief-corner-stone, into the foundations thereof, and the one who putteth faith in the fact shall not have been put to shame.

17. And I shall dispose judicial-procedure unto hope, and my doing of mercy will be unto true measures: and ye are trusting in vain in a lie: Because a cyclone shall not have passed by you:

18. No, and it will have taken away your covenant of death, and your hope that is in relation to Hades shall not abide: a cyclone that carrieth away will it be, if it shall have come upon you: a thing to tread down will ye be for it.

19. When it passeth by it will take you: In the morning, in the morning will it pass by in the day-time, and at night there will be a bad hope: May ye have learned to listen.

20. Ye straightened ones: We are unable to fight, and we are too weak to be assembled together.

21. Even like a mountain for irreverent ones will the Lord arise, and it will be that in the valley of Gabaoon with anger will he do his works, a work of bitterness: and his anger will use in a strange way, and his corruption will be a strange corruption.

22. And may ye not have rejoiced and may your bonds not have become strong: because things that have been consummated and cut off in one piece have I heard from the Lord of Sabaoth, things which he will do upon all the earth.

23. Mark it well and hear my voice: Take heed and hearken unto my words.

24. The ploughman will not plough all the day long, will he? Or will he not make ready to sow before he hath tilled the earth?

25. Will he not level the face thereof, and then sow a little melanthion and Kumin (herbs used for spices or condiments) and again sow wheat and barley and rye in thy borders?

26. And thou shouldst have been chastened with the judgment of thy God and shouldst have rejoiced.

27. For not with harshness is the melanthion accustomed to be lessened, nor will the wheel of the heavy threshing-wagon go around over the Kumin, but with a rod (lit. sceptre) is the melanthion and the kumin beaten:

28. Along with bread will it have been (as a condiment of course) for not forever am I going to be wrathful with you, nor will the voice of my bitterness tread you down.

29. And these prodigies have come forth from the Lord of Sabaoth. May ye have been counseled. Ye have exalted vain consolation.

COMMENT.

The 27th chapter opens with a remarkable prophecy of the overthrow and discomfiture of "that Old Dragon" as he is denominated in John's Apocalypse—"A crooked serpent" "The Dragon" he is called here. "The great and the strong sword" referred to here is no doubt, as explained elsewhere in the Scriptures "The Word of God." "The vineyard" also here referred to is fully explained to us in its parable import—the taking away of the hedge of the law—the occupancy of it by "the swine of the forest" and "the spoiling of it by every passer-by." So we are prepared for the responsive help in answer to the cry here from "offspring of Jakoob" who, were told, will "bud" "and Israel will flower out and the inhabited will have been filled with his fruit;" but retribution on "the swine" comes first as we have it stated here. The interval of desertion of the land and its waste and dried up condition, the long period of the "treading down of the Gentiles" which has but recently been fulfilled and a partial restoration began in the restoration of "the early and latter rains" within the last ten years—all brought out here in brief in this prophecy, even to the traveling women tourists coming "to gaze" at the spectacle and reflect on the ruins as given historically of the downfall and desolation of God's people. And it must be about time for "the trumpet" to blow here spoken of in the 13th verse with which the chapter closes.

Chapter 28th opens with coming woe and tribulation to God's people and the special ground for the chastening as here given is their sinful alliance and conquets with Ephraim, and their hope in idolatry, designated here as "a covenant with Hades (the grave) and conquets with death."

With the 16th (a double octave by the way) verse begins the famous Messianic prophecy made clear to us now in the later Scriptures of the New Covenant. The venality of idolatry and the fallacy of any hope based upon it; here as in so many other places in Sacred Writ distinctly stated to be "trusting in a lie."

Reference here again made in the 22nd verse to "the things consummated and cut off in one piece" which we have already had and commented on in this book.

Then comes with the 24th verse the strikingly clear and beautiful illustration of the "ploughman" and God's husbandry. This passage is very poorly and inefficiently translated in the C. V. and R. V. Read it carefully as here rendered and see how wonderfully suggestive it is and how much light radiates from it in the direction of God's great and beneficent purpose in creation and redemption. For it is an X ray with divine potency to light up the secret recesses of this old Adamic man of ours for the coming surgery of the Great Physician who has promised "to take away even the heart of stone out of our flesh and give us a heart of flesh," and to write anew his law upon the tablets thereof.

Announcement.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at Moorlee school house in Furnas County, commencing Friday, May 29th and holding over Sunday.

We would be glad to have as many of the brothers and sisters at this meeting as can possibly come. We could encourage one another by our presence, and help to make the meeting a pleasant and profitable one. Come in the spirit of the Master and we feel sure that you will be repaid for so doing. Each congregation is requested to send in a report, and also their vote as to where they wish the next Annual Conference to be held.

Yours in love of the truth.

REXA M. GORMAN, Sec.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in Indiana, will be held at the Antioch Meeting-house, five miles South of Plymouth, commencing on Friday June 12, 1896, at 2.30 p. m. and continuing over the following Sunday. Believing as we do that the gospel dispensation is very near to its close, and the day is far spent, let us be up and doing lest the night cometh when no man can work and we be overtaken as a thief in the night.

To all of like precious faith, we say come. Come and enjoy another good meeting, renew your strength and energy in the cause and encourage others.

J. F. WAGONER, Pres.
A. C. ROBERTS, Sec.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God, in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Brady, Kalamazoo Co., Michigan, commencing Thursday evening June 4th, 1896, and continue over the following Sunday.

Friends coming from the North, reach Vicksburg via the G. R. and I. R. R., which leaves Grand Rapids at 2: p. m. and will be met Thursday and Friday. Those coming from Hastings will take the G. R. and I. at Kalamazoo. All friends coming from the north will be met at Vicksburg. Those coming from the south will be met at Mendon, on Thursday and Friday. The train reaches Mendon about 11 A. M. There will be no special trains to meet friends on Saturday for the brethren all wish to have some good of the meetings themselves, and it is hoped all who wish to attend will make an effort to reach there by Thursday or Friday. Elder L. C. Chase of Adrian, Michigan, has promised to be with us, also Elder R. W. Woodward of Dutton Michigan. It is not often we have an opportunity of meeting together from different points of the State, to hear and to study God's Word. So come all that can and help to make this our Annual Conference as interesting as possible. The brethren and sisters of Brady send a most cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. All will be heartily welcomed.

EMMA JACKMAN, Sec.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall County, Ind.

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Some will say, "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so again times again, and yet, the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Address of Treasurer of Ladies Evangelical Aid Society, Miss Emma Jackman, Box 384, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Here is a splendid opportunity of visiting the west. The Nickel Plate Road has authorized low excursion rates to Ottawa, Kansas, on May 17th, 21st, and 22nd for the Annual Convention of the Dunkard's, which convenes at Ottawa on May 26th. Tickets may be extended thirty days from the date of issue by depositing them with the joint agent at Ottawa. The uniform courtesy of employes, the best of roadbeds, and the splendid modern equipments of this Line has made it the Popular Low Rate Line for all points west.—May 21.

"When the hour of trouble comes—and seldom may it visit your ladyship—and when the hour o'death comes to high and low—long and late may it be yours; oh, my lady! it is no what we have done for ourselv's, but what we have done for it hers, that we think on most pleasantly."

Special rates have been authorized via the Nickel Plate Road to Ottawa, Kan., on May 17th, 21st, and 22nd for the Annual Dunkard's Convention. Tickets may be extended thirty days by depositing them with the joint agent. Any agent of this Popular Low Rate Line will be pleased to furnish information.—May 21.

Poetry.

Safe in His Hand.

Whate'er the future
God hath for me,
Shadow or sunshine
As pleaseth Thee;
If dark my pathway,
The way rud rough,
God is my Father,
That is enough.

Oh, how he careth,
All through the way
Leading me onward
Gently each day;
He will not give me
Aught that is ill.
Though it be sorrow,
Working his will.

Bright shines the promise,
Faith out to vain,
Jesus is coming,
Coming again;
That hour I know not.
His time is best,
So I am waiting,
Calmly at rest.

I am unworthy,
Jesus is worthy,
Here I repose;
So I go trusting
Thro' this lone land,
Leaving my future
Safe in his hand.

Hesaias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 29.

1. Woe unto thee, O Ariel, thou city which David warred against. Ye have gathered together products year by year. Eat, for ye are eating them with Moonb:

2. For I shall afflict Ariel, and her strength and her wealth will be mine.

3. And I shall evlron thee as did David, and I shall cast a rampart about thee, and I shall set towers about thee;

4. And thy words will have been brought low to the earth and thy words will sink into the earth: And they will be like those who speak from out the earth, will thy voice be, and unto the foundation will thy voice grow weak.

5. And the wealth of the irreverent will be fine dust as it were from a wheel, and dust as it were that is borne away will the multitude of those who oppress thee be. And it will be like a piercing-stroke, a sudden thing:

6. From the Lord of Sabaoath: for a visitation will there be with thunder and a quaking and a great voice, a cyclone that beareth away, and a flame of fire that devoureth:

7. And the wealth of all the nations as many as have camped against Ariel and all those who campagainst Hierousaleem and all those gathered together against her and those who are afflicting her will be like one who dreameth in sleep by night.

8. And like those who drink and eat in their sleep, and when they have stood up and out of it, an empty dream was it; and in the way that the one who thirsteth dreameth that he is drinking, and when he hath stood up and out of it he still thirsteth, and his soul hath hoped in vain, even so will be the wealth of all the nations who have camped against Mount Sloon.

9. Faint and be astounded and stagger not from strong drink nor from wine;

10. Because the Lord hath given you to drink in a spirit of slumber, and it will close their eyes and the eyes of their prophets and their rulers, who see the hidden things.

11. And it will be to you that all these oracular statements will be like the words of this book (Isaiah) which, if they shall give it to a man who knoweth letters well (a learned man) saying, read these, he will even say, I am unable to read them, for they have been sealed:

2. And this book will have been given into the hands of a man who doth not know letters well (unlearned man) and one will say unto him, read this; and he will say, I do not know letters well.

13. And the Lord hath said, This laity draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and with their lips they honor me; but their heart they withhold far from me. In vain though do they reverence me while they teach commandments and teachings of men.

14. Therefore lo, I am going to again change this laity; and I am going to change (transpose or translate) them and I am going to lose the wisdom of their wise and I am going to hide the understanding of their understanding ones.

15. Woe unto those who make counsel deep and not through the Lord. Woe unto those who are making counsel in secret; and their works will be in darkness; and they will say, Who hath seen us; and who will comprehend us or the things that we are doing?

16. No? Will ye not have been accounted clay of the potter? Shall the moulded thing say unto the one who moulded it, Thou didst not mould me? or the created thing to the Creator, Thou didst not create me in an understanding way?

17. Yet a little while and the Libanos will have been changed as is Mount Chermel and Chermel will have been accounted a forest.

18. And deaf people will hear in that day words of a book and those in darkness and those in the mist, eyes of blind people will see.

19. And beggar's for the Lord's sake will be glad with rejoicing, and men who have become hopeless will have been filled with rejoicing.

20. A transgressor hath left off and a haughty one hath perished, and those who transgress in respect to evil will have utterly perished:

21. And those who cause men to sin in word: And all those who convict in gateways will dispose of as a cause of stumbling, because they have turned aside a justified one unto unjust ways.

22. Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto the house of Jakoob which he set apart from out (source) Habraam: Not now will Jakoob have been put to shame, nor now his face change color.

23. But when they shall have seen their offspring to be my works, for my sake will they sanctify my name, and sanctify the saint of Jakoob and the God of Israel will they have feared.

24. And those who have erred in understanding in the spirit will comprehend, and those who murmur will have learned to hearken, and the tongues that stammer will have learned to talk peace.

CHAPTER 30.

1. Woe unto you, ye apostates, saith the Lord. Ye have made counsel not through me and compacts not through my spirit to the extent of adding sins to sins;

2. Ye who are going your way to go down into Aiguptos, and have not asked me, that ye may be responsively helped by Pharaoo and be sheltered by Aiguptio!:

3. For Pharaoo's shelter for you will be unto shame and unto you who trust in Aiguptos a reproach.

4. Because there are in Tanis, wicked messengers as chief-leaders.

5. In vain will they toil for a laity who will not profit them in the way of responsive-help, but in the way of shame and reproach.

6. The vision of the four-footed in the wilderness. In their tribulation and narrowness there was a lion and a lion's whelp; Therefrom also there were asps and progeny of flying-asps, who were carrying their wealth upon asses and camels, unto a nation that will not profit them.

7. Aiguptioi will profit you in a useless and empty way; Tell them that this your help is useless.

8. Now then sit down and write upon a table and in a book these things will be for days of a period and until unto the aubaute-age.

9. Because the laity are untrustworthy, false sons who have not been willing to hearken unto the law of God,

10. Who say unto the prophets, Do not tell us and unto those who see the visions do not tell us but talk to us and tell us another way to err.

11. And turn us from this way: Take this path from us and take away from us the oracular-word of Israel.

12. Therefore thus saith the sacred One of Israel, because ye have distrusted these words and have hoped in a lie and because thou hast murmured and trusted in this word.

13. Therefore this your sin will be like a wall of a walled city that hath been taken that falleth suddenly whose fall is suddenly present.

14. And the fall thereof will be like the crushing of an earthen vessel of a potter, so fine that one cannot find a potsherd there among in which thou mayest carry fire, and in which thou mayest sip a little water.

15. Thus saith the Lord, the Lord, the Sacred One of Israel, when thou turnest back and sighest, then wilt thou have been saved and comprehend where thou wast: When thou didst trust in the inutilities your strength became inutility, and ye were not willing to hear;

16. But said, Upon horses will we flee: Therefore will ye flee and upon light horsemen will we leg: Therefore those who pursue after you will be light.

17. A thousand at the voice of one will flee, and at the voice of five will many flee, until ye have been left behind like a flag-staff upon a mountain, and like one who carrieth a signal upon a hill.

18. And again God waiteth to pity you, and therefore will he have been exalted in showing you mercy, because the Lord our God is Judge; Blessed-happy are those who wait for him.

19. Because a saintly laity will take up their abode in Sloon, and Hierousaleem will say with lamentation, Have mercy on me. He will have mercy on thee: The voice of thy cry hath he hearkened unto, when he hath perceived it.

20. And the Lord will give unto you bread of tribulation and water of narrowness, and never again shall those who lead thee astray draw nigh unto thee; because thine eyes will see those who lead thee astray;

21. And thine ears will hear the words of those behind thee who have led thee astray, who say, this is the way; Let us go our way therein whether to the right hand or the left.

22. And thou wilt abhor the idols plated with silver and gold: Thou wilt make them fine dust and wilt winnow them away like water of one who sifteth apart and like dung wilt thou thrust them away.

23. Then will there be the shower for the seed of thy land, and the bread of the product of thy land will be unto antiety and unctions; and thy cattle will have feed in that day in a fat place and in a wide pasture.

24. Your bulls and your cattle that work the land will eat chaff made up with winnowed barley.

25. And there will be upon every high mountain and upon every uplifted hill water going its way through in that day; when many shall perish and towers shall fall.

26. And the light of the moon will be like the light of the sun, and the light of the sun will be sevenfold, in the day when the Lord shall heal the woe of thy plague.

27. Lo, the name of the Lord cometh through time, a flaming passion; with glory the oracular Word of his lips, an oracular Word full of wrath, and the wrath of his anger will devour like fire.

28. And his spirit will come like water that rusheth in a ravine up to the neck, and it will have been raised up to disturb nations in vain error, and error will pursue after them and take them to their face.

29. Doth it not behoove you continually to rejoice and to go your way into my sacred places always as though ye were keeping festival, and as though ye were rejoicing to enter in with flute unto the mountain of the Lord unto the God of Israel?

30. And the Lord will make the glory of his voice to be heard, and the passion of his arm to show with anger and wrath and a flame of fire that devoureth will be thunder violently, and like water and hail that is borne down with violence.

31. For through the voice of the Lord will Assurion have been diminished, with the blow with which he will smite them.

32. And it will be unto him round about, whence the hope of their responsive-help was in which he relied: They will war against him with tympum and cithera from out a revolution.

33. For days before them will have been demanded: Hath it also not been made ready for thee to rule as king, a deep valley, trees that lie down, fire and much wood? The anger of the Lord is as it were in a valley burning with brimstone.

COMMENT.

The 29th chapter opens with the coming wo of Ariel. This was the old Chananitish name of the Sioon portion of old Hierousaleem.

The prophetic woe and doom begins to widen out in the 7th verse according to the signification of the name Ariel (without a root of mercy) to take in all the so-called wealth, the unsanctified wealth of all the nations. "The spirit of slumber" here prophesied seems to be still strong upon God's chosen laity and the unregenerate. The 11th verse states clearly the effect on the readers of even this book of Hesaias. This applied still further in the 12th verse. The consequences follow in the 13th. This verse quoted by Christ himself in the way of a reminder and reproof to the Pharisees of his day.

"The change" referred to in the 14th and 15th verses still remains unchanged in a large measure till this day. The queries raised in the 16th verse are still being answered "no" by even a majority of professing Christians of today. If natural immortality be true then these queries should be answered in the negative.

"Beggars for the Lord's sake" reminds us of the 1st Beatitude and certainly correlates with it in the divine teaching.

"A transgressor" and "a haughty one" were no doubt to Satan primarily; but as here stated involves in the result "all who belong to that portion," "even those who cause men to sin in word" "And those who convict in gateways" meaning the judges of the affairs of men.

With the 22nd, 23rd and 24th verses comes the glorious hope and promise of Israel, and for those too who have erred in understanding in the spirit even.

With the 30th chapter begins a woe upon "apostates"—first upon those specific ones who were "going their way to go down into Aiguptos and have not asked me—to seek responsive-help from Pharaoo and not from the Lord." Then comes "The vision of the four footed in the wilderness" as it is here called. With the 8th verse begins the specific instruction to these apostates and all apostates. This latter comes out in the 28th verse, and from there on glory and retribution seem to walk hand in hand to the end of the chapter the last word of which is "brimstone."

CHAS. GARDNER.

Only a Word.

Last week I heard of a lady who was trying to overcome a life of sin, and was forced to struggle against many difficulties, and needed very much the kindly assistance of those who profess the Christ-life. While speaking of her new life, to a professed Christian lady, the supposed Christian expressed lack of confidence in her, did not believe she would succeed. The repentant sinner was stung to the heart, went out cried bitterly, and wandered about the streets in anguish of mind, verging on despair. Only a word, but it cut like a knife. How much better it would have been if she had said: God bless you my sister, and help you to overcome, I will be your friend, and help you all I can.

There is a heavenly charm in pure, loving, gentle words, that few can resist; they melt the hard heart, like the sun does the hoar frost, and often turns the whole course of a wayward life. Oh, there is a mighty power in a kind word.

Home life can be made a joyous paradise, or a perfect torment, effected by words and deeds. A kind word will lighten toil, and give strength to enable one to easier bear the burdens of life. Oh why not use them? It is as easy to use a kind as a harsh word, and there is a very great difference in the result.

Speak kind words of hope to erring ones, tell them there is a better time coming, a time of peace and joy, when every heart will beat in union, and love will beam from every eye; it will be the summer time of God's love, or in other words we may style it love in blossom. The plant we must cultivate now, if we would enjoy the full fragrance of the blossom.

Sometimes these lovely ones exhale a sweeter fragrance under adversity, like some plants when crushed smell the sweeter. But sweeter than all will be the pleasure derived from dwelling amid the balmy breezes of Paradise restored.

"A word scarce but a little thing,
A breath cast on the air,
A sound, one moment on the wing,
Then lost to the mortal ear.

Once passed the lips it past recall,
With speed or wild aught,
Reaching like the dew 'twill fall
Or crush some kindred heart.

The tongue that utter'd it may fast
Be locked in death's embrace,
But strong as influence will last,
Nor time it can efface.

And thousands that are yet unborn
Will feel its mighty power;
'Twill prove to them a piercing thorn,
Or sweet perfuming flower.

A careless word may crush the heart
Of some despondent one;
May place the poison on the dart,
And help to drive it home.

But words of sympathy and love,
Will comfort, cheer sustain,
And, like the smile sent from above,
Create new life again."

W. H. WILSON.

To My Brother.

Bro. Gresham, in a late RESTITUTION, asks for light on Matt. xviii. 10, which reads thus. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones: for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." I will venture a few thoughts for consideration. The disciples came to Jesus, saying, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" Jesus understood the promptings of their heart, teaches them a lesson of humility by calling a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven, etc. I understand this was a little humble, innocent, dependent and teachable child. And oh, that disciples of to-day would learn a lesson here, and humble themselves before God, and be confiding and teachable, like this little child. Remember brethren, that this is a life and death question with us, even us, who profess to be disciples. And the Master is equally plain and emphatic, as the subject is important, he enjoins conversion upon us, and its accompanying fruits as a condition of entering into the kingdom. Then as little children are set forth as a pattern of excellence, for us to copy after their good and God-given qualities, it is no marvel that Jesus says that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father. I believe they have guardian angels that watch over and care for them, because Jesus virtually says so. David says, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." And Paul virtually says the same by asking, Are they (the angels) not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation? Heb. i. 14. The wicked and those who fear not God have no such guardians. Sad thought. The only question to my mind is, who are those angels, are they the spirits of the dead as we have been taught to believe? I think not, as I find no Bible evidence to predicate faith upon; but a cloud of witnesses testifying to the contrary. When the wise man tells us that the dead know not any thing," he virtually tells us that the angels are not the spirits of the dead. And if we say that they are then we array a foolish man against a wise man. And if we say that death is a separation of soul and body, their soul and body when separated in death, "Knows not any thing." Another witness testifies that in death when man's breath go-eth forth, and he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish. Now if death does not kill a man, but simply separates him from his body, then when thus separated his thoughts perish, and he knows not anything. He had better be dead. No, the angels are not the spirits of the dead, but must be a high order of God's creation, that excel in strength, that do God's pleasure. And the Master says, not, that the saints will be angels when they die, but that they will be equal unto the angels in the resurrection. Kindly.

Syndicate Sermons.

The expose of the Rev. D. Parker Morgan, who recently made use of a sermon delivered eight years ago by another preacher, has led to the discovery that there exists in New York City a sermon syndicate. This syndicate prepares sermons, speeches, essays for the college boys and put-holed stories for certain classes of papers. It does a big business. The sermon department is growing fast, and furnishes basis for the suspicion of the Rev. Mr. Lee and Dr. Collyer that many preachers these days are using syndicate sermons. There is a sermon syndicate in Philadelphia and also one in Chicago. The syndicates bait their victims with the proposition that they can send an original sermon at a trifling cost. Sermons are quoted $5 up to $50. Many copies of the cheap sermons are prepared for the purpose of extensive distribution. The newspapers do not reach the sermons preached in the small towns and hamlets over the country, and there is small chance of getting found out. The high priced sermons are prepared for the pulpits of the big cities. These syndicated sermons are simply rehashes of the sermons of eminent preachers in newspapers and books. The phraseology is changed and the cue-marks lopped off. Before Dr. Talmage left Brooklyn it is said that a proposition was made to him to write sermons for this syndicate. He promptly refused, I guess there was not enough money in it. What next?

The Second Coming of Christ.

Dear Restitution:

I would like to say a few words concerning the second coming of Christ. I think the time is very near at hand. We read in Matt. xxiv. 36. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no; not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." This warns us to watch and be patient, for his coming is at the door. Again we read in Matt. xxiv. 43. "But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up." Oh, what a constant watch we must keep that we set a good example, that we be not a stumbling-block for others. I am only a school girl and I know that I am watched by all of my companions to see if I am trying to do what is right. We do not wish, dear Christian friends, to have it said by the unbelievers that we are no better than they are. For we certainly should live so that they can see that we are better. For who can help striving when we think of that glorious promise.

NETTA ARSINGER.

A Turkish post office has been opened in the Jewish quarter of Jerusalem under the charge of a Jew, and all letters issued from it have stamped upon them the name "Jerusalem" in Hebrew letters. It seems like going back to the time of the Maccabean or Herodian coins.

One of the curiosities of the printer's art is the "Midget Testament," being a volume of the New Testament three quarters of an inch long, and half an inch wide. Its weight is twenty-six grains. It is published in Glasgow.

"The Restitution of all Things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 20, 1896. NUMBER 19.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION introduces the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Has a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

PLYMOUTH, IND. MAY 20, 1896.

"TRAVEL makes a wise man better, and a fool worse.

It is a pretty good rule to "expect the best but at the same time get ready for the worst."

"To strive to gain respect by means of rich clothing is despicable, and is practiced by those who have no other ornaments."

"WE often hear that folly should be shot flying, would it not be better to shoot it sitting, standing, swimming —shoot it at sight everywhere?"

THE Christian's faith is not merely an assent to a proposition, but the trusting of one's self to a Being, there to be rested, kept, guided, moulded, governed, and possessed for ever.

How men go wrong:—

"Men go wrong with most ingenious skill,
Bend the straight rule to their own crooked will;
And, with a clear and shining lamp supplied,
First put it out, then take it for a guide."

WE are sorry to chronicle the fact that Baron de Hirsh, Israel's great friend, who agreed with the Russian Government to take the Jews out of that country within 25 years, died suddenly on the 21st of April.

THE Bengah Translation of Gen. ii. 7, is as follows: "Afterwards God, by means of particles of earth, having made man, giving a puff into his nostrils, caused the air of life to enter; whereupon he became a living creature."

WORD has been received that, (if something does not at the time prevent), Brother and Sister Woodward of Michigan, will attend the conference at Antioch, which will be held over the 2nd Sunday in June. Begin now to make arrangements to attend and help with this meeting. Perhaps this may be the last in this age. May we all be at the first in the next.

"THE term death in Scripture denotes a state, and covers the whole period between dying and the resurrection; and whenever persons who have died are spoken of whether righteous or wicked, they are called the dead. "The dead in Christ shall rise first," 1 Thess. iv. 16. "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished," Rev. xx. 5.

IN the Eleventh century, says Grimshaw, Benjamin Tudela, a learned Spanish Jew, travelled into the East, for the express purpose of seeing what traces were to be found of the ten tribes. The result of his inquiries were as follows: He found

In the ancient Halah and Habor 2,000.
At the root of Mount Ararat, 4,000.
Two days further distant, 7,000.
Near to the River Euphrates, 2,000.
At Kardan he found 15,000.
Two days beyond he found 10,000.
In Ancient Chaldea he found 20,000.
Sixty thousand in all.

WE gather from a cotemporary magazine a fact concerning the Druse war, that shows the wretched condition of the Turkish Empire. It went on to explain how the Jerusalem regiment was saved from destruction. The commander, a Turkish officer, before they came to an engagement, told the Jerusalem regiment that if they would give him baksheesh, each man, he would hide them among the hills and put the Hebron and Nablow's men in the front, as they were a lot of robbers any way. This they agreed to do, and when the man whose duty it was to sound the bugle call did so, there was no response, and he went from hill to mountain calling, but not a man appeared. There were fifteen hundred men killed from, the Hebron and Nablows' ranks. Two hundred Jerusalem soldiers died from hunger and exposure, and the remainder came home without orders from the government. Turkey could not hold her own among the nations a day, under such conditions as the above incident indicates. Some seem to think that matters have not materially changed since the Armenian horrors were enacted. We see a wonderful change. Time was when England was set for the defense of Turkey against her natural enemy, Russia,—Now England sees Turkey throw herself into the arms of her old enemy. This marks an era, and at the same time shows that God is marshalling the great powers into the positions assigned by the Spirit in the Prophets.

"A PRESBYTERIAN minister who was drawing near his end, said to those near him, "I see things that you cannot see. I know things you cannot know. Death! Is this death? There is no death. It is just one living right on,—just the expanding of temporal life into eternal life." Paul says, "Death came by sin;" he will have to take a back seat now will Paul, or he will find himself terribly puckered up. If we go back to the beginning it looks as though death was the penalty attached to the law of sin. If there is no death—if men live right on,—if temporal life expands into eternal life, Adam must be the greatest benefactor of our race; is the greatest benefactor now, for if it be true that there is no death, of course he is alive yet, having exchanged natural life for eternal life: and this felicitous change was brought about by sinning against God! Oh, theology thou must have gone mad! Dr. Hartwell says, "The above statement of the dying man is true of the Christian's death;—just living straight on. There is no stop at death, no cessation of existence, of consciousness, or of identity. It is a heathenish idea that we change into something or somebody else. We carry with us our consciousness, our identity, our memory, our character, our fellowship and our love. When I go across to China I do not cease to be myself." It is a rather mean to speak thus of the heathen when they themselves are indebted to heathens for the cornerstone of the theological structure—the immortality of the soul. Surely if the heathen are authority as to the immortality of the soul, they should be authority as to its changes.

Assistance for Searchers.

VI. Will every person who has ever lived rise again?

1. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Dan. xii. 2.

2. "I am as a man that has no strength, free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou remembered no more." Psa. lxxxviii. 5.

3. "The army and the power, they shall lie down together they shall not rise; they are extinct." Isa. xliii. 17.

4. "They shall be as though they had not been." Obd. xvi.

5. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them." Ps. xlix. 14.

6. "As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more." Prov. x. 25.

7. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Is. xxvi. 14.

In some cases, then, death does end all. To them the grave is an eternal resting-place. But as there is a resurrection, it follows, that there are some who will come forth from their graves. In our next we show who come forth.

King of Abyssinia on Religion.

Negus Menelek, of Abyssinia addressed the following remarkable epistle to an English missionary during the month of February:—

"You are mistaken in believing that I do not care for your prayers. All prayers of believers are dear to me, even when they come from the children of Europe. Not all are aggressors in my kingdom; not all commit the iniquity of attacking those whom they hope to find weaker than themselves; not all have bent the knee before Baal, the God of destruction and the slaughterer of Brothers. Many, I am sure, still adore the God of the cross, the God of justice and of peace. With them I feel in perfect communion of faith, and I am happy that they pray for me, for my household, and my people.

"I only wish that they could make truth dwell in the sanctuary, and that instead of a mutilated gospel which explains the confusion and the infidelity of the people of Europe, they would return and lead others back to the true gospel which began with the creation of the world.

"By what right do they efface the whole portion of it which precedes the coming of Jesus Christ, and have they done away with what God established for all time?

"What you call the Old Testament is as true as the New, and what is contained in it must be respected and observed by those who follow Jesus and the Apostles, announced by the prophets.

"Never did Jesus abolish the distinctive mark of his race, since he was subjected to it by his holy mother on the eighth day. To suppress thus what God established from age to age and from forever to forever is to furnish the same spectacle shown by the Christians of Europe. It is not only without that they use violence, but also within, against the Jews, who are, nevertheless, Christian souls, and to whom we owe our Savior. There are more than 300,000 of them in my kingdom, and, although they enjoy almost complete independence, they are obedient and industrious subjects. They never conspire, pay all tributes, and respect our abuna as much as do the Christians. If they are worse in Europe, it is because the Christians, too, are worse. Our Lord Jesus forgave them on the cross. Why should we persecute them? You, at least do not persecute them. May the other Christians of Europe imitate you?

"What you need is to return to our God, to observe all his ordinances, to no longer separate Moses and the prophets from the Apostles, or Peter or Paul. Whoever wishes to serve God must humble himself and obey. You know that, envoy of God. Teach it in Europe and Asia. I am having it taught in Africa.

"May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you."

MENELEK."

We think Menelek did exactly right, according to his light he outlined the truth as he understood it, to the missionary, and then exhorted him to go and teach the same at home and abroad. And what believer of the gospel of the kingdom of God will say that the king is not the best teacher of the two? If popular religionists would learn what he has, viz:—"that no part of God's Book is out of date—or that Moses and the prophets cannot be separated from Christ and his apostles," the probability is that many would see that salvation is of the Jews,—and that the covenants of God to the Fathers are still foundation stones in God's saving scheme.

Passing Events.

IN THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY.

Watchman what of the night? "The night is far spent the day is at hand." Under this heading, "The Good Tidings" of the coming age, says: "The events and writings of the past month have again been full of interest to the Bible student. The spirit of unrest among the nations is increasing. All over the civilized world there is deep discontent. This is the reason why the masses are turning to socialism. They desire a better state of things, overlooking the fact, that only one can alter the condition of humanity, even Jesus, the Son of God. This unrest also pervades the classes and rulers, many of whom are selling out their lands and estates and turning them into gold."

The war spirit is ripe, not only in England, but in other countries also. The Americans have, through their interference with the Spaniards in Cuba have invoked a deep hatred for themselves by the Spanish nation, who seem determined to go to war in case they advance any further in their interference with Cuban affairs.

The Italians, have had a terrible reverse in Abyssinia. Italy, if all nations can ill afford to spend money on war, as she is practically in a bankrupt state, and the continual increase in taxes to keep up the army and navy is sending the people to desperation. Truly Christ's words are being realized. "Men's hearts are failing them for fear, not knowing what is coming on the earth."

Since 1850 the world has expended 300,000,000 in waging war, and four times that sum in holding standing armies in readiness; and for the first time in the history of England the naval estimates 20 million pounds. On March 2nd the estimates were given in the House of Commons for £21,823,000, against 18,701,000 last year. The highest point reached before was in the second year of the Crimean war, when they were 19 millions. The present vast volume to be spent on the top of the already vast sum shows the state of feeling existing among the legislators, especially, so when we remember that this amount to be spent is in a time of peace,—making the matter all the more significant. From 1889 to 1899 the estimates are (for the amount of money that has been spent and is to be spent) £55,000,000 in England alone on war preparations. Other nations are doing the same, and so the war game goes on until the divinely appointed end.

We see that in consequence of the increase in the British Navy, which has been made in view of possible conflict with France, the French Minister of Marine is about to make a complete change in the composition of the fleet, returning to the programme of 1886, which was prepared mainly to meet the eventuality of a struggle with Britain. And here one anxiously asks —How will it all end, and when? Let the Bible speak, Isa. xlii. 14, "I have holden my peace. I will destroy and devour at once. The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man. He shall prevail against his enemies." The end will come by a divine interference in the world's affairs, "When thy judgments are in the earth," says the prophet, the people learn righteousness." The people will have to learn some terrible lessons before they will learn to be righteous. This can only be brought about by the scathing judgments of God.

It is well known that the Jews are an outcast nation, having no sure dwelling place, and that this condition is in fulfillment of prophecy. Their long night of oppression is not quite finished, although the day is breaking for them. The last country in which they were horribly persecuted was Russia, but another has taken up the cry. "Down with the Jews," viz.: Austria. The anti-semitic vote in Vienna has risen considerably.

The return of the Jews to Palestine is now being openly advocated. Jehovah will not always chide his chosen race. The time is near, when, according to promise, they will be restored to their own land,—the land covenanted to Abraham, and his seed. As an indication that men's thoughts are now turning in this direction, forced by the political necessities of the time, a scheme has been propounded for the purchase of the land of Palestine from the Sultan, for the re-settlement of the Jews in their own land, as mentioned in a recent number. Whether the land is bought or not for the Jews, one thing is certain, they will return there. The prophet Jeremiah in the 32nd chapter and 37th verse speaks thus: "Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel.....Behold I will gather them out of all the countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again into this place (Palestine,) and I will cause them to dwell safely."

The Jewish Chronicle in a leader on Dr. Herzl's scheme for a Jewish State, says Dr. Herzl did not reach his scheme from the religious side, but the scheme has already made many converts because of its religious opportunities. Many have joined the ranks of those who believe in the national idea because they hold it justified, not by the social condition of the Jews in Austria, but by the religious condition of the civilized world. "From Zion shall go forth the law," they quote. The world needs a revised religion, and it can only get it from the Jews. Just as the first nationalization gave it to Ezra, so the third nationalization may produce a new Law-giver for new times, an inspired servant of God, who shall bring the erring people to him, and win for his service the allegiance of all mankind." Just so. When the "New times,"—"the times of restitution," Acts iii. 20, 21, arrive, a law-giver will arise, but will the Jews accept him if he be the Nazarine?

There is at present a lull in the Turkish-Armenian question, although it is feared it will break out again and force the Russian Bear to interfere. The reforms promised by the Sultan last fall have not been carried out yet. Lord Salisbury, in admitting he was helpless to enforce anything, admitted it was through the jealousy of the other powers, and practically wipes his hands of the affairs of Turkey. Thus Turkey loses her only friend.

The Committee of the Armenian Relief Fund has issued a circular to the American, Canadian and Australian press, appealing for funds to enable 200,000 destitute men, women and children in Asiatic Turkey to be provided with the necessaries of life. It is estimated that $500,000 is still required to provide food and clothing for these persecuted people.

"According to a Standard telegram from Constantinople a question is arising in that city which may have the most far-reaching effects. It is, that pressure is being put upon the Œcumenical Patriarch to abolish the schism existing between the Greek and Bulgarian Churches. The Bulgarian Government and the Greek Patriarch are in close communication, while the Turkish and Russian agents show much activity in promoting the arrival at an understanding. The hand of Russia is clearly visible in the work, and nobody cognizant of the influence of the church upon the Eastern races can fail to see the advantage of such a move to Russia, which is preparing to parcel out the whole of European Turkey under one Church, to be ready for the future downfall and partition of the Ottoman Empire in Europe. Apparently Turkey is only too willing to be deceived. Under the guiding hand of Russia, Turkey is, in fact, digging its own grave, and the other nationalities are so blind as not to perceive that they are all sacrificing their national aspirations, which are the only guarantee against the future absorption of Turkey into a Russian province.

The prophet Isaiah says, "I (Jehovah) gave Egypt for thy (Israel's) ransom." Ezek. xxix. 14-15, speaks of Egypt thus, "It shall be the basest of the kingdoms." These two prophecies are being fulfilled. Egypt is a base kingdom, being under the Turk, but really under the control of England. Unable to help herself in any way, she has to rely on English bayonets to keep her even as a base kingdom. We believe England will remain in Egypt long enough to enable the Jews to return to their own land by way of Egypt in fulfillment of prophecy. The Sultan of Turkey, backed by France and likely Russia, is endeavoring to get England to leave Egypt, but all to no avail.

As if to emphasize the fact that England cannot or does not mean to leave Egypt for some time she is to again interfere in the Soudan.

Austria, Germany and Italy have assented to the contribution of £500,000 being taken from the public Debt Fund of Egypt to defray the cost of the Soudan expedition. France and Russia have objected.

A dispatch from London May 12, says, "A special dispatch from Shanghai says that the Russians, through an American agent named Smith, have taken possession of the disputed territory at Chefoo over which the British claim rights. Six Russian warships are there, as well as the Detroit, Yorktown, Olympia, and Manchias, of the United States navy.

The dispatch adds that intense excitement prevails at Chefoo.

A dispatch to the Globe from Shanghai says that the Russians have seized lot 12 of the British concession, at Chefoo, in defiance of all legal and treaty rights.

The Globe's editorial comment on the dispatches from Shanghai contains the remark that "The seriousness of the news from Chefoo cannot be overestimated. The action taken is in direct contradiction of existing laws and treaties and cannot be viewed by Great Britain as other than an unfriendly act."

New York, May 11.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: General Shyeloff, head of the Russian Red Cross Society, and leader of the expedition to Abyssinia, telegraphs saying that he and his party have been received with open arms and that the Negus Menelik is making extensive preparations for their passage to Harrar.

The Novoe Vremya says that England's fears about Herat are unfounded. The Russian Red Cross expedition to Abyssinia left Odessa early in April. This is the third Russian expedition to Abyssinia. The first, under the Cossack Ashinoff, left in December, 1888, and ended by being shelled by the French at Sagallo. The second, which was called a scientific mission, left about eighteen months ago, and resulted in the arrival in St. Petersburg of a political embassy from the Negus, with a special mission respecting the religion of the Russian church and the faith professed by the Abyssinians. The present mission, under command of General Shyeloff, assisted by several officers, consists of about eighty members, of which the medical staff numbers six doctors and twelve nurses. Of the other members of the expedition little is stated, except that one is a priest, who is taking 20,000 small crosses to distribute among the Abyssinians. It is expected in Russian official circles that this expedition will give Russia that footing in Abyssinia which she had been so patiently trying to obtain.

Prophetic students will remember that the decree has gone forth, that in the final onslaught the land of Egypt shall not escape the King of the North, —and we think we see why he has been so long trying to get a footing in Africa. The Abyssinians may co-operate with him in driving the English out of Egypt, when the time to do so arrives.

Our Helping Fund.

Herewith we give names, and the amounts donated by each, for the purpose of helping to create a fund to be used in sending papers and tracts to those too poor to pay. This fund will be used only for those who themselves state their needs and circumstances, or whose case is presented by some one known to us as trustworthy.

Editor Restitution:

Please find enclosed money for my paper another year as I do not want to do without it. It is like a dear friend to me. I was very sorry to hear that the RESTITUTION office had burned down. I send one dollar to help pay for the paper for some one that is not able to pay.

Ever yours looking for the dear Lord to return.

MRS. EMILY COLLETT.

Editor Restitution:

On account of the loss of your office by fire, I renew at once, believing it may be more needed now than it would be later. I am much pleased with the paper. Yes, I love it dearly, and I pray that God's blessing may rest upon its managers, that it may continue to enlighten and instruct its numerous readers on their journey to the better land.

Your Brother in Christ.

DAVID MCLEAN.

Dear Restitution:

Seeing that my time has about expired, please find inclosed money to apply on my subscription, as I cannot do without our RESTITUTION. A request: Will Bro. W. H. Wilson, or some other able brother, set forth the difference in the faith and doctrines of the Church of God and that of the Seventh Day people as advocated by the Review and Herald, and the impropriety of partaking of the emblems together? Please let me know the truth in this matter aside from the sabbath question. Do not think this is for any controversy but for light. Let the sharp, short sword of the Spirit fall where it will though it divide the marrow and the sinew.

Your Brother for the truth, and right doing.

JOHN HULL.

Dear Brother:

Enclosed you will find post office order for one dollar to apply on my account for THE RESTITUTION, I cannot think of doing without it. It is all the preaching we have. We would be glad to have one of the preaching brethren come to Aultsville and tell us of the good news of the coming kingdom. We have a church here. They style themselves Adventists, but do not fellowship us, so we cannot worship with them. They reject the [illegible] rious doctrine of the age to co[illegible] have been a believer in the soon co[illegible] ing of Christ and kindred doctrines some forty years. I am now an old man and love truths taught in THE RESTITUTION. My dear companion and I were baptized in the saving name some thirty years ago, and have been trying to walk in newness of life ever since.

Your Brother in Christ.

D. ALACHE.

Brother Underwood:

I hasten to remit for THE RESTITUTION, my true friend and ever welcome visitor and preacher. I hail it with joy, watching and waiting for the King in his beauty to appear, who will change our vile bodies like unto his most glorious body. There are no people in this section who believe in the coming kingdom of God on the earth and the literal reign of Christ and the glorified saints. I will enclose an order of two dollars in payment for the year. The balance of the same please use to help send THE RESTITUTION to some dear brother or sister, who would for want of means be deprived of the blessed boons of comfort this life affords, especially to those of us who are isolated. I am very much in sympathy with you in your recent irreparable loss by fire, and have come to your aid with my subscription as soon as possible.

Yours in the one faith and hope of eternal life.

MRS. R. A. NEFF.

It is not so much general notions of Providence which is our best support, but sense of personal interest taken by Christ in our welfare.—Arnold.

Dead Egypt.—Isa. xxv.

Are thy pyramids still smiling
To the everlasting sun,
Mighty Mizraim of the sand-waste,
As they smiled in ages gone?

Is thy Sphynx still grandly gazing
With those melancholy eyes,
Drinking in delicious moonlight
From those silver-showering skies?

Does thy gray Mokattam cliff-range
Yet protect thy level shore?
Is that highway to the desert
Still as lonely as of yore?

Is the bronze on thy brown ripples
Still as brilliant as 'twas she,
Stately queen of spell- and splendor,
Gilded o'er her river-sea?

Does that river-sea so royal,
With its soft, slow-swelling tide,
Still do battle single handed
With the waste's on either side?

Are thy Pharaohs resting yonder,
Filling each his fragrant shroud,
With their own rubs stars above them,
As of old, without a cloud?

Do they still claim awful homage,
Oldest peerage of the dead,
In their cloudled shrines unconscious
Of the ages that have sped?

Does the breath of sweet t odors
Sweeten still their cheerless room?
Do the robes of princely Pathos
Still adorn them in the tomb?

Is thy Memphis still the Memphis
Of young Mizraim when he came
From his cradle-plain of Shinar,
Here to build a homiil-ss name?

Mystic-realm of magic story,
Never-changing clime and -tream,
Shadowy fatherland of science,
Home of fable and of dream,

From thy temples marshal the ages
Of our earth's unwritten prime:
Those majestic Nubian portals
Are the moulde ring gates of time.

Buried dark beneath the ruins
Of dead kingdoms thou hast lain;
But thy day of honor draweth,
Thou shalt rise to youth again.

In this hour of infant exile,
Once the Son of God in thee
Found a refuge from the tyrant,
Underneath thy sheltering tree,

And for this thou art remembered;
This great debt shall be repaid,
In earth's age of promised glory
Israel's God shall lift thy head.

The voice of seers hath spoken
Words of glorious light and rest;
It h as blest thee, lonely Egypt;
And thou shalt—thou shalt be blest.

Communicated.

The Communion.

Some time ago, perhaps a year, a sister, saying she belonged to a congregation who believed in annual communion, desired some one to write on this subject.

Several articles have since appeared; but a few points not brought out by these brethren I hope will be of use to this sister, as well as to others desiring light on this subject.

On the night of the Passover feast, Jesus instituted the communion. See Matt. xxvi. 26-28; Mark xiv. 22-24; Luke xx. 17-20.

On this same night that he ate the Passover, and instituted this memorial ordinance, he was betrayed; he was condemned and crucified before the close of the day; and at its very close he was buried.

If you will pardon this little divergence, we will return to our subject.

The time for the observance of the Passover feast, is very explicit in Moses' law; but no mention is made by the Master, at the time of the instituting of the communion, as to the time of its observance; but he commanded the apostles to teach them (the baptized ones,) to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them. Matt. xxviii. 20.

Thus, they were authorized by Jesus, and guided by the Divine Spirit to ordain and appoint whatever was necessary for the good of the church.

Hence we find them exercising these powers in the congregations, both when present, and when absent.

Paul commends the Corinthians because they kept the ordinances as they had been taught by him. 1 Cor. xi. 2, and one of these is the Lord's Supper. 1 Cor. xi. 23-25.

Now as he received this "direct from the Lord," and delivered it unto them, and prabes them for keeping or observing this among other ordinances; (though not for their manner of doing it,) does it not follow that he gave them a definite time, or how could they have kept it?

It is evident from 1 Cor. xi. 20, that they were accustomed "to come together into one place; and when thus assembled they prayed, prophesied, ate the Lord's Supper, spoke to men to edification, and comfort. See 1 Cor. xi. xii. xiv.

Strength is added to this testimony in Acts ii. where it is written "They were constantly attending to the teaching of the apostles, and to the contribution, and to the breaking of the loaf, and to the prayers." Diaglott.

Here we have the teaching, the contribution, the breaking of the loaf, the prayers associated. Nothing is said of time, save, that there is a constant attendance to these needful things.

But if we go to Troas. "When the disciples assembled to break bread on the first day of the week," we have an example of definite time.

Take in connection with this 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2, when Paul says, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him; and according to the Diaglott this contribution was on every "first day of the week;" showing it was a custom to meet on that day.

In Heb. x. we are admonished to "bear each other in mind, for an incentive of love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as is a custom with some; but exhorting to it; and so much the more, as you see the day drawing near."

In this same connection we are shown; that the penalty for setting the new covenant at naught will be greater than was the despising of Moses law.

As to the annual observance of the communion at the time of the Passover, there seems to me to be no Scriptural authority whatever.

I find neither precept nor example for the practice.

The example of the disciples at Troas, where Paul and his companions tarried seven days, gives us a definite time for communion; and the connected evidence, Acts xx. 6, 16, shows, that this meeting was between Passover and Pentecost, a space of fifty days, Lev. xxiii. 5, 6, which precludes all argument in favor of annual communion, at the time of the Passover feast.

The Master says, "Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, you have no life in you." John vi. 53.

Suppose one to be immersed, a short time subsequent to this annual communion: must he be deprived of the privilege of the communion for the remainder of the year?

And, should his natural life be required of him before the commemorating day, would he not lack spiritual sustenance, and consequently, spiritual life?

The Savior said, "This do in remembrance of me." And Paul says, "For as often as you eat this bread, and drink this cup, you do show the Lord's death till he come."

Is it then, too much for us to show our faith and hope by remembering him once a week?

The phrase "as often" 1 Cor. xi. 26, is claimed, by some, to exclude the idea of definite time. Paul's design was, to show to each disciple that they ought to remember, that the death of the Lord was declared by partaking of the bread and wine. Just as often as they partook thereof: and it was necessary that each one should partake worthily, or they would offend against the body and blood of the Lord.

This phrase, 'as often" is also productive of this thought—liberty to the sick and isolated—but let not those so situated as to be able to meet and show forth their faith and hope, by commemorating their Lord's death, neglect to do it; and thus make a stumbling-block of this same liberty.

Unity is, indeed much desired, but the Truth cannot be sacrificed, for the sake of peace.

Selected.

The Bible Plan of Salvation.

"Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul."—Heb. vi. 19.

HOW TO INTERPRET THE SCRIPTURES.

1. The Bible must not contradict itself; because if it does we cannot rely upon it as a guide.

2. Positive, unequivocal assertions or statements must be taken as the standard, or guide and; all inferences, drawn from figures or parables, must be made to agree therewith, to avoid contradiction.

3. Parables, figurative language, etc., are seldom or never used to first proclaim a doctrine, but to explain a doctrine already proclaimed and partially understood.

4. The Word of God is to be taken in this plain, literal meaning, in all cases where the sense of subject and circumstances of the case do not clearly indicate a figurative meaning, and where a literal meaning would be in contradiction to some other p[assage] of the Bible.

GOD'S PLAN DEVELOPED.

1. Man was created to dwell up[on] the earth: and there is no promis[e] the sacred Scriptures that man, a[s] race, shall ever dwell anywhere e[lse] Ps. cxv. 16.

2. There is not a word said in [the] Bible about an "immortal soul," "never-dying spirit," etc. Such phra[ses] are the inventions of men, to bol[ster] up their own creeds.

3. When God created man out [of] the dust of the ground. He t[hen] breathed into his nostrils the bre[ath] of life, and MAN became a living so[ul]. Here the reader cannot fail to [see] that the word soul is applied to [the] body, the person, the individual, a[nd] is equally applicable to the beas[t]. That is the sense in which it is co[m]monly used in the Scriptures, as sho[wn] by the following texts: Gen. xii. [12,] xiv. 21, (marginal reading;) xlix. [6,] marginal reading of Judges xvi. [30;] Ps. xxx. 3; xxxiii. 19; lxxviii. [50;] lxxxix. 48; Isa. liii. 10, 12; Jer. [xv. 2;] Rev. xvi. 3. The phrase breath of life is also used in reference to the beas[t]. Read both margin and text of Gen. vii. 21, 22; and Job xxvii. 3; and [com]pare Isa. ii. 22.

4. Adam and Eve never attained to immortality, but in consequence of sin were deprived of the means of obtaining it. Gen. iii. 22.

5. As our first parents were mortal, so all their race are, and when they die are totally unconscious. Job xiv. 21; Psalms vi. 5; cxv. 17; cxlvi. 4; Eccl. ix. 5, 10; Isa. xxxviii. 18, 19.

6. God has promised a resurrection of the dead—both of the just and the unjust. Dan. xii. 2, 3; John v. 28, 29; Acts xxiv. 15. Read first Cor. xv.

7. The righteous shall receive eternal life, but the wicked shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. 2 Thess. i. 9; 1 Sam. ii. 6, 9; Job xx. 5, 7; xxi. 30; Ps. xi. 6; Ps. xxxvii. throughout, noticing the contrasts of the righteous and the wicked; xlix. 12, 15; Matt. xxv. 46; Rom. i. 32; ii. 7, 8; vi. 23; viii. 6.

8. The rewards are to be given when Christ comes. Matt. xvi. 27; Col. iii. 4; 1 Thess. iii. 11, 13; 2 Thess. i. 6, 10; 2 Tim. iv. 1, 8; Heb. ix. 27, 28; 1 Pet. i. 13; Rev. xxii. 12.

To get a more complete idea of God's plan and the order of events, study the following points in reference to

THE AGE TO COME.

1. There will be a RESTITUTION—Acts iii. 21.

2. The "time of Restitution," (Acts iii. 21;) or "dispensation of the fulness of times" (Eph. i. 10;) or millennial reign of Christ [1 Cor. xv. 25,] will occupy the period of one thousand years [Rev. xx. 1–7,] or the seventh day of the antitypical week of the world's age.—Heb. iv. 4—9. 2 Pet. iii. 8.

3. Christ will come at the commencement of the times of Restitution.—Acts iii. 20, 21. 1 Cor. xv. 23 28. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17; Rev. xx. 1–7.

4. The righteous dead will then be raised, and the living saints changed to a state of immortality.—1 Cor. xv. 23, 51—54. 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. Rev. xx. 4.

5. All the saints will come with Christ to the Mount of Olives.—Zech. xiv. 4, 5. Jude xiv.

6. Palestine will be restored to its Eden state, at the coming of the Lord.—Zech. xiv 4—11. Isa. xxxv. 1, 2. Isa. ii. 3. Isa. iv. 18. Jer. xxxi. 40. Ezek. xxxiv. 25—31. Dan. viii. 13, 14, compared with Luke xxi. 24.

7. Jerusalem will be rebuilt.—Isa. ii. 1–3. Isa. iv. 4–8, compared with Ezek. xvi. 60–63. Isa. lxv. 18, 19. Jer. xxxi. 38, 40. Mic. iii. 10. to verse 2 of the 5th chapter.

8. The royal palace of David [2 Sam. v. 7, 9, 11. 1 Chron. xiv. 1. Ps. cxxxii. 1–5. Isa. xvi. 5. Josephus, book 7; chap. 3,] or his tabernacle, now in ruins, will be rebuilt.—Amos ix. 11, 14. Acts xv. 16.

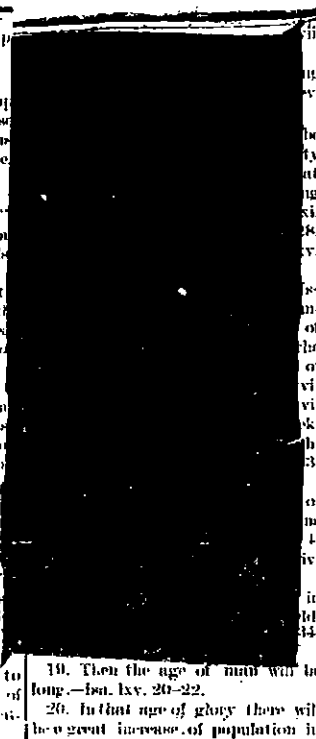
9. Christ will sit on the throne of David, in the tabernacle of David.—Isa. ix. 6, 7. Isa. xvi. 5. Ezek. xxi. 25–27. Luke i. 32, 33.

10. The apostles will sit on thrones, in the kingdom, with Christ.—Isa. xxxii. 1. Matt. xix. 28. Luke xxii. 29, 30. Rev. xx. 4.

11. All despotic kingly power will be destroyed.—Psa. lxxvi. 12. Psa. cx. 1, 5. Isa. xxiv. 21. Ezek. xxxviii. Dan. ii. 32–44. Dan. vii. 11. Zech. xiv. 12. 1 Cor. xv. 25. Rev. xvii. 14. Rev. xix. 17–21.

12. All anti-Christian powers, will be destroyed.—2 Thess. ii. 8. Rev. xvii. 1—6. Isa. liv. 17. Dan. v. 26.

13. There will be a very great destruction of the ungodly, their. Isa. lxvi. 16. Ezek. xxxix. 1, 5. And iii.



19. Then the age of man will be long.—Isa. lxv. 20–22.

20. In that age of glory there will be a great increase of population in the earth.—Psa. xxii. 31. Isa. xi. 6. Isa. lxi. 9. Isa. lxv. 23. Ezek. xxxvii. 35. Zech. viii. 4, 5.

21. The peaceful and obedient nations of that day of glory, will go up from year to year to bring their glory and youth to Jerusalem. "the city of the great King," and to worship there. —Isa. lx. 5–9. Zech. xiv. 16.

22. Then the earth, especially Palestine, will be very productive.—Isa. xlv. 18–26. Isa. xxxv. 1, 2. Isa. li. 3. Isa. lv. 13. Ezek. xxxvi. 34, 35.—Hos. ii. 21, 22. Amos ix. 13.

23. Lamb-like harmony will reign among the beasts, and they will be in perfect submission to man, during the mill-nial reign of Christ.—Isa. xi. 6–9. Isa. lxii. 25.

24 When the thousand years' reign of Christ are expired, Satan will be loosed, and deceive the nations, etc.—Rev. xx. 7–10.

25. The nations then living, who have set upon keeping God's law, will permit themselves to be deceived by Satan, will go up and surround Jerusalem, and attempt to take it; but fire comes down from heaven and destroys them. Rev. xx. 7–9. This is undoubtedly the time when the present earth is to be destroyed, or purified by fire, and the new heavens and new earth created, or brought forth. 2 Pet. iii. 7. 13. Isa. lxv. 17 and lxvi. 22.

Now read Revelations, chapters 20 and 21, and 22 to the 5th verse and you will have the only Scriptural account of the culmination of God's plan of Salvation.

I have not presented a tithe of the texts which I might do to sustain the positions I have laid down; but I hope I have presented sufficient to attract the attention of any earnest seeker after truth into whose hand these few lines may fall, and thereby lead them to examine further.

Neighborhood Evangelists.

We who hold to the One Faith are not all called upon to stand up before the public and proclaim it. Our circumstances may not permit it, or we may not be qualified for the office. And yet, if we are in earnest—if our faith thus warmth and heart in it—we all want to do something to advance the cause. We may be so hampered by poverty, that we even may not be able to do much toward furthering the spread of the glad tidings, beyond the circle in which we move. What then can we do? What can we do there, and how shall we do it?

Every one of us holds some sort of a position in society—a post of more or less influence. No man or woman, in his or her senses, is a nonentity. The niche carved out for us may be narrow and obscure, but we have a place, as certain as something must be somewhere. Well, then, to fill it the best we can, and to the best account, should be our first aim, and should keep us always diligent.

We should not be satisfied with toiling merely to get a living. We [eat] to eat and drink and have clothes to wear, but these, in themselves, [are] the ends to life only. We must, in the midst of these present wants, [not] forget the want beyond, and not [be] to furnish for our house not [made] with hands. We must tread our daily round of duties with a cheerful spirit, and unwind our thread of existence with a gentle patience, because it is given us to do. This is much [to] beautiful life, and a beautiful life is perhaps the most forcible illustration we can offer for our faith.

The world in the midst of its hurry and indifference, manages to keep an eye on us. "What sort of a people," it says, "are these, who do not expect to go heaven when they die, and whose hopes are anchored in the resurrection?" So we are watched as we go out and in, and our family relations are canvassed with a rigid scrutiny because we are, in a sense set apart from others. We hold our faith with an exclusiveness which others do not, and this is one reason why they seek to pick flaws in us, that they may change them to our faith. So we must be doubly careful how we preach by our lives, knowing that they are not infidels only, nor acknowledged worldlings, who stand in need of our preaching, but professed Christians also. Let them see that the fruit is good, and they may be persuaded to come and look at the tree.

We may thus gain the ear of some, while we tell them of our hope, and the reason for it.

Let us be given to little bursts of ill temper, to little dishonesties, to tattling, or to any other vice, and our hands are tied. We might as well hold them pressely, as far as convincing anybody is concerned. We can do nothing. Let us pull the beam out of our own eye and then see what we can do.

When we have set ourselves right, let us use our powers of persuasion, but use them wisely. Let people see that it is love and not spite, that makes us anxious to build up our faith and pull down theirs. Let us "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," but not with wrangling or bitterness. We should be careful not to raise the combativeness of one we wish to convince, for with that once up, he is blind. A sweet temper that persuades, and "thus saith the Lord" for proof, and no denunciation or ridicule. There is no argumentative force in a sneer, though it is a weapon too often used, even among brethren. It wounds and rankles and repels, but cannot convict one of error.

We feel an interest in our neighbors and friends, and, in a quiet way, would do them good. In wide spread country neighborhoods, people are really nearer together than [those] who live in cities, unless connected by immediate business relations. There your neighbor jostles you in the street, but who you are he neither knows nor cares. Perhaps he lives next door for a year and does not know your name. But here it is different. We get acquainted with each other. We are more or less mutually dependent. We visit each others houses. We sometimes borrow and lend, and have a care over any one that is sick. So there is an intercourse established, through which the most humble and unpretending disciple can become an evangelist. Let us avail ourselves of them, but again and again, let us see to it that no one turn a deaf ear to the doctrines of our sublime faith because it is our faith. It seems presumptuous to talk of reflecting honor upon anything so exalted as the pure and undefiled religion of Jesus, but let us take care that we do not in any way disgrace it.

It costs something to be meek. It costs something to be patient when we are neglected and scorned because of our faith, but better, a thousand times better that, than that some one should point his finger at us and say, "They believe so and so, and, see! it bears thorns and thistles!".

Brothers and Sisters, let the sermon of our lives be very carefully written out.—Ellen P. Allerton, in Restitution of 1871.

A Lady.

The word "lady" is an abbreviation of the Saxon *Laffdy*r, which signifies Bread-giver. The mistress of a manor, at a time when affluent families resided constantly at their country mansions, was accustomed once a week or oftener, to distribute among the poor a certain quantity of bread. She bestowed the boon with her own [illegible] and made the [illegible] the soft[illegible] ties whi[illegible] fence. Th[illegible] destitu[illegible] praises—all alike[illegible] animated her in their pur[illegible] *Laffdy*r—the giver of bread and the dresser of comfort—a sort of ministering angel in a world of sorrow. Is it a bad [illegible] now? Is it she who [illegible] her days in self-indulgence, minds [illegible] rights in the dissipations of folly, if she who rivals the gaiety of the [illegible] terly, but incurs the industrious [illegible] of "the busy bee?" Is it she who wastes, on gaudy finery, what would make many a widow's heart sing for joy, and who, when the rags of the orphan flutter before her in the wind, sighs for a place of refuge, as if a pestilence were in the breeze? This may be "a woman of fashion"—she may be an admired and an admiring follower of the gay world: but in the ancient and most just sense of the word, she is not—alas! she is not—"a lady." She who is a lady indeed, excites no one's envy, and is admired, esteemed, and loved by many: she stands on the pedestal of personal excellence, and looks round on the women and men beneath her as her brethren and sisters, "formed of one blood," in the great family of the Creator: she is kind, she is courteous, she is pitiful, to all: "she stretcheth out her hand to the poor, yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy:" she openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness:" this is the true *Laffdy*r, whom hundreds or thousands vie with one another, in raising to gender distinction, and to far nobler celebrity, than was ever won by mere rank, or wealth, or title: and if she have grace and wisdom to distribute among hungry souls "the bread of life"—to tell the poor of the love of Christ, she is an "elect lady."

The Obligation of Liberality.

One says, I will give to-morrow, to excuse himself from giving to-day. Must do you know whether you shall be alive to-morrow poor mortal? Another says, I am poor, I have need enough myself of my means. Yes, you are poor, destitute, but if is of love, of benignity, of faith, and of mercy. A third says, whom do I wrong? I keep only mine own: I ask you, from whom did you receive those riches, and whence did you bring them? Did you not come naked from your mother's womb, and shall you not return naked to the dust? Whence did this wealth come? from chance? What is this but atheism? If you confess, that you received it from God, why did it fall to your lot rather than to another's? God is not unrighteous in the unequal division of property among men. Why are you rich, and why is this man poor? It is, that you may receive the reward of dispensing your goods faithfully, and that the poor may receive the recompence of his patience. When, therefore, you appropriate to yourself that wealth which belongs to many, and of which you are the steward, you act unjustly. Rowcan the love of God dwell in our hearts if we see a brother in need and refuse to assist him?

The Japanese are still pagans. They propose to celebrate their recent victories by erecting a gigantic statue of Buddha, the metal of which will be supplied from the ordnance captured in the late war. It will be 120 feet high, will cost $1,000,000 and be erected at Kioto.—Independent.

Uniformed Attendants for Eastern Passengers' via Pennsylvania Lines.

A Uniformed Parcel Porter service was recently established at the Jersey City Passenger station of the Pennsylvania Lines. The duties of these porters are to look after the comfort of all arriving and departing passengers over the Pennsylvania System, and to accompany them (if desired) between Cortlandt street ferry, New York City, and the American Line Pier, Sixth Avenue Elevated Railroad, and the Central Railroad of New Jersey Station; also between Desbrosses street ferry, New York City, and the Ninth Avenue Elevated Railroad.

The Uniformed Parcel Porter service has just been extended to the Philadelphia Broad Street Passenger station of the Pennsylvania Lines, where porters will meet all trains and assist passengers who may desire their aid; take charge of rolling chairs when needed; meet carriages and make themselves generally useful to passengers. They will be in attendance from 6 A. M. until 12 midnight, and when accompanying passengers will carry parcels and hand baggage.

They are not permitted to charge for this service, nor to intimate in any way that a fee will be expected. Any recognition of their assistance must be in the nature of a positive gratuity, entirely optional with the person served.—June 1.

The nearer we get to God, the more we will be willing to help our brother.

Every Sunday agents of the Nickle Plate Road are authorized to sell one day limit excursion tickets between any local stations at one fare rate [illegible]-81.

For Our Children.

Somebody's Mother.

The woman was old, and ragged, and gray,
And bent with the chill of the winter's day;

The street was wet with a recent snow,
And the woman's feet were aged and slow.

She stood at the crossing and waited long,
Alone, uncared-for, amid the throng

Of human beings, who passed her by,
Nor heeded the glance of her anxious eye.

Down the street with laughter and shout,
Glad in the freedom of "School let out,"

Came the boys, like a flock of sheep,
Hurling the snow piled white and deep.

Past the woman so old and gray
Hastened the children on their way;

Nor offered a helping hand to her,
So meek, so timid, afraid to stir

Lest the carriage-wheel or the horse's feet
Should crowd her down in the slippery street.

At last came one of the merry troop,
The merriest laddie of all the group;

He paused beside her, and whispered low,
"I'll help you across if you wish to go."

Her aged hand on his strong, young arm
She placed; and so, without hurt or harm,

He guided the trembling feet along,
Proud that his own were young and strong.

Then back again to his friends he went,
His young heart happy and well content.

"She's somebody's mother, boys, you know,
For all she's aged, poor and slow;

And I hope some fellow will lend a hand
To help my mother, you understand,

If ever she's poor and old and gray,
When her own dear boy is far away."

And "somebody's mother" bowed low her head
In her home that night; and the prayer she said

Was, "God, be kind to the noble boy,
Who is somebody's son and pride and joy!"

The Story of Israel Beyond the Sea. No. 50.

THE SOJOURN AT SINAI. THE BOOK OF THE COVENANT.

We left off in our last lesson at Mr. Rockwells' story about the terrible yellow-jackets and flies, that were so troublesome to the early settlers of Illinois. They did not drive the people away, but they might easily have done so, had they been a little more numerous. There are places in South America, where people can hardly live on account of the mosquitoes and other insect pests. The fleas of California drive some people from the country. "Frogs and mice and other small animals, have banished whole tribes from their settlements." God does not tell us any stories, no matter how infidels may laugh, we believe him, when he says the hornets, drove some of the people of Canaan from their homes. We think these same infidels, would soon leave the spot, where even the termites-ants were swarming, eating up buildings, furniture and food, do not you?

Ants, no larger than the ants of our country depopulate whole villages in Africa. They undermine the surface of the ground and when the people come near them they bite and sting so viciously that the pain is almost unendurable. One cannot sit down on his porch, nor swing in his hammock, in peace, unless the legs of his chair and stool, and the ropes that fasten his hammock, are well rubbed with balsam of Copaiba.

We cannot blame the people for running away, to settle in some more pleasant locality.

Shall we review a little now? The book of the covenant, is complete. It contains only four chapters. It could be printed in a baby's primmer. And yet, this little law-book given at Mount Sinai, is the foundation for all the good laws of all the law-books of the world.

It contains ten commandments, and seventy statutes, or judgments. We began with the ten commandments, in the 20th chapter of Exodus and ended our study of these at the 22 verse of the same chapter. Beginning at this verse and going through the next three chapters.

We have glanced at most of the laws of the Book. They were made to govern the conduct of the Israelites,—in the family,—in the courts,—in the great feasts,—in the rest days, toward their neighbors, toward strangers, toward their rulers, toward enemies, toward the poor, the fatherless and the widow, toward the people of the land of Canaan, toward other gods, and in the service of the Lord.

The ten commandments, put a law into a few brief sentences, th statutes that follow, fill them out affix the penalties for disobedience. To break the statutes, is to break the commandments. And indeed, you will find the ten words, all named among the seventy laws, (except, the one that says, "thou shalt not covet) —either in these chapters of Exodus, —or else, in Leviticus and Deut.—to have no other gods, Ex. xxii. 20, to make no graven images, Ex. xx. 23. Not to swear falsely (taking God's name in vain) Lev. xix. 8: Ex. xxi. 15, to keep the Sabbath, Ex. xxiii. 12, honor parents, Lev. xix. 3; Ex. xxi. 15, not kill, Ex. xxi. 12, not commit adultery, Deut. xxii. 22, not steal, Ex, xxii. 1–5, not bear false witnesses, Ex. xxiii. 1–7. (Not to covet, would come under the laws that forbid fraud and oppression and robbery and the taking of usury from the poor.)

Did you notice that little phrase, Ex. xxiii. 20, "the place which I have prepared?" Did it make you think of the place Jesus has gone to prepare, John xiv 1, and of the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world? Matt. xxv. 34. The bounds of the prepared place are given in the Ex. xxiii. 31. It is a great land. The Israelites have never owned it all. They will all have it by and by. "It is four or five times as large as Palestine proper." But what can Jesus do about preparing a place for his people when he is in heaven? He can do a great deal. He can send his brethren of Judah home again. He can cause the ruin to fall, that the fruitfulness of the land may return. He can put it into the hearts of men to build railroads, to till the soil, and to teach the people, to know of him. He is doing all this now.

Ex. xxiv. is our lesson for this time. Moses and Aaron, and Nadab and Abihu and seventy of the elders of Israel are to come up to the Lord, or to the great Angel, who is acting for him.

It seems from what David says in Psalm lxviii. 17, as if there were a great many angels, came down on Sinai. Read the verses and also Deut. xxxiii. 2.

Moses and the men that are with him ascend the mountain a little way and worship. The people, cannot go with them, and only Moses, can come near to the Lord, or, to "the Angel of his presence." In the 20th chapter, the Lord spoke directly to the people, through this heavenly representative; he has the words repeated this time, to Moses, and Moses tells them to the people.

They accept the Book of the Covenant. They agree that it shall be their law-book. They make this solemn promise—"All that the Lord hath spoken will we do and be obedient." It is a unanimous vote.

Then Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, not as we write, but in the strange letters of the Hebrew language. The Book when done, was not like our Books. It was made of the nicely dressed skins of animals. The skins, were cut in strings wide enough to write upon with ease. Two columns were written on a string. A space about two fingers wide was left between the columns.

When the writing was finished, the skins were fastened to rollers and rolled up and sealed.

In Ex. xvii. 14, You will find the first mention made of writing. How do the little ones think men first learned write. I imagine that God had the angels teach them, for of course, the angels knew how to read and write long before man was made.

The Israelites, used a reed-pen to write with, and ink, made of lamp-black and gall-juice.

The next morning after Moses had finished writing the book, he got up very early and built an altar under the hill. It is the first altar that has been built since God gave him the plan for building these holy places in Ex. xx. 24–26.

It is to show that the presence of God is there. Twelve pillars are set up to symbolize the presence of the twelve tribes. You must think once more how like a marriage it is, for the Israelites are again, about to pledge themselves in a most solemn manner to their great and loving friend just as the bride pledges her word to the bridegroom at the altar.

So Moses sends young men, to offer up burnt offerings and to sacrifice peace offerings, unto the Lord. It is a part of the ceremony.

It shows the willingness of Israel, to submit to the law of her Almighty Husband—the Omnipotent God. Moses, takes the blood of the offerings and sprinkles half of it on the altar, to show that it is set apart for holy uses.

nant, wherein the ten commandments, and all the statutes and judgments are written he reads it aloud to the people, and the second time they promise,—"All that the Lord hath said will we do and be obedient."

The other half of the blood, is then prinkled on the people, while Moses ays—"Behold the blood of the Covenant, which the Lord hath made with

Announcement.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at Moorlee school house in Furnas County, commencing Friday, May 29th and holding over Sunday.

We would be glad to have as many of the brothers and sisters at this meeting as can possibly come. We could encourage one another by our presence, and help to make the meeting a pleasant and profitable one. Come in the spirit of the Master and we feel sure that you will be repaid for so doing. Each congregation is requested to send in a report, and also their vote as to where they wish the next Annual Conference to be held.

Yours in love of the truth.

RENA M. GORDON, Sec.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in Indiana, will be held at the Antioch Meeting-house, five miles South of Plymouth, commencing on Friday June 12, 1896, at 2.30 p. m. and continuing over the following Sunday. Believing as we do that the gospel dispensation is very near to its close, and the day is far spent, let us be up and doing lest the night cometh when no man can work and we be overtaken as a thief in the night.

To all of like precious faith, we say come. Come and enjoy another good meeting, renew your strength and energy in the cause and encourage others.

J. F. WAGONER, Pres.
A. C. ROBERTS, Sec.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God, in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Grady, Kalamazoo Co., Michigan, commencing Thursday evening June 4th, 1896, and continue over the following Sunday.

Friends coming from the North, reach Vicksburg via the G. R. and I. R. R., which leaves Grand Rapids at 2: p. m. and will be met Thursday and Friday. Those coming from Hastings will take the G. R. and I. at Kalamazoo. All friends coming from the north will be met at Vicksburg. Those coming from the south will be met at Meadon, on Thursday and Friday. The tram reaches Meadon about 11 A. M. There will be no special teams to meet friends on Saturday for the brethren all wish to have some good of the meetings themselves, and it is hoped all who wish to attend will make an effort to reach there by Thursday or Friday. Elder L. C. Chase of Adrian, Michigan, has promised to be with us, also Elder R. W. Woodward of Dutton Michigan. It is not often we have an opportunity of meeting together from different points of the State, to hear and to study God's Word. So come all that can and help to make this our Annual Conference as interesting as possible. The brethren and sisters of Brady send a most cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. All will be heartily welcomed.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall County, Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. Some will say, "I have sent bills loose in letters hundreds of times, and it always went safe through." No one denies it, and you may send so many times again, and yet the very next time you may be the loser. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts, get the latest copy of the paper you have, and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Bible "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many of the kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, the recognition of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

A Lamentation.

I have built for myself many castles in air—
Lived as careless of Fate as the birds on the tree:
But my castles are now all deserted and bare
Tell me Fate, cruel Fate, unto whom shall I flee?

I had thought that the pleasures of Summer would last—
That the flowers which I loved would bloom ever for me:
But a Polar wave came, with its life-killing blast,
And my plants and my pleasures no more shall I see.

I had dreamed that the beautiful youth would not fade—
That from age and its cares I should ever be free;
But the years have rolled over the plans I had laid,
And the hopes that beheld it—all never can be.

All my visions of gold have resolved into glass,
For my zeal and fanciful never agree:
What I think is an opal is sure to be glass;
When I steer to the windward, I drift to the lee.

But O whose shall I go for the answer I need?
Still I float like a rudderless ship on the sea.
Take my hand, O my Father! Thy child Thou must lead:
I will trust and commit my lost way unto Thee.

Preaching and Teaching. No. 1.

To make known "the truth as it is in Jesus," by whatever means, is not only the duty of the Christian disciple, according to his ability, but also his privilege. At the same time he has other duties and privileges which must have their due place in his esteem. The Apostle's injunction—"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men especially unto them who are of the household of faith"—seems to place in their true light, and their due proportion, the duties of the disciple. The same writer gives expression to the same division of duty when he says—"ever follow that which is good both among yourselves, and to all men."

Thus benevolence, or in Bible phrase, "good will towards men," ought to prompt every right minded disciple of Christ to do what he can for the salvation of his fellow-men by means of making known "the Word of the truth of the gospel."

The Apostle Peter puts the duty of making known the truth on another ground, when he says, "be ready always to give an answer to every one that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." Here self-defence is appealed to, when put to the test by "those without," and at the same time an opportunity afforded for pointing out the grounds of one's belief, which should not be lost.

But the duties of the disciple, as has been said, have relation to his fellow disciples. The Apostle's injunction in Hebrews x. 24, places this part of the disciples duties in a very clear light—"Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." This is a feature of discipleship which was manifested at the early period of Pentecostal outpouring, for the historian narrates (Acts ii. 42), "they continued stedfastly in the Apostle's doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." Mutual edification is frequently insisted on in the epistles. Thus Paul (1 Thess. v. 11) "Comfort (margin, exhort) yourselves together, and one another, even as also ye do." Again, "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification." Again, "Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church." "Let all things be done unto edifying." 1 Cor. xiv.

Reverting to the injunction of the Apostle already quoted—"Let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith," we may see from the term "especially," the Apostle's estimate of the pre-eminent importance of the duties of church assembling, mutual edification, and exhortation, which are to be exercised in relation "to them who are of the household of faith." The common saying that "charity begins at home," finds fitting illustration here, and the home-work is not to be slighted or neglected in order that work outside may be prosecuted. The Scribes and Pharisees were rebuked by our Lord for paying tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and omitting the weightier matters of the laws, judgment, mercy, and faith; and he adds, "these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." This is probably an extreme illustration, but it may serve to emphasise the comparative importance of the duties of Christian disciples in relation to the church and the world.

It is worthy of note also that the duty of exhortation among the disciples was not limited to the meetings of the church, for we have the injunction to "exhort one another daily, while it is called to-day;" and the reason given by the Apostle will apply to the duty of exhortation whether exercised daily or weekly,—namely, "lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. For we are made partakers of the (Greek) Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end.

This serious view of the matter is well enforced by the statements of Paul—"lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling for it is God that worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure."

Leaving this part of the question at this point it may not be out of place to enquire as to the nature of the work of sowing, in the present day, to make known the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," as well as some of the qualifications requisite to its due performance.

There are several circumstances which render such an attempt a very different matter from what it was in the days of the Apostles. Not only is there awaiting the authority which the Apostles derived from the commission with which they were charged, and the assurance which the consciousness of possessing such a commission inspired, but there is the entire absence of the power to confirm the word preached by "Signs and wonders and diverse miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost." To enquirers of unbiassed and open mind this want should not be felt especially when the history of gospel-preaching recorded in the New Testament is duly taken into account in connection with the promises made to the fathers, the predictions of the prophets, etc. But to the large mass of the religious world in the present day, with mind's pre-occupied from childhood with a perversion of almost every truth of Scripture, and hearts rejoicing in this as the very essence of Christianity itself, it is vain to expect, by any amount of pleading, a fair hearing and cordial reception of the gospel, much less the rendering to it that obedience which God requires.

To the Jew, in apostolic times, with all his prejudice against the claims of Jesus on account of his lowly life and ignominious death, there was nothing in the simple truth, presented for his faith but what would form a natural sequel to his presumed former faith in the promises to Abraham and David. He looked for the appearance of the Messiah—and the apostolic message was—Jesus of Nazareth is he. The fact of his crucifixion was more than neutralized by the fact of his resurrection, and both being in accordance with the prophetic word, and demonstrated by "the gift of tongues" on Pentecost, there was little difficulty in effecting the requisite change of mind.

As regards the Gentile in the first century, although the gospel would seem altogether foreign to his religious ideas, and would, if accepted, displace them entirely, it would not labor under the disadvantage of convicting him, as in the case of the modern Gentile, of totally misapprehending the meaning of a Divine Revelation, and holding the errors of an apostacy from primitive Christianity as the very truth of God. It would be easier to "turn from idols to serve the living God," than to turn from a pseudo-Christian faith to the purity and simplicity of apostolic times.

At the same time it must not be overlooked that the gospel was "to the Jews a stumbling-block and to the Greeks (or Gentiles) foolishness." To the Jews the apostle Paul became as a Jew—why? That he might gain the Jews, even to them that are without law, as without law—why? That he might gain them that are without law. And he concludes—"To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. All this I do for the gospel's sake that I might be partaker thereof with you." See for example of this Acts xvi. 3; xviii. 16, 34; and xxi. 23.

A few remarks as to suitable occasions for this work in another article.

J. CAMERON.

Prophecy.

I have carefully read all the articles, pro and con, (in all papers that I am taking) the stands of the nations as viewed from a prophetic standpoint, especially the article of Bro. Brown, in reply to Bro. Kinsey's question. Bro. Brown refers to Job xxxii. 6, 7, 8. I will add the 9th verse—"Great men are not always wise: neither do the aged understand judgment." It seems clear to me the brother is figuring ahead of time. He claims that Ezek. 38th and 39th chapters and Zech. 12th chapter was clearly the same. This cannot be so, the battle of "Gog and Magog" of the 20th chapter of Rev. and the battle of the prophet 38, 39 are the same—surely so. The Revelator says that full one thousand years must elapse before "Satan shall be loosed," and after this loosening, then this "battle" which is to be the last final conflict on this earth, there will be no distribution of land, or territory after this great last battle. No protectorate of England or any other nation over the Jews or Israel. Israel will have been gathered into the kingdom a thousand years before this battle, and a dwelling safely in their own land by the power of God as the walls round about Jerusalem. "and David my servant shall be king over them, and they shall have one shepherd. They shall also walk in my judgments and observe my statutes, and do them." Ezek. xxxvii. 24. "Thus saith the Lord God: In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it." Ezek. xxxviii. 14. That the leader and his hands, all of them shall fall upon the "mountains of Israel," and thy people that is with thee," "I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured." "Thou shalt fall in the open field." "I will give unto Gog a place there of graves in Israel," and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude, and they shall call it the valley of Hamongog." This will be a battle between the "Almighty God," on the one side, and with his mighty host on the other. God will be victorious. In Ezek. xxxix. 2, "One-sixth of this great army, (or perhaps the people) "were led back," that is were not gathered to be destroyed: "five-sixths being buried in the mountains of Israel." Now, why was this? My idea may be new to some, but I will give it, and the conclusions have not been hastily drawn. The small number left after this great battle will enable the saints to gain, or will give them the balance of power, and enable them to take possession of the literal political kingdoms of this earth, as Daniel says they shall. "Until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Dan. vii. 22. This was not Christ's kingdom: but the kingdom which was the last of the earthly. "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever." Dan. vii. 18. Now, to show that there is a difference between the kingdom of Christ, and the dominions I will read Dan. vii. 14. "And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. Here we have an everlasting kingdom, and no overthrow or dominion, and in the two all nations and languages are to serve him. Israel in O. kingdom, the Gentile saints in the dominions which are the "literal kingdoms" they will possess after the last great battle, (after the loosing of Satan) which will be their "everlasting inheritance." For no Gentile has any promise or an inheritance in Christ's kingdom when set up, nor is that "Jews." These are some of the things that will certainly take place immediately after this great battle. That the nations are preparing for some great conflict seems clear, but it is not the one the Revelator and Ezek. xxxviii. has so graphically portrayed.

The Brother is a figuring away ahead of time, so it seems to me. We will turn to Zech. 12th chapter. In this we see the events portrayed concerning the coming of Christ, and the ushering in of the millenial age, or the setting up of the kingdom. Ezek. and the Revelator of things that will transpire at the close of the thousand years, a very different thing, indeed. The day of the coming of the Lord will usher in the most awful scenes the world has ever seen, and to this the prophecies are seemingly now pointing. "Jerusalem" with its adjacent territory is to be trodden under foot by the Gentiles, until the very day that Christ comes. So it is useless for the brother to talk about the Jews being safe under "British rule." When they are ushered into a place of safety it will be into that land that was promised to their "fathers." That they have so long and earnestly looked for, an everlasting inheritance. Eli shall not rise up a second time. "Before the great and notable day of the Lord" there shall be wars and rumors of wars, nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, famines and pestilence and great earthquakes," as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth to the west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." This light will shine to the remotest parts of the earth as a sign to the Jews, that the time for their deliverance is come, "For where the carcass is there will the eagles be gathered together." "He will send his messengers with a loud sounding trumpet, and they will assemble his chosen from the four winds," "and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives." At this time Jerusalem is trodden under foot by Gentiles, and he declares that he will send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend," the gathering out of the Gentiles, and the gathering in of the Jews. At that time "Jerusalem" with its surroundings (as of old) will be holy ground. "The abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel, will be the Gentiles standing in the holy place, where they do not belong (have no right). Now, this great gathering in of the Jews, and gathering out of the Gentiles "will bring the greatest tribulation the world has ever seen, or ever will see," "and except those days be shortened, there should no flesh be saved, but for the elect those days are shortened." This thing will be done suddenly and will be both grand and awful, and every nation of God's earth will have to do with it. (for the Jew is every where). Just think of the thousands of Jews scattered over the entire earth with their wives and families and goods moving out of the nations, struggling forward as a mighty army, hoping to gain a victory. "They are to come upon horses, in chariots, in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, (perhaps camels) to my holy mountain in Jerusalem, saith the Lord." "In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you." There will be a mighty host of the nations, moving along, with this holy people, that is marching, not to "Jerusalem," "and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." Here is where the division takes place. To his flock he says, "Come ye blest of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." The Lord is able to lead them in. "In that day I will make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it. I will smite every horse with astonishment and his rider with madness. "And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem. Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes," "their tongues consume away in their mouth. Then shall the heathen know that I am the Lord. He shall speak peace unto the heathen, and his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." "Behold I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream," "and he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks, nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." This will usher in the millennial age, a peaceful reign of a "thousand years;" does the seemingly warlike preparations of the nations [illegible] to this time? Is "Christ soon to appear? Is "Satan" soon to be bound? Who can tell?

J. W. C. GRAY.

This Generation.

"Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation." Matt. xxiii. 36. Jesus was about to leave the Temple and close his personal, public ministry to the Jews. In the presence of his disciples and the multitude he denounced punishment upon his inveterate enemies the Scribes and Pharisees, who were plotting his destruction while pretending to be very pious. The woe upon them is eight times repeated. The judicial blindness of his highly privileged generation is complete. It had spurned the kindly offers of mercy and national blessings; set at naught the wise counsels of the Great Teacher, and rejected in madness the evidence of miracle and prophecy. It mattered not what was piped, this or that. John came neither eating nor drinking and these hypocrites said he had a devil. The Son of Man came eating and drinking and they said, Behold a glutton and a wine drinker, a friend of publicans and sinners. Matt. xi. 18, 19. The ascetic abstemiousness of John and the bounteous diet enjoyed by Jesus, were alike displeasing to them. How completely were the words of Isiah fulfilled in them: "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed, lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." Matt. xiii. 15.

THE SENTENCE PRONOUNCED.

"Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the judgment of Gehenna? Wherefore, behold I send unto prophets and wise men, and Scribes, and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them ye shall scourge in your synagogues and persecute them from city to city: That upon you may come all the blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias whom ye slew between the temple and the altar." Matt. xxiii. 33, 35. This quotation is a plain statement of God's purpose toward the Jews as a nation and was duly carried out during apostolic time— About forty years remained to them in which to fill up the measure of their guilt before the storm of God's wrath should burst in fury upon them.

THE LORD'S PARTING WORDS.

Jesus closed his public official intercourse with stubborn and stiffnecked Judah by uttering this beautifully touching and sad lament over Jerusalem in view of the coming of the Roman legions to execute the vengeance written and leave it in desolation and to be trodden by unholy Gentile feet for more than eighteen weary centuries: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, Thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye would not. Behold your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, ye shall not see me hereafter till ye shall say: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 37-39. These last words of this passage remind us of the triumphant shout which burst from the lips of the multitude, a few days before, when they spread their garments and branches of trees in the way as they conducted Jesus into the Holy City, crying, "Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest." Matt. xxi. 9, or as a part of the record of Mark reads: "Blessed be the kingdom of our father David that cometh in the name of the Lord.

This hail to the King displeased the Pharisees, who demanded of the Master to rebuke some of his disciples, but instead of a rebuke he said, "If these should hold their peace the stones would immediately cry out." On this occasion Jesus hardened his sympathetic heart with the woes that would fall to the sad lot of his countrymen and tribal kin and his words are quite as pathetic as in the other passage. It is said that "he wept over the city" saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee around, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." Luke xix. 41-44.

The days of vengeance were rapidly speeding on "that all things which are written might be fulfilled." Rome this time is to do the work, not Babylon. The cause for the terrible calamities impending was the shocking wickedness of the nation culminating in the rejection and crucifixion of their own Messiah, the heir to David's throne. They said: "His blood be on us and our children." This self-pronounced curse was fearfully and fully exhausted in the subsequent history of this people. While it required eighteen centuries to complete the prophetic program of punishment; on the generation then existing when Christ delivered his prophecy of evil—the one that passed through the horrors of the siege, fell an intensity of suffering to which, it is hardly possible that the history of all time, can furnish a parallel. The blood runs cold and the heart sickens at the unexampled horrors connected with the siege, to say nothing of those that were caused by the civil contests between the three factions of the Jews themselves, in which the streets of the city ran with the blood of her own children. Read the history as given by Josephus for a full account of the terrible sufferings experienced by that generation on which the predicted vengeance fell. The prophetic forecast is fearfully and awfully verified by the history of those calamitous times.

PLYMOUTH, IND. MAY 27, 1896.

THE eleventh hour of the day is very nearly reached, after which it appears, no laborers are hired,—the day's work being accomplished, and the time of the evening settlement arrived.

THE following is the list of Christ's second death inheritors: "The fearful, the unbelieving, the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars."

GOD has devised a system, by the operation of which men who are sinners by nature and practice may be made what they cannot constitute themselves,—that is righteous, justified, pardoned, holy persons.

WHAT right has any man to separate what God has joined together; and for the sake of showing up his own rotten foundation, to subdivide them into more or less importance,—and to teach that this may be left out of faith and that be kept in: this is not essential and that is indispensible!

THE new system of nations called "The world to come" is not to be subject to the angels, as the present system is; but to Jesus and his brethren. They are to be the rulers and possessors of the world; and when the time arrives for them to take possession of their inheritance, they will expel all popes, emperors, kings, priests and clergy from their thrones, great and small, and occupy their places and riches themselves.

WHEN England is expelled from Egypt she will have to retire upon Edom, Moab, and Ammon, which escape out of the hand of the Modern Assyrian. Jewish refugees from Egypt will find protection there, while many will be unable to escape. These will cry unto Jehovah because of the oppressors, and he will send them a Savior, and a great one; and he shall deliver them. Is. xix. 20. This deliverance will be the beginning of blessedness for Egypt, the catastrophe of Gog, and the turning point of the Eastern Question.

ON Friday, May 22, Brother George W. Smith of Marmont, Ind., while working at the ice houses at Maxinkuckee Lake, was in some way thrown under the cogs, and run over, crushing both legs above his knees. I visited him on Sunday afternoon just as the doctors were dressing his wounds, and they give him some encouragement that they may save his legs, though he will likely always be a cripple. He seemed in good spirits for one in his condition, and wished us to say that his appointments will have to be recalled, mentioning specially the one at Olio, for the 3rd Sunday in June. We trust some one else can go to this place soon, as he said some were to be baptized. Bro. Smith has done some good work for little pay, and no doubt could use any donations that the folks he has labored with can send him. Pray for and send him something.

READER, if after looking over our bill of fare you feel like saying, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" like Philip we say, "Come and see and judge for yourself;" do not be satisfied with a cursory glance. Appeal to the law and the testimony; look carefully at the evidence offered in proof of what we regard as a more excellent way. Examine the character of the Nazarine; take a good look at him of whom Moses in the prophets did write; do not let systems which are venerable by age, and respectable by numbers warp your judgment. If they lead you ever so far away from God and truth you can collect no damages from them,—both they and you meet the same fate. If you bear in mind that God's thoughts are unlike thoughts of men, and that what is pleasing to them is displeasing to him, you will realize the tremendous mistake you will make if numbers influence you. We faithfully warn you that the danger is greater in proportion to numbers. Crowds travel the broad road to destruction,—few find the narrow way of life, if Jesus told us the truth. Oh, be warned in time; accept the truth as it is in Jesus regardless of consequences, and you will be so braced up as that you can stand and fight alone, if need be. It requires moral courage to do it,—but the exceeding riches of God's favor stored up in Christ a motive of vast power. Dwell upon them, and trace them back to God's boundless love and no incentive will be wanting; a heaving response will spring up to your heart that will make Christ's yoke easy.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.—A Reply to "The Christian Oracle." No. 16.

After various hindrances we proceed to notice other Scriptures which show the difference between the Church, and the Kingdom of God. And first we quote from a brother who wrote us words of encouragement, and suggestively asks if we could read in Rev. i. 20,—"The seven candlesticks are the seven kingdoms?" or, in Eph. i. 22, 23, that the kingdom is his body? And in Reference to Acts xiv. 22, he asks if any in this land enter the Disciple kingdom through much tribulation? And we add that Paul was confirming the souls of the Disciples and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and yet if the Oracle man be correct neither Paul nor the disciples whom he exhorted to continue in the faith were in the church or kingdom. Why exhort them to continue in the faith of the gospel if by obedience to the faith they had not entered the church,—and become constituents of the Body of Christ? Again it is asked, "Shall we read James ii. 5 as if it said, 'God has made the poor of this world heirs of the church, which he has promised to them that love him?'"

What could be more positive evidence that the church is not the kingdom than that found in 2 Thess. i. 1. The Thessalonian believers were the church at Thessalonica, and believed in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ,—and yet we are told in verses 4 and 5 that the persecution and afflictions they endured were a token of the righteous judgment of God, that they may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which they then suffered. They had embraced the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, and this it was that caused them to suffer. And do not forget,—the suffering was that they may be worthy of the kingdom of God. They were thus put to test, and they stood it nobly, so that the Apostles gloried in their faith and patience.

In Acts xxviii. 20, we read that when Paul was taken to Rome bound, as a prisoner, (having appealed to Cæsar) he told the chief of his countrymen in that city that it was for the Hope of Israel he was bound with a chain. He was no criminal. So they appointed him a day to tell them the history of his troubles, and there came many to his lodgings and he expounded, and testified the kingdom of God—explained the kingdom of God,—taught the gospel of the kingdom that Jesus said should be preached in all the world as well as in Judea, so that it is a great mistake to say that the gospel of the kingdom which begets the Hope of Israel within him, was not preached after Pentecost. Paul's Hope of Israel was the national Hope,—he says so in Acts xxvi. The hope of Israel was that the throne of David should be re-erected and given to David's Greater Son, who has the right to it. How could Paul obtain that hope without believing the gospel of the kingdom which disclosed the recently crucified One, but now living again, as the rightful claimant? It were utterly impossible, without becoming a disciple,—one of the Little Flock to whom it is the Father's good pleasure to bestow the kingdom. Paul heard the gospel of the kingdom after Pentecost, and he taught it to thousands of others after his own conversion, and our last reference shows him preaching it in Rome to the Jews. We want to press home this truth.—Paul's Hope was the Hope of Israel, Acts xxviii. 20; and the Hope of Israel was founded upon the promise of God to the Fathers, Acts vi. 6; and one other important truth,—there is no other gospel Hope. See Eph. iv. 4.

This is well nigh an endless subject, but after one more argument we propose to examine what are deemed the impregnable fortress of the church-kingdom theorists. Something like 60 years after Pentecost the Great Head of the Church, the risen and glorified Anointed Jesus sent his angel unto his servant John to show him things shortly to come to pass. And it is so generally conceded that the purpose of the Revelation is to unpoint events related to the church and the purpose of God in the earth now: that time on to the consummation,—it does not seem worth while to prove it. Various churches are recognized and the overSIGHT of the glorified Jesus is made so plain that it cannot be disputed,—threatenings, warnings and words of encouragement are addressed to them: promises of seats with him upon his throne and power over the nations are made to overcomers,—and even the song of those redeemed from among men and made kings and priests to God is given: and to this is added glimpses of their trials, and the terrible apostasy of vast numbers: and the announcement further on that the transfer of the kingdoms of this world to our Lord and his Christ is made, and a bird's eye view of the moral and political condition of the world at the end of the age is given. Together with the resurrection and glorification and reward of all the prophets and saints small and great and their reign with Christ on earth, in the kingdom, the gospel of which they believed, the kingdom he taught them to pray for, the kingdom he said it was the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom promised to them that love God! How can men be so blind as to claim the setting up of God's kingdom away back at Pentecost with no evidence before their eyes that the end of the age must be reached before God's kingdom can come?

Correction.

Editor Restitution,

I notice a serious typographical error in my chronological table ("The Age of the World"), sent to you by Bro. W. H. Wilson, and printed in THE RESTITUTION, of May 13. From the crowning of Charlemagne to the first crusade was 295 years, instead of 395 as you printed it. Please correct and oblige.

A Husband.

The English term "husband" is derived from the Anglo-Saxon word hus and band, which signify "the bond of the house;" and it was anciently spelt housband, and continued to be so spelt in some editions of the English Bible, after the introduction of the art of printing. A husband, then, is a house-band—the band of a house—that which engirdles a family into the union of strength and the oneness of love. Wife, and children, and "stranger within the gates," all their interests and all their happiness—are encircled in the household's embrace, the objects of his protection, and of his special care. What a fine picture is this of a husband's duty, and a family's privilege! And what a beautiful emblem is this of the guardianship, and love, and uniting kindness exercised towards believing souls, and inquiring sinners, and the "whole family in heaven in earth," by him who says, "It shall be at that day thou shalt call me Ishi, (that is, my husband); for I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies; I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness!"

Weeds.

I once was walking with a farmer through a beautiful field, when he chanced to see a tall thistle on the other side of the fence. In an instant he sprang over the fence, and cut it close to the ground.

"Is that your field?" I asked.

"Oh no," said the farmer; "but the weeds don't care much for fences, and if I should leave that thistle to bloom in my neighbor's field I should soon have plenty in my own."

I wish all fathers and mothers would think of that. The evil weeds in your neighbor's field will scatter seeds into your own. So it is worth while to pull them up in self-defence. Every weed pulled up in your neighbor's field is a dangerous enemy driven away from your own.

Glad Tidings of the Kingdom of God, as Developed in the Bible

"Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life."

"When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Acts viii. 12.

How few understand the meaning of this expression, and yet the anticipation of the establishment of this kingdom, and of their own participation in its glories, has cheered in their sufferings the faithful children of Abraham from the time the first promise was given,—"In thee shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed." 'Twas the burden of many of the songs of David, the sweet psalmist of Israel; his last prayer was for the Great King, his last words were of him. Isaiah's splendid poetry depicts it. The simple but fervent longings of Jeremiah is full of it. And Ezekiel, during their captivity in Babylon, comforts the mourners of Judah with prophetic strains, and is himself comforted with a vision of its glories and beauty: none of the prophets forget it. 'Twas the good tidings of this kingdom which were preached by Jesus and his Apostles. 'Twas the power of truth concerning it which called out the first churches from the traditions and idolatries of their forefathers, and the hope of it was their support under the sufferings, even unto death, which were the consequences of their following the commands of the crucified Jesus of Nazareth. Reader, do you understand the things concerning this kingdom? Recollect they are part of the faith which justifies. Abraham believed the promises of God, and it was counted to him for righteousness; and no one ever yet was justified in the sight of Jehovah, but by believing his promises. Now, if we do not know what they are, we most certainly have not believed them, neither are we partakers of the Divine nature, for it is by the knowledge of these exceeding great and precious promises, that we are made partakers of the Divine nature. 2 Peter i. 4.

In order to understand these things of the kingdom, it is necessary to trace the history of the Israelitish nation, beginning with the call of Abraham and pursuing the narrative to their second dispersion: "For, to them pertain the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; and of them as concerning the flesh, the Christ came." Rom. ix. 1-5.

Abraham was the son of Terah, descended from Shem, of the sons of Noah; he lived in Ur of the Chaldees, surrounded by idolatry and ignorance. God, who "seeth the end from the beginning," and "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, and who designs to bring back this earth—this rebellious portion of creation, to its allegiance to him the Sovereign Ruler of the universe, in order that his will may be done in earth as it is done in heaven, has determined for this purpose to establish a kingdom, under a King of his own choosing, whose righteous scepter should first subdue the human race to his sway, and whose wise institutions shall then discipline them, and fit them for immortality. This Omniscient God chose Abraham to be the father of the great nation, which he intends to exalt, and consequently of his anointed King; but inasmuch as he always tests the faith and obedience of his creatures before he honors them. He commanded Abraham to leave his country and his kindred to go into a land to which he would direct him: and we are told, Heb. xi. 8, "He went out, not knowing whither he went." He was also told that "in him all the families of the earth should be blessed." What a thing for a comparatively obscure individual to believe, that he should be the channel of blessing to the whole world, that world which lay under the curse of God, in darkness and the shadow of death! God leads this individual into the land of Canaan, and there appears to him giving this promise,—"Unto thy seed will I give this land." Gen. xii. 7. The promise is repeated, Gen. xiii. 15—17, with this addition, "to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever." Here was an assurance to Abraham that he would live for ever, and his seed also, for, to inherit the land for ever they must live forever. He asks for a token, Gen. xv. 7, 8, that he himself should inherit the land, and God confirms the covenant to him, telling him he must first sleep with his fathers, that his descendants should be sojourners in a strange land, and afflicted for a certain period, but that he, God, will execute judgment on their oppressors and bring them out with an increase of wealth in the fourth generation, leading them into Canaan: the boundaries of the inheritance are then fixed, viz: from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates. In Gen. xvii. the promises concerning the land and the nation are renewed, and the right of circumcision instituted as the seal of the covenant: a son is also promised to him by his wife Sarah, now in her old age, to whom the promises are to be confirmed.

Now Paul says, Gal. iii. 16, "To Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He says not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, 'And to thy seed,' which is H. Christ." From this we learn the meaning of the repetition of the word seed in so many passages. To Abraham and his one seed the land is promised for an everlasting possession, but the multitudinous seed, the nation, is to dwell in the land. The distinction is very evident in what is said to Isaac, Gen. xxvi. 3, 4, in the third verse the one seed is spoken of, in the fourth, the multitudinous seed, or the nation.

Isaac had two sons, Esau and Jacob; the younger, Jacob, is chosen by God as the heir, and in the blessing of his father the dominion is mentioned, "Let people serve thee, and nations bow down to thee; be Lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's sons bow down to thee." There is some thing further to be noticed in the parting words of Isaac to Jacob, "And God Almighty bless thee, and give thee the blessing of Abraham, to thee and to thy seed with thee." Thus we see he must have expected to inherit the land at the same time with the one seed, Gen. xxv. 11; "Kings shall come out of thy loins." So that from comparing these different clauses, so to speak, in the covenant, we conclude that the one seed means a great king who shall be the heir of all things, though others may share with him and under him the different blessings. After Jacob, the promises are deposited among his twelve sons, and in his dying words to these twelve we learn a few more particulars; Judah is made the royal tribe, and the expected king is styled "Shiloh," which means the giver of peace: his dominion over the world is also predicted; see Gen. xlix. 10; but the pre-eminent promises of exaltation are to Joseph. See verses 22 and 26, also 1 Chronicles v. 1, 2.

These then appear to have been the expectations of Abraham and his family—

First. That their descendants should become a great and mighty nation, through whom all the families of the earth should be blessed.

Second. That a great and powerful ruler or king should arise out of that nation, whom they style "Shiloh," or the giver of peace.

Third. That this Ruler, with the fathers, should possess the land of Israel from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates, and that he should have the dominion of the world.

Now as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the twelve sons of the latter sunk into the grave without seeing any part of these promises being fulfilled, it follows, of necessity, that they must be raised from the dead to receive them; and to this agree the words of the Spirit by Paul, Heb. xi., "By faith Abraham when he was called to go into a country which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out," etc. "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise * * * these all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them; and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims in the earth." Since then the eye of faith beheld these glorious things connected with the nation of Israel as established into a kingdom afar off, since too they were everlasting, the faithful must have been aware that whatever intervened before the accomplishment, must be merely provisionary and temporary and yet these very temporary things were the pledge and earnest of the certainty of everlasting things, and also a means of working out the purpose of God in relation to the latter.

After the death of Jacob and his twelve sons the period of the oppression and affliction of the Israelites, by the Egyptians, commenced: this was predicted, Gen. xv. The people had grown and multiplied in Egypt, and when the time of promise drew nigh, that is, the promise made by God to Abraham, that he would bring them out of the land of their bondage in the fourth generation leading them into Canaan, a deliverer was raised up for them, and with eighty signs and wonders did God redeem his nation from their slavery. He brought them into the wilderness, and there in Horeb at the foot of Sinai, He gave them laws, by kings covenant with them in which they solemnly engaged to keep his statutes, on which condition they were to dwell in the land promised to their fathers; But if they broke this covenant a series of curses were to come upon them and in the end they were to be cast out of their country, and remain wanderers among the nations, as if the chastisement should be accomplished and they confess their iniquity: then I would remember his covenant made with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and restoring them to his favor re-establish them as a nation, to be no more removed. The generation who received the law did not enter the land, they perished in the wilderness; but their children recognized the covenant as binding upon them and under Joshua they are led on to conquer the Canaanites. After his death, they are alternately rebels to God and delivered, and raised up Judges, by them. By and by, however, impatient of dependence upon God which such a state of things required, forgetting the unseen Ruler, they demand a king. God in his anger gives them Saul for a short time, and then rejects him, choosing David, whose name means the Beloved, and who becomes at once the type and the ancestor of the Shiloh. His occupation was that of a shepherd, he was anointed long before he came to the throne, and during Saul's lifetime he advances the power of the kingdom by defeating many of Israel's enemies. On the death of Saul, the tribe of Judah, from which he sprang, proclaim him king in Hebron, and at the end of seven years all Israel recognize him as their sovereign. At the head of his "mighty men" he overcomes his enemies, and then desires to build a temple for Jehovah, for that God to whom he owes every thing; this gives occasion for the Lord to send a prophet to David, and in 2 Sam. vii. we have the record of the EVERLASTING COVENANT made with him, which, as it says, 2 Sam. xxiii. was "ordered in all things and sure." That was to be "all his salvation and desire, although at present there was no appearance of its accomplishment."

The promises contained in this covenant are styled, Isa. lv., "the sure mercies of David;" also Acts xiii. 34. They speak of a time when, free from all affliction and oppression, the nation of Israel shall be planted in their land never to move any more; they speak of a Son of David, who shall be set over his kingdom, who shall build a temple to the Lord, and whose throne shall be established for ever. Of this Son God says, "I will be his father, he shall suffer for the iniquity of men; but mercy, nevertheless, shall not depart from him." A promise is also given to David that he himself shall witness this establishment of his throne and kingdom, "thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee, that is, in thy sight;" therefore we conclude since the setting up of this king was not to take place until after David slept with his fathers, and yet he was to witness it, of necessity he must be raised from the dead and live for ever.

Now that Solomon who immediately succeeded his father was not this promised seed is evident, first, from the fact that Solomon was made king before David's death; secondly, from David's styling this covenant "the law of the man," or "the Adam," which related to his house for a great while to come; thirdly, from his last words, 2 Sam. xxiii., when describing the character of the royal descendant, "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of the Lord," he adds, that the members of his house were not so. Further, David did not witness the reign of Solomon. Now if Solomon were not this prince, which it is evident he was not, the fulfillment of the promises is yet in the future, for there has never been a King of Israel at all answering to this description; as we shall see from the remainder of the history we are pursuing.

David died; and Solomon immediately sets about to build a temple. His reign was to be a peaceful one, and his name Solomon, signifies peaceable, in these respects, and in building a temple, his kingdom typified that of Shiloh, or peace-giver. A type is a miniature and imperfect representation of something far greater and perfect-like. Thus David in his suffering character under the reign of Saul, was a type of the Beloved King in his sufferings from the world; in his warlike reign of forty years, a type of the Messiah as the conquering Prince and Solomon's peaceful and magnificent reign shadowed forth. but oh, how faintly the glories of the kingdom, when that great temple shall be built which shall be "a house of prayer to all nations," and to which "they shall go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of the tabernacles." Zech. xvi. 16; Isa. lxi. 7.

But Solomon in the latter part of his reign oppressed the people, and moreover fell into idolatry; after his death a deputation was sent to his son Rehoboam, who succeeded him requesting him that he would lighten the burdens of his people; but rejecting the advice of his seniors or counsellors, and following that of the young men, which was more congenial to his own mind, he returned us an answer, that whereas, "his father had chastised them with whips he would do it with scorpions," etc., see 1 Kings xii. This enraged his subjects, and ten of the tribes revolted, making Jeroboam the son of Nebat king, as had been predicted, but two, Judah and Benjamin, clave unto the house of David, and henceforth we must look on these latter as the kingdom of Judah, whose capital was Jerusalem, and where the law of God was still in a measure respected. The ten tribes were recognized as the kingdom of Israel. Their capital was Samaria, and to prevent the people from going up to Jerusalem to worship, Jeroboam set up two golden calves, one in Bethel, the other in Dan, and established idolatry as the national religion.

From this period a succession of wicked princes reigned over Israel, and though pleaded with from time to time by the spirit of God in the Prophets, yet three hundred and ninety years after their separation here in Judah, the measure of their iniquity was full and Shalmaneser king of Assyria executed upon them the sentence pronounced by God, they were carried away into captivity; and have continued in dispersion to the present time; and inasmuch as the eyes of the Lord are said to be "upon that land," Deut. xi. 12, "the thus removed Israel out of his sight," and in the day of their restoration, yet future, their manifestation will be like a bringing out of graves, for truly they are hidden and cannot now be recognized as the nation which the Lord would have blessed, since no one can say, "These are Israel." With respect to Judah, of necessity, it must remain a distinct nation until the birth of Messiah; its kings too were not so utterly depraved; Jehoshaphat, Josiah, and Hezekiah successively stem the torrent of wickedness and idolatry, but at length even Judah's iniquity reached such a height that seventy years' captivity in Babylon was decreed as the captivity in Babylon was decreed as the chastisement, and Nebuchadnezzar the king of that empire became the instrument of the Almighty's vengeance.

It was during this captivity that the prophet Ezekiel saw a vision of the kingdom in its restored state under the second David, the prince mentioned,—xxxiv. 23, 24; xxxvii. 24, 25; xliv., and xlvi. of his prophecy. Daniel, another of the captives of Judah, was favored by visions, not only with regard to his own people, but also to the fate of the Gentile powers even to the time when "the kingdom and dominion under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." After the seventy years were expired, by command of Cyrus, king of Persia, whose empire had superseded that of Babylon, the Jews headed by Ezra, returned to Jerusalem, and in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah we have an account of their resettlement, and of the building of a temple which was so far inferior to the former one, that it drew tears from the old men, who had seen the glory before the departure for Babylon.

An attempt was made by Nehemiah to restore the observance of the law, with some success, and in this state they continued, alternately oppressed by, revolting against, and at peace with the Gentile powers around them. The kingdom of David was not, nor has it ever yet been re-established, the Maccabean race of the tribe of Levi succeeded in rescuing their country from Syrian oppression, and, contrary to the law, were made kings; they reigned one hundred and twenty-nine years, until the Romans set up Herod; during his reign Messiah was born, and was put to death when the second Herod was governor in Galilee, and Pontius Pilate the Roman deputy in Judea. Having thus rejected and crucified the long expected One, because blindness has happened to them, that the purposes of redemption might be fulfilled; the cup of their iniquity was full, and about the year 70 an entire dispersion of the remnant of Judah took place, the city was razed, the temple burnt by the Romans under Titus, and from that period the nation has never been restored to their own land, but remain a persecuted and a scattered race. Jerusalem has continued in the hands of the enemies of the Lord, and on the very hill where stood the temple, the dwelling-place of Jehovah, a Moslem mosque glitters in the sunlight, and from it resounds the sentence which insults both Jew and Christian, "There is but one God, and Mahomed is his prophet!"

Can this state of things be allowed by the jealous God to continue? Shall the place where his honor once dwelt, —the sanctuary of his holiness, the Mount Zion which he loved, and of which he hath said, "This is my rest forever, here will I dwell for I have desired it,"—shall the mountain of his holiness be forever defiled by the Gentile abominations? Shall his people, who though sinful, are yet beloved for the Father's sakes, be thus scoffed and byword of those who are equally guilty with themselves, the taunt and reproach of them who reject the glory, as the Jew rejected the humiliation of the Messiah? or rather will he not descend from the place where he now stands as High Priest in the Holiest of Holies, and vindicate his own honor, and the honor of God his Father, by taking to him his great power, by gathering his brethren, the dispersed of Israel and Judah, from the four corners of the earth, reestablishing them in his and their land under his own dominion, thus rebuilding the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, at the same time destroying their oppressors, the enemies also of his reign, enlightening the blinded and delivering the oppressed nations, extending his righteous sway wherever over the children of men dwell, and causing the beams of his truth to dispute the gloom which now envelopes the earth, and with his mighty arm rending asunder the veil that is spread over all people? Yes truly, "For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the Governor among the nations," and to his Son Jesus Christ he saith, "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession; thou shalt break them with a rod of iron, thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Psa. ii. 8, 9. Again, Luke i. 32, 33, before his birth, the angel says, "He shall be great, and called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

We conclude, then, that the "kingdom of God" is the kingdom of Israel, that its former organization according to the law of Moses, and under the kings of Israel and Judah was intended to be only temporary, "until the Seed should come, to whom and concerning whom the promises were made," that to fulfil the promises contained in the covenant with Abraham, and in the throne made with David, the Israelitish nation must be everlastingly established in their own land, under Messiah their Prince, the territory of whose kingdom shall extend from the river of Egypt unto the river of Euphrates, and whose empire shall comprise the whole earth, having for its metropolis Jerusalem, emphatically styled "the city of the Great King."

To make the subject clearer, and to confirm the evidence already delivered, we shall quote a few passages from the Psalms and the Prophets, referring the reader to others in order to show,—

I. That the kingdom of Israel is "the kingdom of God."

II. That the Israelitish nation shall be restored from their present dispersion, and be everlastingly established under the Messiah their Prince and his co-heirs.

I Sam. viii. 6, when Israel had demanded a king, God says they thus had rejected him, and chap. xii. 12, "The Lord your God was your King."

Isaiah xli. 21, "Produce your cause, saith Jehovah, bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob." xliii. 15, "I am the Lord your Holy One, the Creator of Israel your King." xliv. 6, "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts, I am the first and I am the last; and beside me there is no God." Psa. xlviii. 2. Zion is called the city of the Great King," and thus the Savior names Jerusalem in Matt. v. 35; and in the eighth verse of Psa. xlviii., "The city of the Lord of Hosts, the city of our God." Are not these sufficient confirmation than the kingdom of Israel was and is, the kingdom of God?

Isaiah xi. 10, "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand a second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Egypt, and from Elam, and from the islands of the sea, and he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, (that is, the ten tribes) and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

Isaiah xliv., after having said Messiah should be his servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel, in the 18th verse Zion is told to lift up her eyes, and behold, for all her children gather themselves together: "For thy waste and desolate places, and the land of thy destruction shall even be too narrow for thee, by reason of the inhabitants," &c. Isaiah lx. tells of the restoration of Jerusalem to more than former glory; also the two following chapters.

Jer. iii. from verse 12 to 18; and verse 17, "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the Name of the Lord to Jerusalem, and in those days shall the house of Israel walk with the house of Judah, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."

Jeremiah xxiii. 5, "Behold the days come, said the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch," &c. Chap. xxx., "For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it," and verse 9, "they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them." The remainder of this, and the next two chapters, speak of the restoration, also the latter part of xxxii. 36-44 and xxviii. 7-26. Ezek. xxxvi. 6-24, and then their conversion to the Lord is predicted, verses 25-27. Chapter xxvii. gives a symbolic representation of their restoration, under the figure of the resurrection of an army, whose bones were dried and scattered; and verse 25, we see the everlasting nature of their re-establishment. Again in chap. xxxiv. 21-29, and here God says, "Neither will I hide my face any more from them: for I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord God."

We see in these passages that their Great King is sometimes called Jehovah, and sometimes David: this is because he is Son of David as well as Son of God. Passages might be multiplied,—but surely these are sufficient to show that there is a restoration of the twelve tribes yet future, for the ten, properly called Israel, have never been restored since their dispersion by Shalmaneser king of Assyria; and when Judah and Benjamin did return from Babylon, the regal government of the family of David was not re-established, and never has been since. In fact no prince of the house of David has, or ever can reign again, until Messiah; for the Lord says to the last prince, in Ezek. xxi. 26, 27, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown, etc. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." We know that the one "whose right it is," is the promised seed of Abraham, who shall inherit all things, and the promised seed of David, who should establish David's "throne and kingdom for ever in his sight."

Thus we have seen that the children of Israel and Judah will be everlastingly established in their own land under the Messiah their Prince, and we know that Jesus of Nazareth is this Messiah, this Anointed King; and though he once "came unto his own, his own received him not," though the keepers of his Father's vineyard slew him, yet God raised him from the dead, "and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places," there to remain until the times of the restitution of all things, the restitution of the nation to the land, the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, the restoration of the faithful dead (those who have died in faith not having received the promises) to life, never again to die, that they may witness the glory of Messiah; and the restoration of an obedient and teachable spirit to the now blinded and rebellious children of Abraham.

But besides the witnesses of the Shiloh's glory mentioned, Isaiah xxiv. 23, under the title of "his ancients," there are to be shares in that glory, co-heirs of that kingdom, Isaiah xxxii. 1, "Behold a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." Now refer to Daniel vii.: the prophet having had a vision of the four Gentile monarchies, namely the Babylonian, then existing; the Medo-Persian, about to supersede it; the Grecian under Alexander and his four successors; finally, the Roman, with its twofold division, and the rise of the Papal horn, or power; beholds "the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven given to the Son of Man; but not to him alone, but to the saints of the Most High also, who are to reign with him everlastingly. But no one can legally inherit the throne of David, who is not of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Judah, of the family of David; and no one in the family of David has any right to it—possession but the Lord Jesus Christ.

How then can this difficulty be surmounted? The exclusive right appertaining to one person only, that person Jesus the Son of Mary, and yet to fulfil the prophetic Word there must be exclusive and a participation is desired by whomsoever desires these, both Jew and Gentile. John, the forerunner of the Lord, preached the glad tidings or Gospel of the kingdom in order that men might become heirs of it. Jesus did the same, the apostles also: the language of the invitation runs thus,—"Incline your ear and come unto me, hear and your soul shall live, and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David." On what grounds then can this be extended beyond the one seed of David? Simply on these grounds:—Every king has an undoubted right to have a queen to share his throne, and thus the great King of Israel, Jehovah's Anointed One, before entering on his dignities and honors, makes choice of a royal spouse. This title is given to the congregation of faithful ones, who believing the gospel, accept of the conditions proposed: they are elsewhere styled his church, which word church means an assembly called out for some specific purpose. The purpose for which the church of Christ is "called out" from a world lying in wickedness, is to partake of his kingdom and glorious design of the publication of the Word of God concerning this kingdom, is "take out," first from the Jews, then "from among the Gentiles, a people to the name of the Lord." See Acts iii. 26; xiii. 46; xv. 14. By taking the Name of the Lord in a solemn way appointed for that purpose, such persons are constituted of the mystical spouse of the heir to David's throne and kingdom, being thus made one with Christ, they become of the family of David, of the tribe of Judah, of the seed of Abraham; and thus Jehovah says, Isaiah lv. 9, "I will bring forth a seed out Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains, and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there."

There is one characteristic appertaining to the Rulers in the kingdom of God, which we have not yet noticed. We have seen their persons must be deathless, sinless; but this peculiarity relates to their office, they are priests as well as kings. The combination of the priesthood with the regal office is not uncommon in some countries even now, though it never was permitted under the former temporary establishment of the Israelitish kingdom. The following passages are conclusive on this point, Zech. vi. 12, 13. Speaking of the "Branch," (of David, that is Christ Jesus) Jehovah says, "He shall sit and rule upon his throne." Rev. i. 6. "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests," v. 10, "and we shall reign on the earth."

This priesthood is not the Aaronic order, but the order of Melchisedek, who was King of Salem, and priest of the Most High God in Abraham's days, and not only is it of greater antiquity, but superior to the Levitical priesthood, in every point of view; as was remarkably manifested by Abraham's offering tithes to Melchisedek. As Paul so ably argues these points, we refer the reader to his epistle to the Hebrews, from which he will also learn that the inauguration of Messiah to this order of priesthood is declared Psalm cx., in the words, "Jehovah hath sworn, and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedek." Of this order the Lord Jesus is now the Great High Priest: at present he is within the Holiest of Holies, there interceding for us.

But he will return, and then there are other sacrifices which he will either superintend or explain. We learn this from Ezekiel xlv. 17. Since the priests of Israel do this, those who are one with him must also. The Levitical priesthood will likewise be restored, as we learn,—Isa. lxvi. 21, lxi. 6; and since we cannot suppose that immortal beings could have anything to do with bloody sacrifices, we conclude that the mortal priests are the official sacrificing priesthood, see Ezek. xlv. 15-21, whilst the saints, the royal priests, act as Intercessors and Mediators between God and man, as did Moses, probably too, as living oracles declaring the will of God: for since their nature will be conformable to the Divine nature, being formed after the model of his only begotten Son, their wills must be his will.

But though every member of the Body of Christ will share in these offices, yet some are placed in more honorable stations than others, even as some now attain to a nearer likeness to the image of their Elder Brother, the Lord Jesus. Every man's reward shall be according to his work. There is an excellent illustration of this Luke xix. 12-27, to one is given authority over ten cities, to another authority over five, while the unprofitable servant is cast out of the kingdom entirely.

The jurisdiction of the twelve apostles is plainly stated (Luke xxii. 29, 30, and Matt. xix. 28) to be over the twelve tribes of Israel: we are not informed how far the extent of the dominion will be given to the Great Apostle of the Gentiles, but it is not improbable that as far as his labors extended, whilst every other saint will be honored accordingly, since the empire of the King of Israel will in time extend over the whole earth. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David," etc. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the earth, and the isles shall wait for his law."

This, then, is the sum of the matter. God is about to establish his kingdom, to connect the nations into one great empire, the metropolis of which shall be Jerusalem: "And Jehovah shall be King over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one," Zech. xiv. 9. "At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord, and all the nations shall be gathered together to the name of the Lord to Jerusalem." Jer. iii. 17. At Jerusalem there will be a temple built, to which all nations shall send representatives to worship, to offer offerings and suitable oblations, see Ezek. xl., and four following chapters. Isa. lvi. 8, "Even them, (the sons of the stranger that join themselves unto the Lord) will I bring to mine holy mountain, and make them joyful in mine house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar, for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people," and Zech. xiv. 16, "it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations that come against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles."

That Jesus of Nazareth is that man whom God hath ordained to rule over the world in righteousness, and that he unites in his own person the offices of King and Supreme Pontiff, he being the Anointed One, that is, the Christ. That united with him in these offices are his saints, the members of his mystical Bride, the Church; his ancients or elders sitting down in the kingdom and witnessing his glory. That the subjects of his kingdom are the twelve tribes of Israel, restored to their own land, building houses, planting vineyards, and their numbers increased as the stars of heaven, and as the sand on the sea-shore, on whose hearts the law of God shall be inscribed, and who will therefore be the righteous nation" of Isa. xxvi. 2. That the subjects of this empire are all the nations on the habitable globe. Pagan, Papal, Protestant and Mohammedan, who shall cast their idols and foolish traditions to the moles and to the bats, walking no longer "after the imagination of their own hearts:" to whom the Lord shall speak peace; who, having beaten their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, shall learn war no more, but shall say, "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, (that is Zion,) to the house of the God of Jacob, for he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Isa. ii. 2. Then will be fulfilled not only in the earnest, as at the present time, but in the fulness, that gracious promises made to Abraham, the father of the Israelitish nation: "In thee and in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed." Then will be fulfilled the sacred words of David, "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of the Lord: and he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth a morning without clouds, as the tender grass springeth out of the earth by clear shining after rain." Then will David's last prayer be answered, that beautiful prayer contained in Psa. lxxii. Then may it be said to Jerusalem, "Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning are ended."

We have given few quotations from the New Testament, but we beseech the reader to examine whether or not this gospel of the kingdom was preached by the Lord and his apostles: we shall, however, conclude with a passage from the Revelation, chap. xx. 4, 5, 9, "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years: but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

Then hasten ye slow revolving suns, and bring That glorious season promised long, when nations
And tongues of every clime, shall joy to own
The Great Messiah's sway; when to the rod
Of His most mighty rule shall bow
Each human knee, when o'er the canopy
Of heaven circles bright this beauteous world.
How blest shall earth's remotest nations be!
No more oppressed by tyrant Kings, or made
Tame willing slaves of priestly power! no more
Misled by erring guides, and taught to think
That truth which error is, that light which set
In darkness. Then the bright messenger of Him,
Who Sun of Righteousness is named, shall bestow
With boundless radiance, not known Zion's mount
Or Judea's land and truth; dispelling mists
Of ignorance and sin, which o'er the minds
Of men have brooded, since that direful day
When yielding to the serpent's wiles man lost
His spotless purity, and brought a veil
Of moral darkness o'er his soul. Then death
Obedient to the mighty voice of Him,
Who once bowed his gloomy tyrant's power
Seemed prostrate laid, for who did burst the bonds
And consecrating the Conqueror's crime upon
His keys, despoiled him of his power, that so
Henceforth within his portals dark, no soul
Might be retained one moment longer than
The Lord of Life decreed: his prey at once
Shall yield, and swallowed up in victory,
Mortality be changed for deathlessness,
By Grace, who loved not their lives so well
As Him who shed His blood to purchase them
From final death. Eye hath not seen, nor ear
Hath heard, nor can the heart of man conceive
The rapture of that hour, when by his voice
The righteous dead of every age and clime,
Upraised at once ascend to meet their Lord;
Who, from his Father's presence robed in light,
And crowned with many crowns, come forth
To make his Bride his own. Ten thousand times
Ten thousand angels bright attend upon
The nuptials of the Son of God. Robes pure
As snow, resplendent too as choicest gold
Of Ophir, show around each member fair
Of Christ's sister-spouse; for now at last
The marriage of the Lamb is come. Himself
Unto himself presents his mystic Bride.
His love, his glorious unbridled one,
Oh with what bliss must Calvin shall thrill
The heart of every saint, to hear his name
Connected amid that countless crowd of heav'ns
Exalted ones, to see that brow, once marred
And wounded by the thorny crown, beat on Them with a look of love intense to bear those life
Which once gave forth the agonizing cry,
"I thirst!" after those words, "Well done thou good
And faithful one, for my name's sake thou hast
Resisted earth's joys delusive, and hast borne
Reproach, shame, contumely, with every ill
That in the Adversary's power to wield
Against my chosen; now partake my joy,
Receive from me this crown of righteousness,
Be partner of my throne, and share with me
The regal sceptre of this world. Behold
Thy possession, govern well the realms
Entrusted to thy care; rule over them
With judgment, in the fear of God Most High,
Be to them their Priest, an Intercessor stand
'Twixt them and God our Father, teach all
His righteous laws, give them the Word of life,
For now the time is come when all the earth
In Abram's seed shall blessed be, and I
With all my loved ones, shall inherit that
Prepared for us within the mind of God
Before this earth's foundations first were laid."
O what o'erpowering bliss! oh what delight
To share the work of God's Anointed One!
Dispensing blessings o'er the earth, until
Before all nations righteousness and peace
Shall spring; and God's own glory, as the light,
Shall spread from pole to pole! In Zion's hill
The Lord will dwell. At Salem's lofty shrine
Shall worship, men of every name and clime,
And daily praises ever shall ascend
To God the Lord—to God in Jesus Christ
The Universal King.

Ye winged hours
Then haste, and bring that bright ordained morn
When from the East the Sun of Righteousness
Shall rise with healing in his wings, and as
The sun of nature to the genial sky
Imparts a beauty all unseen before,
So will his presence beautify the week,
And with resplendent glory clothe his saints."

Hesaias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 31.

1. Woe unto you who go down into Aegaptus for responsive-help, ye who trust in horses and chariots for they are many, and in horses a very great multitude; and who have not trusted in the Sacred One of Israael and have not sought the Lord.

2. And wisely hath he led out his plagues upon them and his Word shall not be set aside, and he will arise against houses of wicked men and against their vain hope.

3. An Aegaptian is a man and not a god. His steeds horses, and it is no responsive-help. And the Lord will bring his hand upon them and those who help will grow weary and they will all perish together.

4. Because in this wise hath the Lord said unto me: In the way that the lion or the lion's whelp roareth over the prey it hath taken and crieth over it until the mountains have been filled with his cry, and have quivered and stood in awe of the fulness of his anger, even so will the Lord of Sabaoth come down to encamp upon Mount Sinon upon the mountains thereof.

5. As birds that fly even so will the Lord of Sabaoth hover over Hieroushalem, and deliver and spare and save.

6. Return ye who are counseling deep counsel and transgression, ye sons of Israael.

7. Because in that day men will utterly deny their things made with hands, the silver and the gold things which their hands have made.

8. And Assaur will fall; not the sword of a hero, nor the sword of a man will devour him and he will flee not from a sword's face; but the young men will be inferior: For with a rock will they have become environed as with a trench and they will have become diminished: and the one who fleeth will be taken. Thus saith the Lord, Blessed-happy he who hath seed in Sinon and householders in Hieroushalem.

CHAPTER 32.

1. For lo, a king will reign, a just one, and rulers will rule with judicial sway;

2. And there will be the man who hideth his words, and he will hide himself as though from water that is being borne along: And he will appear in Sinon as a river that is being borne along, a glorious river in a thirsty land,

3. And no longer will they trust in men, but they will give ears to hear.

4. And the heart of those who are weak will give heed to hear, and the stammering tongues will speedily have learned to talk peace.

5. And no more shall they have told the unsavory to rule, and no more shall thy subordinates have said, Keep silence.

6. For the unsavory will talk unsavory things, and his heart will apprehend vain things, how he may consummate transgressions and talk error unto the Lord, how he may scatter hungry souls, and he will make thirsty souls empty.

7. For the counsel of the wicked will counsel transgressions to destroy the lowly with unjust words and invalidate vow is of the lowly in a judicial way.

8. But the truly reverent have counseled things understood and this counsel will abide.

9. Ye wealthy women, may ye have arisen and heard my voice; Ye daughters in hope, may ye have hearkened to my words.

10. May ye have caused days of a year to be remembered in woe with hope: The vintage hath been lavishly wasted, hath ceased, no more shall it have come.

11. Stand out, may ye have sorrowed ye women of faith; undothe yourselves, become naked; gird up your loins;

12. And beat upon your breasts for the desire of the field and the product of the vine.

13. O land of my laity, thorns and weeds will come up and from out every household rejoicing will have been taken away, O wealthy city;

14. Forsaken houses will send away a city's wealth, houses of desire forsooth; and the suburbs will be caves during the minute-age, a rejoicing of wild asses, feeding-places for flocks;

15. Until spirit from a High One shall have come upon you. And Chermel will be a waste, and Chermel will have been accounted a forest.

16. And judgment reckoned will rest in the wilderness, and righteousness will take up its abode in the Karmeus (the Carmel range of mountains).

17. And the works of [illegible] will be peace, and righteousness will control rest, and those who trust unto the minute-age will (control rest).

18. And his laity will take up their abode in a city of peace, and will dwell in confidence, and will rest in the midst of wealth.

19. And if the hail come down it will not come on you, and those who dwell in the forests will be in confidence even as those on the plain.

20. Blessed-happy are those who sow by every water where ox and ass are mentioned to tread.

CHAPTER 33.

1. Woe unto those who are making you wretched; but no one doth really make you wretched, and the one who setteth you aside, doth not really set aside; Those who are setting aside will be taken and will have been given up: and Deca moth in an outrageous men even so will they have been diminished.

2. O Lord, have mercy on us, for in thee have we hoped. The seed of the [illegible] who distrust hath come to be in loss; but our salvation is in a time of tribulation.

3. At the voice of fear latines have stood out: from fear of thee have nations also been scattered.

4. But now will your spoils have been gathered together for small and great; In the way that one may gather locusts, even so will they mock at you.

5. The Sacred God who dwelleth on high, hath been satisfied (fill. filled) with Sinon's judicial-way and righteousness:

6. In law will they have been given up in treasures will be our salvation: There will there be wisdom and exact knowledge and true reverence for the Lord: These are treasures of righteousness.

7. Lo, in fear of you will they have been afraid: Those of whom ye were afraid will see responsive-help from you: messengers will be sent, lamenting bitterly, exhorting peace.

8. For their ways will have been made desolate: The fear of the nations hath ceased, and the covenant with them is being taken away, and ye shall not account them as men.

9. The land hath sorrowed, the Libanus hath been put to shame: Saruon hath become marshes, Gabdnia will be manifest and Chermel:

10. Now shall I arise, saith the Lord, now shall I have been glorified, now shall I have been exalted.

11. Now will ye see, now will ye have apprehended. Vain will be the strength of your spirit: fire will devour you.

12. And nations will be burned down like akanthai in a field, that have been cast away and burned down.

13. Those afar off will hear what I have done; those who draw nigh will comprehend my strength.

14. The transgressors in Sinon have stood away; trembling will lay hold of the irreverent; who will tell you that fire burneth? Who will tell you of the agglutinating place?

15. He who goeth his way in righteousness, who talketh of an upright way, who hateth transgression and injustice, and who shaketh his hands free from bribes, who maketh his ears heavy so as not to hear a judgment of blood, who shutteth his eyes, so that he may not see injustice:

16. This one will take up his abode in a high cave of a strong rock: Bread will have been given unto him, and his water will be assured.

17. Ye will see a King in the midst of glory; your eyes will see a land afar off;

18. Your soul will meditate fear: Where are the scribes? Where are their fellow counselors? Where is the one who numbereth those being supported, small and great, a laity? A laity that belittleth a deep-voiced one so as not to hear him, with whom they did not take fellow-counsel nor know, is it, and a laity without understanding though it did hear.

20. In Sinon city, our instrumental salvation, thine eyes will see Hieroushalem; a wealthy city art thou, thy tents shall not be shaken nor thy tent-pins be moved for the age-lasting time, nor shall the cords thereof be rent asunder.

21. Because the name of the Lord is great for you; A place for you will there be, rivers and broad canals and wide spaces: There will not go nor will a ship that saileth go its way this way.

22. For my God is great, the Lord our Judge will not pass me by, the Lord our Ruler, the Lord our King, this Lord will save us.

23. Thy cords were rent because they were not strong: Thy [illegible] will not hoist a sign, and it is given up to plunder. Therefore many one will take plunder.

24. And they shall [illegible] laity that dwelleth in them. I toil wearily: For the sin hath been remitted unto them.

COMMENT.

The 31st chapter amplifies the woe upon those who go down into Egypt and trust in horses and chariots and a man of flesh instead of the Sacred One of Israael and his "responsive-help."

Nevertheless the Lord keeps watch and ward over Sinon and Hieroushalem where he hath placed his name to sanctify it, and he promises ultimately to deliver and save after he has chastened and the chapter though it begins with a woe ends with a blessing: And the 32nd chapter amplifies and expands this blessing, making it specific and unmistakeably Messianic—unmistakably in the light of the later revelation of the New Covenant Scriptures. Read the 2nd and 3rd verses as here rendered and compare them with the C. V. and R. V. The vagueness of the personality vanishes and the Christ stands out clear and distinct in every word and line.

The sixth verse reminds us of the 11th verse of the 23rd chap. of the Apocalypse of John.

Is "the minute-age" of the 14th verse "forever and ever" think ye, or is it in this case "the times of the Gentiles?" Observe the difference brought out here between "Chermel" and "the Karmelus." Both words being translated "wilderness" in the R. V. Compare the whole chapter as the variations are too many to specify particularly.

The 33rd chapter opens with a comforting assurance to God's people similar to the assurance elsewhere given us—"if God be for us who can be against us?" Our "wretchedness" and our "setting aside" is really only a seeming for the time being, and is the puny endeavor of the finite army of against the infinite. If our faith were large enough we should constantly see this and discouragement would be at a discount. With the 5th verse the assurance begins to be made specific and the manner of the deliverance begins to be made manifest and become cumulative in the 15th verse in which the personal Christ, the Deliverer, becomes apparent. The climax is reached appropriately in the 16th a double octave by the way. The 17th verse is a vision of the King in his glory. The 18th verse is the one Paul quotes from: "Where are the scribes, etc." "The deep-voiced One" of this verse is undoubtedly a reference to Christ, and his rejection by a "laity without understanding" here stated—history before the event. The 21, 22, 23 and 24th verses give a vision of the new Hieroushalem in its redeemed glory, and the rationale of its warfare that precedes its redemption.

Uniformed Attendants for Eastern Passengers via Pennsylvania Lines.

A Uniformed Parcel Porter service was recently established at the Jersey City Passenger station of the Pennsylvania Lines. The duties of these porters are to look after the comfort of all arriving and departing passengers over the Pennsylvania System, and to accompany them (if desired) between Cortlandt street ferry, New York City, and the American Line Pier, Sixth Avenue Elevated Railroad, and the Central Railroad of New Jersey Station; also between Desbrosses street ferry, New York City, and the Ninth Avenue Elevated Railroad.

The Uniformed Parcel Porter service has just been extended to the Philadelphia Broad Street Passenger station of the Pennsylvania Lines, where porters will meet all trains and assist passengers who may desire their aid; take charge of calling cabs when needed; meet carriages and make themselves generally useful to passengers. They will be in attendance from 6 A. M. until 12 midnight, and when accompanying passengers will carry parcels and hand baggage.

They are not permitted to charge for this service, nor to intimate in any way that a fee will be expected. Any recognition of their assistance must be in the nature of a positive gratuity, entirely optional with the person served.—June 1.

Every Sunday agents of the Nickle Plate Road are authorized to sell one day limit excursion tickets between any local stations at one fare rate—81.

Announcement.

The Annual Meeting of the Church of God in Christ Jesus, worshiping at Scholls, Ore., will be held on the 19th, 20th and 21st of June, 1896. The brethren extend a cordial invitation to others of like precious faith to meet with us at that time, to the end that we may all be edified.

W. W. JAY, 7TH, Church Sec.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at Moorhe school house in Furnas County, commencing Friday, May 29th and holding over Sunday.

We would be glad to have as many of the brothers and sisters at this meeting as can possibly come. We could encourage one another by our presence, and help to make the meeting a pleasant and profitable one. Come in the spirit of the Master and we feel sure that you will be repaid for so doing. Each congregation is requested to send in a report, and also their vote as to where they wish the next Annual Conference to be held.

Yours in love of the truth.

BENA M. GORMON, Sec.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in Indiana, will be held at the Antioch Meeting-house, five miles South of Plymouth, commencing on Friday June 12, 1896, at 2.30 p. m. and continuing over the following Sunday. Believing as we do that the gospel dispensation is very near to its close, and the day is far spent, let us be up and doing lest the night cometh when no man can work and we be overtaken as a thief in the night.

To all of like precious faith, we say come. Come and enjoy another good meeting, renew your strength and energy in the cause and encourage others.

J. F. WAGONER, Pres.
A. C. ROBBINS, Sec.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God, in Michigan, will be held (D. V.) at Brady, Kalamazoo Co., Michigan, commencing Thursday evening June 4th, 1896, and continue over the following Sunday.

Friends coming from the North, reach Vicksburg via the G. R. and I. R. R., which leaves Grand Rapids at 2: p. m. and will be met Thursday and Friday. Those coming from Hastings will take the G. R. and I. at Kalamazoo. All friends coming from the north will be met at Vicksburg. Those coming from the south will be met at Mendon, on Thursday and Friday. The train reaches Mendon about 11 A. M. There will be no special teams to meet friends on Saturday for the brethren all wish to have some good of the meetings themselves, and it is hoped all who wish to attend will make an effort to reach there by Thursday or Friday. Elder L. C. Chase of Adrian, Michigan, has promised to be with us, also Elder B. W. Woodward of Dutton Michigan. It is not often we have an opportunity of meeting together from different points of the State, to hear and to study God's Word. So come all that can and help to make this our Annual Conference as interesting as possible. The brethren and sisters of Brady send a most cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. All will be heartily welcomed.

EMMA JACKMAN, Sec.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Tracts.

We have printed the letter to Dr. Talmage and J. A. Connet written by Bro. and Sister Howard and printed in issue of April 22, in tract form, and can supply them at two cents each, or 15 cents a dozen.—Address THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Half fare Sunday excursions commencing at once, the Nickel Plate Road will sell one day limit excursion tickets between any two local points at rate of one fare for the round trip. Ask agents.—89.

Poetry.

The Day is at hand.

Poor, fainting pilgrim, still hold on thy way—
The dawn is near!
True, thou art weary now, but soon bright ray
Becomes more clear.
Bear up a little longer, wait for it,
Yield not to doubts, though with it is oppressed.

The night of life is mournful, but look on—
The dawn is near!
Soon will earth's shadows all across and forms be gone;
Yield not to fear!
The mountain's summit will, ere long be gained,
And the bright world of joy and peace attained,
"Joyful through hope," thy motto still must be—
The dawn is near!
What glories will that dawn unfold to thee!
Be of good cheer!
Gird up thy loins, burn candles on thy feet;
The way is dark and lone; the end is sweet.

Rescue the Perishing.

The above topic was suggested to my mind by the singing of the hymn which commences with the words:

"Rescue the perishing,
Care for the dying,
Snatch them in pity from sin and the grave;
Weep over the erring one,
Lift up the fallen,
Tell them of Jesus, the mighty to save."

Beloved do we not see our fellows perishing on the right hand, and on the left, swept off into the dark, dreary chasm of the grave, without knowing the way of release so plainly revealed in God's Holy Word? Does it not fill our hearts with pity, and an eager yearning to ring the gospel bell clearer, that its melodious peals may cause their hearts to sing for joy as it has ours?

In failing to do this, are we not guilty of a sin of omission, which is as grave as a sin of commission?

Beloved, this applies to all who have appropriated the true gospel message. Every one has the "pound" given them, which the Lord will require you to present to him with increase when he appears. It is every one that "heareth," that must say: "come." Do not make a mistake and think the pulpit is the only place to say "come." Go privately to your neighbor, and say "come." Give them a tract, which tells how to "come." Ask them to come to your public assembly where the gospel is to be proclaimed. There are a multitude of ways in which every one can do something towards rescuing the perishing.

Another branch of this glorious work, is to

"Weep over the erring one,
Lift up the fallen."

Because a brother or sister may err, Oh don't condemn them, but lift them up, restore them again to their place in the fold. Tell them of the tender-hearted Shepherd who loves to lead them to green pastures and beside still waters.

An eminently practical lesson which I gave some time since, drawn from the "manchild" of Rev. xii. has stimulated a number to walk closer with God, that they may receive the blessing promised the "overcomer" in the name of Jesus. I have been pleased to see this, and hope they will not allow any adverse criticism of the above Scripture, to discourage them. Was sorry to see one such recently appear, which would destroy this lesson. The said article, made the blasphemous pope, the man-child, and its former persecution of those who differed in religious belief, "the ruling of all nations with a rod of iron." It needs but a few words to show the theory false, and thus preserve the lesson as a stimulus to greater action, and noble deeds.

Refer to Rev. xi. 15, and it reads: "And the seventh angel sounded," and following this on through the twelfth chapter, is the recital of events which shall happen after its sounding, and among these events, is the taking of the kingdom by Christ, the judgment of the dead, the reward of the saints, the birth of the "manchild," etc.

I never yet saw a prophetic scholar which claimed that the seventh angel has yet sounded, and if it has not sounded, the events which should happen after its sounding, could not now be matters of history. The rise of the stone that Daniel saw cut out of the mountain grew until it filled all the earth. If in Abraham and his seed all the families of the earth were to be blessed, and you keep out the Gentiles till the 1000 years expires, where will the time be for the blessing of the nations? It will be rather a hard task to bestow much blessing on them as the devil is to be turned loose on them. You say we have an everlasting kingdom and an everlasting dominion, or two territories, the kingship and the dominion or authority, a part of the kingdom, or a province. A king, territory, subjects and laws is all that constitutes the kingdom of God, and we thank God that we Gentiles will not have to wait to the end of the 1000 years before we enter into that rest promised to all the faithful of all ages, both Jew and Greek, and all enter at the same time. Paul says that he will get the crown at the same time as all those that love the appearing of Christ and his kingdom. The Bride and Bridegroom work together during the times of restitution of the things to be restored spoken of by the prophets. So Brother, let us exchange thoughts and bring out the truth. We will never know much unless we reason together. Praying for the time soon to come when we shall see eye to eye, and speak the same thing.

Your Brother in hope of eternal life when he comes whose rig. it is to sit on the throne of the kingdom. Amen

J. W. GAMBLE.

God's Word Harmonious.

"Let both grow together."
"Put away that wicked person."

These two statements, one from the Master, and the other from Paul, are thought by some to be contradictory, and hard to harmonize. What [illegible] other class less conscientious [illegible] the statement from the Master [illegible] church, and says let both [illegible] tares grow together in the [illegible] and that we have no right [illegible] and disfellowship any one, [illegible] otherwise, is for a lack of [illegible] "Oh, my, what a church that [illegible] be, and what a confusion these Babel-builders got into. I will venture to say this much, that no man or woman will think or talk that way, who has studied to show themselves a workman approved unto God, rightly dividing and applying the Word of Truth.

A few observations I think will help to solve the difficulty. First, the Master was discoursing to the multitude in parables, about the kingdom of heaven. He illustrates his mission by a man who sowed good seed in his field; but while man slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. Note, The sower sowed good seed in his field, the enemy sowed tares among the wheat in the same field of course. The Master explains to his disciples, that the Son of Man sowed the good seed, the Word of the kingdom. This was done when he went about all the cities and villages, teaching in the synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. But when his apostles continued sowing the good seed had fallen asleep in death, then the enemy—the devil—sowed the tares—false doctrines. The good seed the Word of the kingdom produces the children of the kingdom, the little flock, to whom the kingdom will be given, but not so of the tares sown by the enemy. Note that, the sowing is in the field, and the field is the world, not the church, all grow together in this big field, until the harvest at the end of the world, then the separation of the tares from the wheat. The tares are bound in bundles, (out-bound fagots) to be burned. It is true, that the church soon apostatized from the pure faith, and became corrupted on account of her open door to the world and false doctrines, because she failed to keep the bars closed, and to guard the faith once delivered to the saints. She was carried away, by the seductive cry that is heard all about us, "It makes no difference what you believe, nor not much what you do. Let us all grow together." One fact ought to settle this matter, and help us to apply our Master's language correctly, and that is this: the good seed, the world (not the Church) as a means of bringing out and forming a church. The sowing first, and the church as a result. Now a few words about the other side. Paul is writing to the church at Corinth, and he reproves and rebukes and corrects them sharply. Sin has crept in and was tolerated by those liberal folks. But Paul thought otherwise, that bad men was a hinderance of heaven, and if let alone will leaven and corrupt the church. Purge out the old leaven, by delivering such an one unto satan. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person. This is plain, and the churches need weeding bad is also plain.

T. E. ADAMS.

Thanks, Thanks.

To the many, many dear ones of the faith who have so lovingly thought of us by letter since our darling Ellie "Sleeps" I desire to extend our thanks. I would like to answer each one personally, but sickness and added cares have prevented, but dear ones every word you have written has been precious to me, helping me to bear the loneliness and heartaches. How we thank God for the dear, thoughtful friends, how kind the good Father is to provide these human helps, for there are times when it seems we cannot live without them, and he knows how necessary they are to our happiness, and lovingly provides them for us; for all this we are thankful, and for many other things; among the many let us mention one. We are so glad God has used us in helping some others to purify these beautiful "Temples of God." While in Ind., last winter at two different points the conversation turned to the subject of tobacco using, to which [illegible] brothers were addicted. One [illegible] said he would like to take [illegible] Restitution but could not at [illegible] as times were hard and he had [illegible] money. I kindly asked him [illegible] such money he used through the [illegible] for tobacco, as he replied, I said [illegible] brother that would pay for the paper several years. He thought a moment and said that is so Sister Woodward, I believe I'll stop using it. We were so rejoiced not long since to receive a letter saying, Sister Woodward, we take the paper now. I have stopped using tobacco and can now kneel and pray with clean lips, and am happy over it. We thank God for this. The second brother sent me, word by my husband, Tell Sister Woodward I have stopped using tobacco, and we have our family worship every day. How thankful we are to hear these things from these two, but how many we can think of—some preachers of the blessed truth,—who are using the filthy, foul-stenched stuff. "The Devil's cologne" it has been called and it could not have a more appropriate name, and they with us are waiting, hoping to hear the unchanged trumpet cut the signal for the approaching King of glory to claim his Bride. How can we say we are ready, while filled with such defiling stuff. When we are told to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." Brethren do for once as a brother here in Dutton did, take your tobacco, and pipes or cigars, lay them on a chair, kneel before them and try to ask your spotless Savior to entreat with the Father in your behalf, in blessing the filthy, blood poisoning, brain-benumbing, expensive stuff to your use, and then do again as the brother did before he could open his lips in prayer, he mildly looked upon the shameful stuff, arose, threw it in the stove, returned to his knees and with a glad heart, asked God to give him strength to never touch it again, and four years have passed since he has touched the defiling weed. We want to be all ready when he calls, and we have not much longer to wait dear hearts. May we do nothing that we may be ashamed before him at his appearing. God help us to be true to ourselves and true to God. Yours in Christ

MARY A. WOODWARD.

Be such a man, be such a life, that if every man were such as you, and every life as yours, the earth would be God's paradise.

Importance of Baptism.

"I have a baptism to be baptized with and how am I straitened till it be accomplished." Luke xii. 50

Such baptized into Christ's death will not make earthly ease and comfort their aim, but will seek to go round and rebukes and corrects them sharply. Sin has crept in and was tolerated by those liberal folks. But Paul thought otherwise, that bad men was a hinderance of heaven, and if let alone will leaven and corrupt the church. Purge out the old leaven, by delivering such an one unto satan. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person. This is plain, and the churches need weeding bad is also plain.

One said he would like to take Restitution but could not at as times were hard and he had money. I kindly asked him such money he used through the for tobacco, as he replied, I said brother that would pay for the paper several years. He thought a moment and said that is so Sister Woodward, I believe I'll stop using it. We were so rejoiced not long since to receive a letter saying, Sister Woodward, we take the paper now. I have stopped using tobacco and can now kneel and pray with clean lips, and am happy over it. We thank God for this. The second brother sent me, word by my husband, Tell Sister Woodward I have stopped using tobacco, and we have our family worship every day. How thankful we are to hear these things from these two, but how many we can think of—some preachers of the blessed truth,—who are using the filthy, foul-stenched stuff. "The Devil's cologne" it has been called and it could not have a more appropriate name, and they with us are waiting, hoping to hear the unchanged trumpet cut the signal for the approaching King of glory to claim his Bride. How can we say we are ready, while filled with such defiling stuff. When we are told to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." Brethren do for once as a brother here in Dutton did, take your tobacco, and pipes or cigars, lay them on a chair, kneel before them and try to ask your spotless Savior to entreat with the Father in your behalf, in blessing the filthy, blood poisoning, brain-benumbing, expensive stuff to your use, and then do again as the brother did before he could open his lips in prayer, he mildly looked upon the shameful stuff, arose, threw it in the stove, returned to his knees and with a glad heart, asked God to give him strength to never touch it again, and four years have passed since he has touched the defiling weed. We want to be all ready when he calls, and we have not much longer to wait dear hearts. May we do nothing that we may be ashamed before him at his appearing. God help us to be true to ourselves and true to God. Yours in Christ

Dear Brother:

Please allow me space in your highly esteemed instructor, THE RESTITUTION, a few remarks on Bro. Gray's article which appeared in number 20. Bro. Gray affirms that Bro. Brown is figuring away ahead of time. If I don't mistake Bro. Gray is figuring away behind the good time to come. If I understand him aright he says that nothing but the Jews will have part in the establishing of the kingdom. Well Brother, don't you think that both Jew and Gentile will compose the Bride of Christ, and don't the Bible teach that the marriage of the Lamb is to take place prior to the setting up of the kingdom? "To him that overcometh will I give power over the nations, etc." "Blessed is he that hath part in the first resurrection," and the living changed and both caught away to the marriage? Don't you think that there will be some Gentiles in this number as well as the Jews? If we don't be instrumental in establishing the kingdom and have to wait to the end of the 1000 years, I am afraid none of us will be rulers in the kingdom. So far as Gentile goes we are all Gentiles until baptized into the Anointed, then we become Abraham's seed according to the promise. We are grafted into the true Vine by a belief of the gospel and its requirements. Then we change relationship from old dead Adam into the new Adam or living Head. Now, the second Adam you will admit was a Jew, so we by change of purpose, become a Jew also. You say there is no promise of the kingdom to the Gentiles, where is there any promise of the dominion to the Gentiles? You say the saints are to take the dominion. Who are the saints the Jews or Gentiles, or give me chapter and verse where the Gentile saints occurs. You say there is a difference between Christ's kingdom and the dominions. As I understand, the word dominion means authority in the kingdom or a part of the kingdom. By the way I understand your article, Christ's kingdom will be limited to Palestine, but the stone that Daniel saw cut out of Signs of the Lord's Coming.

The subject of Christ's return is ever welcome to those who are waiting and watching for the return of the Master. When meditating on this subject I have often wondered that more stress is not laid on the signs given by Christ in Matt. xxiv. 29. The darkening of the sun, moon, and falling of the stars, and shaking of the powers of the heavens, are given in close connection with the sign of the Son of Man in heaven. When these signs are seen we are to know that he is near even at the door, verse 33. It seems that our position is to wait until we see the signs given by the Master, and then we can expect to see him appear, because he assures us that his words shall not pass away. It is time to give up the idea that the dark day of 1780, and the falling of the stars in 1833 is what the Lord refers to in Matt. xxiv. That view was never in harmony with the examples given us in the Scriptures, where similar phenomena are described.

The dark day of 1780 was too much of a local affair, and too far from the coming of the Lord as time has demonstrated. The same is true of the falling of the stars in 1833. The generation that saw the falling of the stars in 1833 are now in their graves, that event being sixty years in the past, if no other evidence of the error of that view could be produced, time has demonstrated its untenableness.

The language of the Master is evidently symbolic and not literal. In Gen. xxxvii. in the account of Joseph's dream, Jacob understood it in a symbolic sense, also in the account by the prophet of the destruction of Babylon it must be understood in the same way. And in Rev. vi. in the opening of the sixth seal the language is symbolic. If we mistake not we see signs of a coming earthquake which will darken the political and ecclesiastical sun, moon and stars, and cause the stars of said heavens to fall to the earth, as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs when shaken by a mighty wind. Then we shall know that he is near, even at the door. Even so come Lord Jesus.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel the literal resurrection of the dead; the life-sanctification of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only in Christ, Christ and many other kindred truths. Also, hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and confession to the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sin, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Immortality.

Dear Restitution:

I have been reading the paper for the past two years and have enjoyed it, for it is the Word of God, not tradition. As there has been said a great deal on the question of immortality, I would like to say a word, as it has become so common a thing when reading the Bible by the masses of the people, to understand that it don't mean what it says, and there has to be a spiritual meaning put upon those words. This leaves a large field for discussion. If the Bible don't mean what it says, we can never know what it does mean. There must be something wrong somewhere. The devil lied in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die." Gen. iii. 4. This has been a telling place for every unclean and hateful bird. Rev. xviii. 2. What difference is there between the orthodox spiritualist and heathendom? Can't one demonstrate as much of his future hope as the other? Its mystic imagery; something they can not explain? Is it reasonable to believe that God has given us a Bible that takes so much theology and commentators to explain the simplest word when found in the Bible? If I should ask a modern theologist to define the word soul, he would say it is the part of man that is capable of living, knowing and acting, after the body has gone down in ruin and decay. This does not harmonize with the Word of God. "For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave where thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10. With what emphasis these words are used, (wisdom and knowledge) what is there about man this would not cover? Take this in connection with Job xvii. 13, 14, 15, 16. "If I wait the grave is mine house, I have made my bed in darkness, I have said to corruption thou art my father, to the worm thou art my mother and my sister, and where is now my hope, who shall see it they shall go down to the bars of the pit, where our rest together is in the dust." Job did not expect to enter upon his reward at death. This don't sound to me like a place of bliss and happiness. This was a dark looking place for Job. The Psalmist looked ahead to that glorious resurrection morn. "As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness, I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Ps. xvii. 15. I too will be satisfied when I also awake with thy likeness, and am worthy to live and reign with Christ a thousand years. Rev. xx. 5.

I remain your true brother looking for the soon coming King.

C. D. GILL.

Never before in the history of the world was it so serious, so sacred, so splendid a thing to live. Life is another name for opportunity. What a kingly and queenly inheritance is theirs whose young lives are to-day consecrated to Christ? Upon what thrones of power do they sit? What sceptors of privilege are placed within their hands? What crowns of victory reward their earnest efforts! What young man or young woman who is Christ's can live in the closing decade of the nineteenth century and beneath the skies of the new World, and not feel his nerves thrill, his blood grow warm and his heart catch on fire with an all-absorbing ambition to do something for God and humanity.

God, who knows the thoughts and intents of the heart, and to whom all things are naked and open, see the "meek be" of the discipline he appoints for his children. He knows our peril from pride, self-will and unmortified affections by which they may be overcome. "No chastening, for the present, seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness to them which are exercised thereby."

PLYMOUTH, IND., JUNE 10, 1886.

SOLOMON BENNET, a Jewish writer of the Restoration from Babylon, states that the wealthiest, noblest and most numerous part of the nation remained behind.

"From the language of Isa. liv., it would appear that the future marriage with Israel will be that of a widow, while that of the church is of a chaste virgin. 2 Cor. xi. 2."

THE request to write upon the purpose of Christ's death will be complied with shortly, the Lord willing, as will also that respecting the non-resurrection of the wicked.

"Forever with the Lord."
"Forever with the Lord!
Amen—so let it be Life from the dead is in that word—
'Tis mountainty.

WE are pained to tell the brethren and sisters of the death of our Sister Mrs. J. L. Cleveland, who has been very ill for one year. She died on the evening of June 6, and was buried on the 9th. We will give a more extended notice next week.

BUTTE MONT., June 2.—An unknown man who committed suicide yesterday is now believed to be Pastor Hermann, who is accused of two murders in his church at Salt Lake, Utah. The body answers the description of the deceased in almost every particular.

"THE blood is the soul, or life, is a statement of the Old Testament. When the blood is poured out, an animal becomes inanimate. The breath is the bodily sign of the Spirit;—the blood of the soul. So the Son of Man breathed forth his spirit to the Father: but his soul he poured out unto death."

SUCH as I have give I thee, "Have, give." Have and give should never be separated. What God has joined together, let no man put asunder. The idea we want to express is, to have something before you give anything. Some people give when they (really) have nothing to give, and so give what belongs to others.

MUCH is said to have been instituted upon Sunday (?) Hermann of Salt Lake, Utah. He was Pastor of a Scandinavian Methodist Church there. It is said to be morally certain that he murdered a Miss Olsen and buried her under the stairs in the basement of the church edifice, and that a Miss Samuelson also fell a victim to his lust.

THE Bishop of Durham says, "Baptism is the grave of the old man and the birth of the new. To descend to death the baptismal waters, the believer buries their bisected affections and past sins. As he emerges thence he rises quickened to new hopes and a new life. Thus Baptism is an image of his participation both in the death and resurrection of Christ."

BETRAL—"For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee," Isa. lxii. 5. Bishop Lowth's emendation was—"So shall thy Restorer marry thee;" but it appears that the word rendered thy sons in the one case, and "Restorer" in the other needs only to be properly pointed and pronounced to become "thy builder" for it is the same word used in Gen. ii. 22, with reference to the foundation of the woman out of the man: "And the Lord builded the rib which he had taken from Adam into a woman."

WE have received the following:—

Dear Brother:

Please allow me space in your paper that I may send word to my many friends that I am improving, and that the doctors say if nothing serious sets in that I will recover, that both legs will be saved. But I will be left a cripple in one leg. Asking the prayers of all of God's people for my speedy recovery.

Yours looking for the soon coming of Christ.

G. W. SMITH.

MY wife attended the Michigan Conference and reports a very successful meeting. Quite a number from different parts of the State were present, and all seemed to be working in unity. There is a good interest at the place where the meeting was held. Six in number were baptized on Sunday morning, and on Monday morning others were to follow. The secretary will send us a full report. The kind hospitality of those who entertained the visitors was highly appreciated by my wife, and all I regret is that I could not be present also.

Current Events.

The last week of May 1886 will long be remembered as a week of horrors. Thousands of lives and many millions of property were lost in Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Iowa, and other places by cyclones, the severest blow of all having fallen upon East St. Louis and vicinity, harrowing details of which have been day after day published. On contemplating these terrible visitations it makes us sigh for the Great Deliverer to restore disordered nature. Our heart goes out toward the bereaved and destitute families, but we are not able to give material assistance. How long, oh Lord, how long? Later a despatch from St. Louis says:—"The relief fund this morning has crept up to nearly $120,000, and by night at least $20,000 more will have been subscribed.

The public schools in the tornado districts were reopened this morning with nearly the usual attendance.

The House of Delegates met last night and passed a concurrent resolution setting forth that St. Louis was unable to care for its needy, and stating that an appeal to the whole country should be made.

A despatch from Athens May 26 says that disaster in the Island of Crete seems suddenly to have been precipitated, and since Sunday anarchy has reigned at Canea.

The Turkish soldiers, breaking all restraints, poured through the streets, shooting, massacring and pillaging Christians. The consuls have all telegraphed for warships. The British fleet at Malta sailed yesterday, for Crete. Her majesty's ship Hood, anchored at Palermo, started thither, last night. The Greek ironclads will start, today.

The carcasses of the Greek and Russian consulates at Canea have been killed. Turkhan Pasha is utterly powerless to restrain the soldiery, as he is on bad terms with the military governor, Izzet-in-Khan, who is suspected of being at the bottom of the whole trouble. The immediate cause of the outbreak, however is inexplicable, as the Christians there have never given provocation.

The situation at Petimo is equally serious. Heraklion is quiet, but sharp fighting is reported between the Turks and the Cretans in the vicinity of Vrumon.

Athens May 27.—Advices received here from the island of Crete state that the Turkish soldiers at Retimore are continuing their attacking upon the Christians, who have barricaded themselves within their houses. Telegraphic communications with the island of Crete, except messages to and from the foreign consuls there have been prohibited by the Turkish authorities.

The Czar of all the Russias was crowned at Moscow on the 26th ult. compassed by scenes of unparalled splendor and festivities which were kept up day after day. On the 30th in a mad rush for the 500,000 souvenirs to be distributed on the plain of Khodjinskoie near 2000 persons were trampled to death. It appears that the wagons laden with the souvenirs which were to be distributed among the people were proceeding to the Khodjinskoie plain, followed by a multitude of eager peasants, when the attendants, with a view to pleasing the people, threw a number of the souvenirs among the crowd. There was a wild scramble towards the point where they fell, and the newspaper like wildfire up and down the throngs of expectant peasants that the distribution had commenced. This resulted in a headlong, pell-mell rush for the booths where the distribution of souvenirs was to have been made later. The arrangements which it was intended to make to keep the crowd in order during the distribution had not been completed at that early hour, and the force on hand was powerless to stem the tide of the crush of humanity.

What added greatly to the gravity of the disaster was the circumstances that these booths were surrounded by ditches. The foremost persons in the oncoming crowd fell prostrated in these ditches, and those following speedily trampled them to death. Others stumbled over their bodies and met the same fate. And so the horror grew. The pressure was so great upon the sides of the booths from the struggles of the mass of mad humanity that they gave way, and hundreds of people were forced into them through the broken walls. One mounted gendarme near the booths was literally crushed to death, together with his rearing and plunging horse.

London, June 2.—The Standard's correspondent estimates the number of dead on Hodynsky Plain at 3,500, besides the 1,100 injured. The lower classes of the populace are intensely exasperated and language can be heard on the streets that at other times would cause the speakers to be severely punished.

The correspondent adds that when the police reinforcements and Cossacks arrived on the plain Saturday morning, as is customary with them when dealing with the peasantry, they applied their whips cruelly and needlessly, lashing the Moujiks, who were on the outskirts of the crowd. Two of the Cossacks were dragged from their horses by the enraged sufferers and killed.

The functions in connection with the coronation festivities are being given as though nothing had happened. The pleasure resorts are open as usual. Many of the Moujiks danced about the beer casks while the dead were lying around. The mob, subsequent to the disaster, callously stood by the corpses and received the doles. All the bodies of the victims were interred yesterday. About half of the dead were identified. The unclaimed dead filled 11 trenches which were 50 yards long.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.—A Reply to "The Christian Oracle," No. 17.

In turning our attention to some of the passages which are considered as the veritable strongholds of the church kingdom doctrine we dismiss the Oracle man for the time being, and furnish parts of our answers written to another representative man of the same Body, Eld. L. R. Sewell, in answer to letters from him. In reference to Rev. i. 9 we wrote him as follows, in substance:—You state that "John by asserting that he was in the kingdom of Jesus Christ, does not interfere with his language in other places in the least." We think differently: we think your construction of that passage materially interferes,—yea flatly opposes other plain Scriptures. The kingdom prepared for the saints is inherited when the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, Matt. xxv. 31-34. To say that they receive it before is to make the words of Jesus so much sublime nonsense. If John be made to say that he was in the kingdom of God those who make him say it should at least attempt to show its harmony with this Scriptures on [illegible] up the claim. If John was in a [illegible] dom of Jesus Christ, it was n[illegible] kingdom prepared from the fo[illegible] tion of the world, certainly; if w[illegible] invited. 1 Thess. ii. 2, They the kingdom Daniel predict[illegible] ieved the good news and ne[illegible] heave proof of another promi[illegible] the invitation, this was why dom should be given. In the [illegible] were persecuted, and the very of such proof they all should see [illegible] voices "faith" and "patience" show Rev. i. 9 is understood in a way that that the kingdom as yet only existed destroys many other Scriptures. In in prophecy, and was the subject matter Rom. viii. 14 we read: "As many as of hope, but the afflictions were in fact are led by the Spirit of God, they are the afflictions of the kingdom. John the Sons of God." They have received shared these afflictions with the what God intended, viz: the adoption Thessalonians and all trusters in God, of children, Eph. i. 5, and now because of the same faith and hope,—what follows? "And if children, then and for the same reason had patience. heirs: heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ: if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be glorified together." How plainly we are taught that both Christ and all the adopted children of God are heirs together. Jesus has not entered into the kingdom promised; he is not now inheriting the kingdom: his suffering has not ended yet: the believers all suffer with him,—that they may be glorified together, glorified in the same place, glorified at the same time, glorified in his saints. It is when his faithful ones are raised and glorified that he is glorified in them. If the Lord had already received the kingdom they were only heirs to, could it be said that they suffered with him? Exalted as he is he has not yet received the joy that was set before him;—he is still the heir to his Father David's throne. How impossible, then for John to be in the kingdom before the King himself—before the kingdom was.

1. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. xv. 50.

2. John was flesh and blood,

3. Therefore he did not inherit the kingdom of God.

Continuing, we wrote: "You admitted, sir, that the kingdom you contend for is not the everlasting kingdom; pray, why do you not furnish evidence of two promised kingdoms? Can it be that you can believe this without evidence? Will you in this connection consider carefully Jas. ii. 5? It says, "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."; Did not the brethren of James stand on the same footing as John? Was not John one of the poor of this world rich in faith—one of the HEIRS of the kingdom? Take notice that THE kingdom was the one that God had promised,—not ONE OF the kingdoms. "Your understanding of Rev. i. 9 also interferes with Acts xiv. 22, very materially. The disciples referred to there were not in the kingdom of God. Their entrance into it was future a long time after Pentecost. And while it may be convenient for you to account for this language, by saying that it refers to the everlasting kingdom, we think on reflection that this way of accounting for it without proving a transient kingdom at all, presumes so much on the obtuseness and ignorance of your hearers that it is quite inadmissible in an investigation of this kind. "Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good." 1 Thess. v. 21.

"Let us now consider the Language of Rev. i. 9. Will you not agree that John was, according to the common reading a companion, or co-partner in tribulation?—A co-partner or companion in the kingdom?—a co-partner or companion in the patience of Jesus Christ: Is anything distorted here? The conjunction holds good throughout the list of particulars enumerated. Is this not the natural and obvious meaning of the text? If so, shall we strain this language to make it mean that John was in the kingdom, when he only says he was their co-partner in the affliction and kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ? Would it not be far wiser to consult other inspired writers concerning it? You object to Wakefield's translation on account of some grammatical technicality. It reads like this:

"I John your brother, and sharer with you in enduring the affliction of the kingdom of Jesus Christ." Possibly Mr. Wakefield did not regard the Greek New Testament as the standard of Greek grammar. He may have been familiar with 2 Thess. i. 4, 5, where he treats precisely the same subject, and rather than make the passages oppose each other, rendered it as above. Let us hear Paul, "We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure—a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God." For what purpose, Paul? "That ye MAY be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer." Plainly they had not yet been counted worthy of the kingdom of God. They exercised patience and faith under afflictions, persecutions on account of the kingdom of God, to which they were invited. 1 Thess. ii. 2, They received the good news and nevertheless, this was why were persecuted, and the very voices "faith" and "patience" show that the kingdom as yet only existed in prophecy, and was the subject matter of hope, but the afflictions were in fact the afflictions of the kingdom. John shared these afflictions with the Thessalonians and all trusters in God, because of the same faith and hope,—and for the same reason had patience.

Rev. i. 9 does not compare with 1 Thess. i. 4, 5 in complexity nor elegance of diction, perhaps, but as God's Word is truth, they both teach the same doctrine.

"Companion in the patience of Jesus Christ."—what does it mean? Was John literally in the patience of Jesus Christ, or did he himself exercise patience on account of his faith in Jesus the Anointed One? The latter was true of the Thessalonians, for Paul says so, and why may it not be said of John? Listen: "The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God and into the patient waiting for Christ." Plainly "the patience OF Christ in the one case, is the same as the patient waiting FOR Christ in the other. The Anointed One must needs be present when the kingdom comes. He is to set up the kingdom. The glory to be revealed was a powerful motive to patience.

Rom. xii. 12 speaks of rejoicing in hope, and of being patient in tribulation." This, too, may be called the patience of Christ, because it was on account of their union with him that the tribulation came, making patience a necessity.

In 1 Thess. i. 3 we read of "their patience of hope in our Lord Jesus, so that the object of their patience was the subject of hope,—something future to be realized by or through Christ and in Christ. John, then, was a prospective sharer of the kingdom. There can be no mistake about this: If John was in the kingdom the Thessalonians were suffering tribulation in order to be worthy of entering it.

"You next ask: Does the fact that John was a subject of Christ interfere with the promise that he should after ward reign with him? Here the old assumption comes to the surface again in a question seriously put. We do not know that you intentionally put it in a specious manner, but rather that it was so specious that it deceived you by its appearance of right. If in any sense John were a subject of Christ that by no means proves that he was in the kingdom. You assume the point in dispute. John was in the church, and Christ is head over all things to the church, which is his body, and as a member of the body was certainly subject to the Head.

This figure of a body with its members applies to Christ and the church now, and if you try to extend that figure to a kingdom you will find that the Body becomes a monster. Neither in human experience nor Divine revelation is there an example of a kingdom in which all the subjects were anointed.

You next say, "Jesus was Son of the Eternal and was therefore heir to the throne?" Here, sir, you confound things that differ. The Heir will never come to throne, if he has to wait till the Father dies. The Eternal Father has never willed to the Son his eternal throne. It is the throne of his father David that God willed to him. see Is. ix. 6, 7 and Luke i. 32, 33. Consult Rev. iii. 21 and you will see the difference between the Father's throne which the Son is now seated upon by invitation (Psa. xl. 1), and the throne of glory promised him. Matt. xxv. 34.

My Trip.—Letter No. 2.

Dear Children at Home:

Immediately after dinner, with Bro. Dickenson's in Tekoa, May 15th, I started alone to ascend Mount Tekoa in order to get a view of the surrounding country. As I write I am as near the top as I care to go with the possibility of one of the showers, or blizzards that are hanging around the horizon and coming this way. One just passed over. As it came across the strangely piled up valley of hills below, I felt nervous for my hat, and a little uneasy as to whether the wind should prove strong enough to carry me off the ridge, and down the steeper parts a few rods away. So I dropped down by a lone fence post where a fence once crossed the mountain, and by leaning my head against it, am holding my hat on, and my nerves down. The thick looking storm has proved to be little spits of snow, "a squall," with a wind that might have taken my hat, but would have left me safe on Mount Tekoa.

The little storms, interspersed with sunshine, hanging in every quarter of the horizon, are marked illustrations of the events of this life. The storms when they come, are often not so severe as they appear when brewing. There! I have moved, for shelter, to one of the scrubby pines of which there are a half dozen to the acre, on the higher part, and eastern slope.

A more severe storm or cloud has come. I do not know whether to call it snow or hail; it has the whiteness of snow, but the hardness of hail. Oh! I see! It is snow, rolled through the clouds, until it has formed into hailstones. How often, in the storms of life, questions that should be light, and pure and harmless, as snowflakes are agitated, enlarged and frozen, by contention, until if we face the storm, we are pelted, till we drop, and cover, our heads in humility!

As I look around at the rocks, from the size of a pea to good sized boulders, with pasturage scattered between, I think "snakes! snakes!" But "it's an ill wind that blows nobody good;" its to cold for snakes, and for me too; so I will go back to town, and risk the snakes on a warmer day, if they inhabit this Rocky mountain. How like some human hearts is all this: The rocky soil can produce but little that is of value; rocky places are likely to be the dens of venomous reptiles; pride lifts up and makes the heart stony. A humble heart is the productive valley. What a beautiful picture we have from this mountain! The rollers, undulating hills with so much apparent regularity, that in driving through the country you will go twenty rods down hill, ten rods on a level and twenty rods up hill; or perhaps will vary it with a forty rods down, and forty up. It is like some peoples religion. I like a more level country and a more even religion.

At the foot of the mountain South is pretty Tekoa with its cheap but lovely habitations, for one thousand people; further South, about twelve miles, the like sized Farmington immediately surrounded by a more level country. Southeast, twelve miles, is a little level region where Oaksdale, of about fifteen hundred inhabitants is situated. Latah, a village, is seven miles west.

The Mission, a Catholic Indian school, East twelve miles.

Looking East, three miles, we see the Coeur d' Alene Reservation, first across the Idaho line, and the mountains, containing the noted miners, beyond.

Flowing through Tekoa we see Hungman Creek, a stream about sixty feet wide. You need not look on your map for Tekoa. It is, I guess, about seven hundred feet above the surrounding hills; and is numbered, like ourselves among the unknown thousands.

When I was coming up the mountain, I heard wolves barking near the top. I stopped, and considered the question of retreating.

"If I go back, and tell the folks that I heard wolves they may say "They were dogs!" and laugh at me. Besides coyotes are cowardly. They will run.

If they should come at me, there will be only one, or two, and these rocks are large enough to crush their skulls. It is only a mile from here to town, and they would not follow far. I will go on and not be laughed at!" I have met wolves, lots of them; some of them were sheep skin. They are usually larger than their clothing. They are more dangerous than those coyotes. It is best not to throw stones at that kind. If you fight that kind use "the sword."

Last night I gave my first discourse, in Tekoa, at the Christian Church. To-day we see, in the Tekoa Times, the following announcement:

"Elder W. L. Skeels, of Portland, is holding a series of meetings in the Congregational Church, under the auspices of the First Day Adventists. It is not known how long the services will continue, but they are very interesting."

This notice is subject to criticism: Portland is not my home. The meetings are not in the Congregational Church. It is not exactly First-day Adventism. They will know whether they are interesting after they hear them.

Monday May 18th.—As the "Christians," in Tekoa, charged a dollar a night for their church, and did not take much interest in our work. We closed our meetings last night, gave five discourses, and are to begin tomorrow night six miles from town, in the locality where the brethren reside. We will continue there until Sunday. We are to go Sunday evening to Oaksdale, to hold protracted meetings, in the Advent Chapel.

I received a letter from Bro. Corbaley. They want me to visit Waterville, Mission, and perhaps other places in the central part of the State. Have word from Bro. Fowler. They are financially unable to help me reach Port Angeles. I am likely to be in Whitman Co., several weeks.

Address me, in care of John Butler, Oaksdale, Wash. Yours Most Affectionately.

Hezekias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 37.

1. And it came to pass that when Ezekias the king had heard it, he rent his outer garments and put on sack cloth, and went up into the house of the Lord;

2 And sent Heliakim the steward and Somnas the scribe and the elders of the priests clad in sack-cloth unto Hesaias the son of Amos the prophet.

3. And they said unto him, Thus saith Ezekias: A day of tribulation and reproach and reproof and wrath is to-day, because the first-pang hath come unto the one who bringeth forth, and she hath not strength to bring forth.

4. May the Lord thy God have hearkened unto the words of Hrapsakias, which the king of Assurioi hath sent with which to reproach a living God, yea words of reproach which the Lord thy God hath heard, and mayest thou have besought thy Lord for those who are left.

5. And the servants (house-servants) of king Ezekias came unto Hesaias;

6. And Hesaias said unto them, In this wise shall ye say unto your lord, Thus saith the Lord: Fear not the words which thou hast heard, the words with which the elders of Assurioi have reproached me.

7. Lo, I am casting spirit into him and he will hear intelligence and will have returned into his own land, and he will fall with the sword in his land.

8. And Hrapsakias returned and overtook the king of the Assurioi besieging Lahna, and heard that he had taken up from Lachis.

9. And Tharaka king of the Aithiopni came out to war with him: and when he heard it, he turned away and sent messengers to Ezekias saying,

10. In this wise shall ye say unto Ezekias king of Joudain. Let not thy God deceive thee, in whom thou art trusting, saying: Hierousaleem shall not be given up into the hand of the king of the Assurioi.

11. Hast thou not heard what kings of Assurioi have done, how they have devastated all the earth, and wilt thou have been saved?

12. Did the gods of the nations deliver those my fathers destroyed, Gouza and Charran and Hrapheth which are in the country of Thoemath?

13. Where are the kings of Emath and where of Arphad? And where of the city of Ephaeounim is Anegongam?

14. And Ezekias took the letter from the messengers and read it, and went up into the house of the Lord and opened it in the presence of the Lord.

15. And Ezekias offered votive-prayer unto the Lord, saying,

16. O Lord of Sabaoth, thou God of Israel, thou who art seated upon the Cherubim, thou alone art the God of all the kingdom of the inhabited, thou didst create the heavens and the earth.

17. Incline thine ear, O Lord, open thine eyes, O Lord; Look, O Lord, and observe the words of Sennacherim, which he hath sent with which to reproach a living God.

18. For of a truth, O Lord, kings of Assurioi have desolated the whole inhabited and their country.

19. And have cast their idols into the fire, for they were not gods but works of men's hands, wood and stone, and they threw them away.

20. And now, O Lord our God, save us from out his hand, that every kingdom of the earth may have comprehended that thou alone art God.

21. And Hesaias son of Amoossem unto Ezekias and said unto him; Thus saith the Lord God of Israel; I have heard the votive-prayer which thou didst offer unto me concerning Sennacherim king of Assurioi.

22. This is the word which God hath spoken concerning him. He hath belittled thee and mocked at thee thou virgin daughter of Sion: he hath wagged his head at thee thou daughter of Hierousaleem

23. Whom hast thou reproached and embittered or against whom hast thou raised thy voice? And hast thou not lifted up thine eyes on high against the saint of Israel?

24. Because through messengers thou hast reproached the Lord. For thou didst say with the multitude of the chariots I have gone up the height of the mountains and into the farthest places of the Libanus and have cut down the height of the cedar thereof and the beauty of the cypress and have entered into the height of the forest's portion.

25. And have placed a data and dried up waters and every assemblage of water.

26. Hast thou not heard long ago of these things which I have done? Since days of old I planned them, and now I have demonstrated how to desolate nations in fortified places and who dwell in fortified cities;

27. I have relaxed their hands and they have withered away and become like dried grass upon house-roofs and like a newly mown field. (Then comes what God says).

28. And now thy rest and thy outgoing and thy incoming I know well;

29. And thine anger with which thou hast become enraged: and thy bitterness hath come up unto me; and I am going to put a muzzle on thy nose and a bit in thy lips and I am going to turn thee away by the way which thou hast come.

30. And this for thee (Ezekias) is the sign: Eat this year that which thou hast sown, and the second year the residue, and the third year sow and gather a harvest and plant vineyards and eat the fruit thereof.

31. And there will be those left in Joudain who will grow a root downward and produce seed upward.

32. Because from out Hierousaleem will there be some left and some who are being saved from out Mount Sions. The zealot the Lord of Sabaoth will do these things.

33. Therefore thus saith the Lord unto a king of Assurioi. He shall not have entered into this city, nor shall he throw a weapon against her;

34. But by the way he came will he return, and into this city he shall not have entered. Thus saith the Lord.

35. I am holding a shield over this city to save it for my own sake and for the sake of David my servant.

36. And an angel (same word as above for "messenger") of the Lord went out, and destroyed of the camp of the Assurioi one hundred and eighty-five thousand; and they arose in the morning and found all the dead bodies.

37. And Sennacherim king of Assurioi turned away and went unto Nineueh.

38. And while he was worshiping in the house of Nisarach his tutelary god, Adramelech and Sarasar his sons smote him with swords, and they saved themselves in Armenia; and Asordan his son became king in his stead.

Chapter 38.

1. And it came to pass in this period that Ezekias fell sick with general debility unto death: And Hesaias son of Amoos the prophet came unto him and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, arrange thy affairs concerning thy household: For thou art going to die and may not live.

2. And Ezekias turned his face unto the wall and offered votive-prayer unto the Lord;

3. Saying, Remember, O Lord, how I have gone my way in thy sight with truth in a true heart, and have done the things pleasing in thy sight: and Ezekias lamented with a great lamentation.

4. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Hesaias saying,

5. Go thy way and say unto Ezekias, Thus said the Lord God of David thy father; I have heard thy votive-prayer and seen thy tears: Lo, I am adding unto thy time fifteen years;

6. And I am going to deliver thee and this city out of the hand of a king of Assurioi, and I am going to hold a shield over this city.

7. And this for thee is the sign from the Lord, that God will do this oracular-word:

8. Lo, I will turn back the shadow of the steps, the ten steps of the house of thy father which the sun hath gone down; I will make the sun turn back the ten steps. And the sun did go up the ten steps which the shadow had gone down.

9. The votive-prayer of Ezekias the king of Joudain when he fell sick and arose from his sickness.

10. I said in the uplifting of my days, in the gates of Hades, I am going to leave the rest of the years behind:

11. I said I evermore shall I see the instrumental-salvation of God in the land of the living: never again on earth shall I see Israel's instrumental-salvation; nevermore shall I see a man.

12. I have left off from my kindred, I have left behind the residue of my life; It hath gone out and departed from me even as one taketh down a tent that he hath pitched. Like a tent-pole for a servant who is drawing nigh to cut it off hath my spirit become in my estimation.

13. In that day I was given up until morning as it were to a lion, even so had he broken all my bones. For from day-break till night was I given up.

14. Like a swallow even so will I meditate: For mine eyes had left off looking toward the height of the heavens unto the Lord who delivered me and took away the woe of my soul:

16. It was told thee, O Lord, concerning it though, and thou didst stir up my breath and I was helped and lived.

17. For thou didst deliver my soul so that it should not be lost, and thou didst cast behind me all my sins.

18. For those in Hades will not praise thee, nor will those who have died commend thee: nor will those in Hades hope in thy mercy.

19. The living will commend thee in the way I also do: For from to-day will I produce servants who will declare thy righteousness.

20. O God of my salvation in the presence of the house of God.

21. And Hesaias said unto Ezekias, Take a cake of figs and break it up fine and apply it as a poultice, and thou wilt be well.

22 And Ezekias said this is a sign for Ezekias that I shall go up into the house of God.

Comment.

In the 2nd verse of this 37th chapter we have "Hesaias the prophet the son of Amoos" identified for us again as the same "Isaiah" we started out with, and we have found so far at least no possible evidence of "two Isaiahs" have we! This "two Isaiah" business is off the same piece of cloth as, "Who was Jobab called Job?" When the Scriptures tell us in so many words that "he was a son of the sons of Esau and fifth from Abraham" in this line, besides giving us his genealogy in Genesis and 1st Chronicles and telling us specifically that he was a nephew of Moses by marriage and went with him as a guide in the wilderness up to the giving of the law on Sinai, when he went back to [illegible] Balek who had died and been succeeded second king of Edom, a living evidence for all time of God having performed his promise "to bless Hagar and Abraham's seed" in this line as well as in the line of Isaak.

This chapter gives us a wonderful lesson of God's providence as a covenant keeping God and a redeemer of his ability beginning to assert itself where all humanability apparently has failed. It is as it were a glimpse behind the heavenly scenes in the great drama of human life that is being enacted here on this earth as a stage. How easy it was for God to deliver Hierousaleem as he had promised when he got ready! Where was God's blasphemer when his mercy no longer waited for repentance?

Observe the name "Armenia" is as old as this Scripture of Isaiah" although it does not appear in the C. V. or R. V. What a history this country Armenia has had! With all God's light on it how it has clung to idolatry and reaped the fruits of it!

The 38th chapter gives us a wonderful account of God's personal dealing with Ezekias the king in a sickness which seems to have occurred just prior to the deliverance of Hierousaleem recited in the previous chapter, as brought out in the 6th verse as follows; "I am going to deliver thee and this city, etc." Where the translators of the C. V. and R. V. got "the dial of Ahaz" from instead of "the ten steps of the house of thy father" (David meant and the house of the Lord meant) is probably where they got "the two Isaiahs." Observe the differences in the 9th verse also as they are very important. It is stated here that what immediately follows this verse is the prayer, the votive-prayer that Ezekias offered when he fell sick and which was so wonderfully answered. The opening thought and the figure used in the 10th verse are entirely different from that given in the R. V. and the whole prayer is so different as a whole that the reader will do well to make a critical comparison of this translation with both the C. V. and the R. V. The prayer properly ends with the 12th verse. From here on to the 21st verse is the instructive comment of Ezekias on God's mercy and glorious majesty as seen in this his own deliverance and the deliverance of his kingdom together with a new vow of allegiance and service for testimony. I do not find any account of the sickness of Ezekias being attributable to a "boil." The word does not occur in the text either here in the 21st verse or elsewhere. The word in the first verse of the 38th chapter defines it as general debility.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Signs of the Times.

The Financial Editor of one of the great New York dailies began his article on finance, which was published June first, as follows—

"The past week has been one of declining markets. Provisions, nuts and corn have fallen almost to the price of production. Wheat, which has resisted, to a certain extent, the downward tendency of all prices, has succumbed and joined the procession to lower values.

The political uncertainties at home and abroad have been wrapped in a more impenetrable mist than ever. The clouds were beginning to clear away somewhat abroad, when news of riot in Crete aroused once more the fear of warlike complications throughout all Europe."

How sensitive public sentiment must be when a street riot in a small town effect the prices of securities, not only in Wall Street, but in London as well. What is the matter with the business men of this country and Europe? These men are not fools, on the contrary they are wise and sagacious.

Then why do they permit so insignificant a matter as a street riot in a small town effect the prices of hundreds of millions of property. In December last, President Cleveland sent a message to Congress defining the position of this country with reference to the Venezuelan question and the Monroe Doctrine. It was a very innocent document with not a note of war in it, but what was the effect upon business. In two days time there was money enough lost, by the shrinkage of values of American securities, in this country and Europe, to have bought the little island with all the products there is on it, moved the people off and sunk the whole business in the bottom of the sea. There is no sentiment in business transactions. They are cold-blooded affairs. Again I ask you, could this town riot or President Cleveland's message affect business? [illegible] there is but one answer. The [illegible] unrest and insecurity is [illegible] the world. Not only the [illegible] prophecy but every intelligent [illegible]son knows that the signs of the times are ominous. They do not know what the outcome is to be, but they are expecting something unusual and terrible to take place in the near future. Our Savior foresaw the year 1896 when he looked down the ages and saw the time when men's hearts would fail them "for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Truly "God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform" but he works and is working to-day. His works are manifest and are felt throughout the world.

If we would know where we are in the world's history, we only have to examine the chart which our Heavenly Father has given us. It is all plainly marked out, and much of it is as it were underscored to call our attention to it. It is true that the blind can't see, but why should any Gentile be blind? The Bible is on our bookshelves. If we will heed its precepts we shall be able to steer safely into the haven of eternal rest. We are almost there. Jesus is ready, the Angels are waiting and our Heavenly Father will soon speak the word. Glorious prospect, happy consummation.

Errata.

In the second paragraph of "The Story of Israel," instead of reading this was "the first appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord," read this, was "the appearance," etc.

In close of next to last paragraph put a period after the word diadem, and then read in the words, "We are not his children when we have not obeyed the Lord in baptism."

THE SABBATH AT SINAI.

Is this going to be a dull lesson do you think?

Not if you are wide awake and want to know all about the things of God. It used to seem tedious to me, when I was a child, and was reading over the description of the vessels, and measures and boards and curtains of the tabernacle. But that was, because I knew nothing of what was meant by it all, only, that it had something to do with the worship of God. It was to me, like the architects' plan of a house. I could make no building out of those hairy hangings of goat skin, and embroidered curtains of fine twined linen. I doubt if you can, and yet I hope to make the lesson an interesting one. Even though we may not be able to put everything into its place. You must read it all over. Begin with the 25th of Exodus, and go to the 32nd chapter. It will be a long lesson.

Those chapters contain what we call "the tabernacle revelation." It was given to Moses, while he was up in the Mount, waiting for the tables of stone, and for the law and for the commandments that angel hands were writing. Ex. xxiv. 12. I wonder if it too was written upon stone? The Bible does not tell us. Ex. xxxiv. 28 says "the words of the covenant, the ten commandments, were written upon the tables."

Do you know what the word "revelation" means? It is telling us something that we have not known about before. Your little friends make revelations to you, when they tell you their secrets, but these are not divine revelations. We call the revelations that come from heaven, divine.

The giving of the Law, and the giving of the directions for the making of the Tabernacle, are two distinct revelations. We distinguished them by calling the first—"The Sinai Revelation," and the latter—"The Tabernacle Revelation."

The first taught the Israelites "how far off God is in his holiness." The people could not get to him. They had no way. There was no door open. Only Moses, the Mediator, could come before the Angel of his Presence.

It was death for any other person to touch the Mount, until he had come to the altar with the sacrifices that God had bidden him to offer, had heard the book read, had promised to obey it, and had been sprinkled with the blood, in token of forgiveness.

How then can the sinner come to the holy Mount in the everlasting kingdom, when he has never offered himself, a living sacrifice to God; has never read the Bible, obeyed it, nor been touched by the blood of Jesus? He never can.

The gates of the New Jerusalem will never be opened to admit an unpardoned man, woman or child. Nothing that defileth can enter there.

You see, dear little ones, that all things are pictures of what is to be in the future. We cannot come near to God, nor find a home in his holy place, until our sins have been taken away through the shed blood of one who has never sinned.

But "if the first revelation shows how far off God is in his holiness, the latter teaches how very near he is ready to come in his love." It gives to the Israelites a mercy-seat, and the privilege of preparing a place wherein God may dwell.

"Let them," he says, "Make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them." The word "Sanctuary" means a holy place.

Here the law is to be enshrined. The keeping of it out of love to God, and the looking forward to Jesus, through the blood of the slain lambs is the means whereby the Israelites are to be counted holy in the eyes of the great Creator.

The pattern of everything that is to be used in the Tabernacle Service is given to Moses while he is up in the Mount. God shows him through his angels, how everything must be done. We have paper-patterns, whereby to fashion our garments; and plans drawn on parchment, to follow in the erection of our buildings; and models for the construction of the engines and looms of the inventor; and it was in some such way that Moses was shown the shape and size of the vessels, furniture, prives, and garnishing of the sanctuary.

The people are to be called upon to make of their own free-will, an offering to the Lord, that this great church, in the wilderness may be set up.

Gold and silver and brass, and blue, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats hair, colored skins, and wood, and oil and precious spices, and sparkling gems, must be brought.—for "the tent of meeting" between God and man must be very beautiful and all its belongings of the finest kind.

AUNTIE WISE.

To Bro. Kinsey.

As you have told us who the man-child of Rev. xii. is, will you now please tell us who the Dragon is, and when and why he was so bent on killing this manchild (the Pope). Also what is lacking on the part of the church to make herself ready for her long absent Lord, and oblige many.

T. E. ADAMS.

Dr. A. T. Pierson states that in 1835, when he was first in Europe, he could not carry a copy of the Scriptures inside the walls of Rome. Last year there were twenty-nine Protestant chapels in the city of Rome, and preaching openly carried on in them with impunity, the pope and cardinals finding it impossible to interfere.

Some interesting evidences of the power of Christianity over all hearts come from time to time from heathen countries. Recently a chief man in one of the villages of Bengal, after being converted, gave up a lucrative business and instead began to cultivate the soil, because his former trade had necessitated lying to his customers. "He never lies now," is the comment of the neighbors around his village home.

We shall never become angels. Yet we may, so great is God's goodness to men, attain a higher honor and glory than they possess. Though now we are a "little lower" than they, yet hereafter those of us who, by being made members of Christ, the second Adam, have become children of God and heirs of the incorruptible inheritance shall be in him raised to the high position of judges of those other creatures of his hand. "The Saints" shall judge not only the world, but also angels.

Our plea is for more Biblical preaching, and by that we mean the enforcement of the ruling ideas of the Scriptures which run beneath all texts as the granite ledges run beneath the New Hampshire hills. Without making a ranting accusation, we have a strong impression that too much of the present preaching in the United States—to a far greater extent than in England—does not enforce, with the majestic authority of the Scriptures, the great ideas which are distinctive of them.—The Watchman.

Testimonies of Heathen Adversaries to the Character of the Early Christians.

Tacitus, who was contemporary with the Apostles, says, concerning the persecution of Christians, by emperor Nero, "But neither human assistance, nor the largesses of the emperor, nor all the atonements offered to the gods, availed; the infamy of that horrible transaction still adhered to him. To suppress, if possible, this common rumor, Nero procured others to be accused, and punished with exquisite tortures a race of men detested for their evil practices, who were commonly known by the name of Christians. The author of that sect was Christ, who in the reign of Tiberius was put to death, as a malefactor, by the procurator Pontius Pilate. But this pestilent superstition, though checked for awhile, broke out afresh, not only in Judea, where the evil first originated, but even in the city of Rome, the common sink into which everything filthy and abominable flows from all quarters of the world. At first those only were apprehended who confessed themselves of that sect; afterwards a vast multitude was discovered by them, all of whom were condemned, not so much for the crime of burning the city, as for enmity to mankind. Some were torn to pieces by dogs, some were crucified, some burned to death. The younger Pliny in his epistle to Trajan, A. D. 107, says, "Others were named by an informer, who first confessed themselves Christians, but afterwards denied it; the rest said they had been Christians, but had left them—some three years ago, some longer, and one or many above twenty years. They all worshiped your image and the statues of the god; these also recited Christ. They affirmed that the whole of their fault or error, with Christians, lay in this, that they were wont to meet together on a stated day, before it was light, and sing among themselves alternately a hymn, and bind themselves by an oath, not to the commission of any wickedness, but not to be guilty of theft, or robbery, or adultery, never to falsify their word, nor to deny a pledge committed to them when called upon to return it. It was then their custom to separate, and come together again to a meal, which they ate in common without any disorder."

Self-denial.

The lesson of self-denial is of the last importance, and one which we find it most difficult to attain. It is made the condition of discipleship by Jesus Christ: so that, except in some degree we practice it, our claim to the character and privileges of Christians is invalid. But what is its nature? Surely it does not consist in monkish austerity, or needle vigor. It is neither a long pilgrimage, with its hardships; a useless seclusion, with its deceptions; a sour look, with its disgusts; or a bare head and empty stomach, with their inconveniences. These are not the self-denial required by the Gospel, sanctioned by Christ, and practiced by saints. What is it then? It is a holy, persevering, prayerful opposition to the desires, appetites, wishes, and tempers of corrupt nature. It is submission to Providence. It is resignation to affliction. It is preference of others. It is the abdication of a pertinacious adherence to our own right for the sake of peace. But why should we thus deny ourselves? Is it reasonable? Is it manly? Is it necessary? It is all three. It is highly reasonable to deny and oppose what is corrupt in its origin, baneful in its growth, and destructive in its end. And such are nature and sin. It is manly, for then we prove that the mind, the soul, the reason, holds the sceptre and the sceptre of direction and government, while all the inferior passions obey. It is necessary for the discovery of our grace, for the good of society, and for our own peace and salvation: and it will not require much, either of the art of logic, or the power of eloquence, to transform all these reasons into motives to induce the adoption and practice of self-denial.

If we would manifest our "love of life, and desire to see good days," we must learn this important lesson: for it is an aphorism worthy of a deep and permanent impression on the tablet of our mind, that self-denial is the source of self-gratification.—Common Place Book.

Don't Use Tobacco.

AN OPEN LETTER TO A PASTOR WHO ADVOCATES THE USE OF TOBACCO.

Dear Sir:—You made a public and voluntary statement sometime ago, that "When Paul said, 'Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit,' he did not mean tobacco." And then you proceeded to pronounce an eulogy on its use, or on those who use it, and argue their purity and piety. Now since there was nothing that led to the statement, you must have had a motive in so doing. To my mind the most probable one was, as a sop for those who would be most likely to wan it, namely: those who are addicted to its use. Or, perhaps, you said it because you knew it would be offensive to me, and so would please the unfortunates who are enslaved to its use. If I am wrong, I wish to be set right, and so I ask, "What did the apostle mean?" If you cannot tell what he meant, how can you be so positive that he did not mean to interdict the use of tobacco, the filthiest of all the filthy habits that human beings ever indulged. Other filth adheres to the surface only, and can be washed off, but this is so exceedingly filthy that it saturates its victims through and through, so that his person, his breath and his garments are a constant stench, incomfortable to many ladies, and repulsive to every refined taste, and incompatible, it seems to me, with Christian refinement or good manners. Should you say its use is not condemned, because not named, I say it is, for all filth is condemned. But on the same plea, the use of whiskey is not condemned, nor rum, brandy, gin or beer. Nor yet is gambling, or lotteries named. And according to the same sophistry it is not wrong to get drunk on whiskey, as we are only told "be not drunken on wine." If the use of tobacco makes one better, a better Christian, or citizen, more agreeable in society, healthier, wiser, or richer, the plea would seem to have some basis.

But it is said, "It is his individual right." Correct, if thereby he does not injure or annoy others. No one has a better right to foul the air I breathe, than he has to defile the water I drink, or poison the food I eat, and when I ask of you where the self-denial comes in, you said, "Then he must preach against eating pork, hot biscuit, drinking tea and coffee, and whatever that could give one dyspepsia, and there would not be enough left to pay the preacher." Is it possible, are your own words indicate, that the pay is the highest motive you have in preaching? And for fear of endangering this you will advocate personal and social vice that may produce disease and death. The Catholics in the 16th century granted indulgences to sin for a money consideration. So do you.

Yours for a clean gospel.—Moses Meetham.

Bibles.

To is age, though wise and better than any age of the past, golden or otherwise, yet seems to excel in the production of fools. The name of their foolies is legion. They run rampant in every direction. There is nothing they will not venture. The most sacred things do not escape their desecration. It would seem as though enough oddities in Scriptural translations had been afflicted on the world. But this generation has seen two more monstrosities introduced. One is the so-called "Woman's Bible." The other is an "Electic" Bible. The former is not worthy of serious consideration. The latter rises above the ridiculous, and needs to be watched as dangerous. The name has been applied to a collection of Scripture passages prepared for reading in the public schools in Chicago. By expurgation and elimination a volume was compiled which "meets the approval of Christian, Jew, Mohammedan, Buddist and Agnostic." What liberties must have been taken with the Biblical text! to be able to produce such a combination. It must take a higher critic turn green with envy, or ashamed of himself. They might just as well have co-joined select excerpts from heathen writers, barbaric sacred books, the vaporings of spiritualism and what-not and call it a Bible. What good can come from the reading of such a book in the public schools? It is better to have no Bible in the schools than to have such an emasculated edition of it that must, in the nature of the case, cause them to look with doubt upon the original edition that had to be expurgated before it was safe for them to read. What good does such a book? Teaches morality is the most that can be claimed for it. But nearly all the other text books do that; for tom or huck-ture is moral, and teaches it more successfully than can be done by such a conglomeration. What harm does it? It teaches them to question the only edition of the Bible that contains the plan of salvation. The Bible is a Bible just as long as it remains intact—as it has been miraculously preserved for us through the ages; but as soon as you choose out of it only that which will meet the approval of every one and bind it in a volume, it is folly to call it a Bible.—The Chatter.

Notice.

Brother Underwood:

I am still in the vineyard working for the Master. I now have a call from California and contemplate going over to help them. I need help to pay the expenses of the trip which will fall heavily on one or two of the brethren, and it is the church that is the pillar and ground of the truth. Yes, the church must sound out the Word of life, it is not one man's work nor two, but the work of the whole body. Let us be faithful stewards and do our duty. Brethren in California take notice that I contemplate visiting your state sometime in July or August. I would to hear from every brother and sister in the state and would love to visit you all. Brethren the time is short, the Master is coming. Are you ready? If you are in earnest in what you believe, wake up and let the gospel of the kingdom be preached in the state of gold and fruit. Send in to aid in carrying the message to California. Pray for me that utterance may be given me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mysteries of the gospel to a hungry and starving people.

Theology has nothing new except that which is false. The preaching of Paul must be the preaching of the minister of today. There is no advancement here. We may advance in knowledge of Gods revealed truth; but it stands the same, for this grand reason that it is perfect, and perfection cannot be any better.

Pleasure-plenic Excursion to Chautauqua Lake.

On account of the Annual Convention of the Photographers' Association of America, to be held at Celoron, N. Y., on Chautauqua Lake, June 29th to 30th, the Nickel Plate Road will sell excursion tickets at one fare for the round trip, June 29.

O, that every professed follower of the Savior could say, "For me to live is Christ!" Filled with the Spirit, we should be as Christ in all things. Christ should be reproduced in us; Christ should be reflected through us.

Excursions to Warsaw via Pennsylvania Lines.

June 10th, and 11th, for meeting of Knights of Maccabees of Indiana, low rate excursion tickets will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines; valid returning June 12, inclusive.—1.

And sure I am it is better to be sick, providing Christ comes to the bedside and draws by the curtains and says, "Courage! I am thy salvation," than to be lusty and strong, and never be visited by Christ.—Rutherford.

Excursion tickets to Denver, Colo., are on sale June 12th and 13th via the Nickel Plate Road, account J. O. U. A. M. National Council, June 18th to 20th.—1.

Fidelity in trifles and an earnest seeking to please God in little matters is a test of zeal, devotion, and love. Let our aim be to please our dear Lord perfectly in little things.

Homeseekers Excursions to the West on June 9th and 23rd via the Nickel Plate Road. Ask Agents.—June 22.

Eight times the Bible speaks of the song of the redeemed. It appears that God's saved ones will be singing people. Yes, we are to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

Announcement.

The Annual Meeting of the Church of God in Christ Jesus, worshiping at Scholls, Ore., will be held on the 19th, 20th and 21st of June, 1896. The brethren extend a cordial invitation to others of like precious faith to meet with us at that time, to the end that we may all be edified.

W. W. JAQUITH, Church Sec.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in Indiana, will be held at the Antioch Meeting-house, five miles South of Plymouth, commencing on Friday June 12, 1896, at 2.30 p. m. and continuing over the following Sunday. Believing as we do that the gospel dispensation is very near to its close, and the day is far spent, let us be up and doing lest the night cometh when no man can work and we be overtaken as a thief in the night.

To all of like precious faith, we say come. Come and enjoy another good meeting, renew your strength and energy in the cause and encourage others.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who hunts much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to or order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts, put the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in it.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Tracts.

We have printed the letter to Dr. Talmage and J. A. Comont written by Bro. and Sister Howard and printed in issue of April 22, in tract form, and can supply them at two cents each, or 15 cents a dozen.—Address THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Daily Only.

"Charge not thy self with the weight of a year,
Child of the Master, faithful and dear:
Choose not the cross for the coming week;
For that is more than he bids thee seek.
Bend not thine arms to measure a load—
Thou may'st leave that to thy gracious God.
Daily only he saith to thee,
Take up the cross and follow me."

Communicated.

Hezekias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 39.

1. In this period Merodach Baladan the son of Baladan the king of Babylonia sent letters and elders and votive-gifts to Ezekias: For he had heard that he was sick unto death, and Ezekias arose.

2. And rejoiced over them and showed them the house of the offerings of the dead and the silver and the gold and the stacte and the incense-materials and the myrrh and all the houses for the utensils of the treasury and all the things whatsoever that were in his treasures: and there was nothing that Ezekias did not show in his house and in all his official-power.

3. And Hesaias the prophet came unto king Ezekias and said unto him. What do these men say and whence have they come unto thee? And Ezekias said, From out a land afar off have they come unto me, from Babylon.

4. And Hesaias said, What did they see in thy house? And Ezekias said, All that there is in my house they saw, and there is nothing in my house they did not see; moreover also the things in my treasures.

5. Hesaias said unto him: Hear the Word of the Lord of Sabaoth.

6. Lo, days are coming and they will take all the things in thy house, and all the things that thy fathers have gathered together unto this day; into Babylon will they go, and they shall leave nothing behind: And God hath said that even from thy offspring that thou wilt beget will they take and make them eunuchs in the house of the king of the Babylonians.

8. And Ezekias said unto Hesaias, The Word of the Lord is good which he hath spoken: Let peace and righteousness though occur in my days.

CHAPTER 40.

1. Comfort ye, Comfort ye my laity, saith God: May ye priests have talked comfort to the heart of Hierousalem: May ye have comforted her, because her humiliation hath been made full. Her sin hath been loosed, because she hath received from the hand of the Lord double for her sins.

3. A voice of one calling for help in the wilderness: Make ready the way of the Lord; make straight the paths of our God.

4. Every ravine will have been filled and every mountain and hill will have been laid low; and all the crooked places will be made straight and the rough places plains;

5. And the glory of the Lord will have appeared, and all flesh will see the instrumental-salvation of God, because the Lord hath said it.

6. A voice of one saying, Cry for help. And I said, Why shall I cry for help? All flesh is grass and all man's glory is as it were a flower of grass:

7. The grass hath withered and the flower hath fallen off.

8. But the oracular-word of our God abideth forever.

9. Go up upon a high mountain thou who art announcing the good tidings of Sion; Lift up thy voice with strength, thou who art announcing the glad tidings of Hierousalem; Lift ye up, fear not: Say unto the cities of Judaia, Lo your God:

10. Lo the Lord, the Lord is coming with strength, and the arm is with lordship; Lo his wages are with him, and his work before him;

11. Like a shepherd will he shepherd his flock and with his arm will he gather together the lambs, and those who have in womb will he comfort.

12. Who hath measured the water in his hand and the heavens with a span and all the earth for a handful? Who hath stood the mountains by weight and the valleys in a balance?

13. Who hath known the Lord's mind and who hath become his fellow-counsellor, and instructed him?

14. Or with whom hath he taken counsel and who hath instructed him? Or who hath shown him in a judicial-way? Or who hath shown him a way of understanding?

15. Have not all the nations been accounted as it were a drop from a bucket and an inclination of the beam of a balance as it were? Will they not have been accounted spittlens it were?

16. And the Libanesis not sufficient for a fire and all the four-footed are not sufficient for a whole-burnt-offering service;

17. And all the nations are as nothing and have been accounted nothing.

18. To whom have ye likened the Lord, and unto what likeness have ye likened him?

19. Hath not a carpenter made an image, or a goldsmith molded gold and gilded it? Fitted it up as a likeness?

20. Yea a carpenter hath selected wood that will not rot, and he will wisely seek how he may stand an image therefrom and it may not be moved.

21. Will ye not comprehend? Will ye not hearken? Hath it not been told you from the beginning? Have ye not comprehended the foundations of the earth?

22. He it is who holdeth with control the circle of the earth, and the dwellers thereon are locusts as it were; He it is who hath stood the heavens like a camera and spread them like a tent as it were to dwell in:

23. He it is who giveth rulers to rule as though nothing, and who created an earth as though naught.

24. For they shall not plant nor shall they sow, nor shall their root have been rooted in the earth: He hath breathed upon them and they have withered, and a cyclone will take them away like kindling.

25. Now then to whom have ye likened me and thereby I shall have been exalted? The Sacred One hath said.

26. Lift up on high your eyes and see Who hath disclosed all these things? He who bringeth out his cosmos by number: He will call them all by name by reason of much glory, and in the controling-power of thy might naught hath escaped thee.

27. Mayest thou indeed not have said, O Jakoob, and why O Israel, hast thou said, my way hath been hidden from God, and my God hath taken away my judicial-trial and hath stood away from me?

28. And now hast thou not comprehended? Hast thou not heard? God is eternal, the God who fitted up the ends of the earth: he will not hunger nor grow weary, nor is it possible to search out his thoughtfulness;

29. He who giveth unto the hungry strength and sorrow to those who have no woe.

30. For young men will hunger and youths will grow weary and chosen ones will be without strength.

31. But those who wait for God change strength: they will grow wings like eagles as it were; they will run and not grow weary; they will walk and not hunger.

CHAPTER 41.

1. Renew yourselves toward me ye islands; for the rulers will change strength: May they have drawn nigh and may they have talked together: Then may they have announced in a judicial-way.

2. Who hath awakened righteousness from the east, called it to his feet and it will go its way? He will give in the sight of nations and astound kings; and he will give their swords to the earth and their weapons that have been thrust away like kindling-wood as it were,

3. And the way of his feet will pursue them, will go through them in peace.

4. Who hath energized and caused these things? The One who calleth it from a beginning of generations hath called it: (righteousness) I God am first and unto the things that are coming am I.

5. May nations have perceived and feared: May the ends of the earth have drawn nigh and come together:

6. Each one judging to succor his neighbor and brother.

7. And one will say: a man of influence and an artisan hath become strong and a worker in copper who smiteth with a hammer moving on together with him will say perchance: It is a beautiful symbol: Let them make the things strong with nails; They will place them and they will not have been moved.

8. But thou O Israel, Jakoob my servant and them whom I have chosen, Bahraam's seed whom I have loved:

9. For whom I have intervened from the ends of the earth, and them whom I have called from the spying-places thereof, and unto whom I have said thou art my house-servant; thee have I chosen, and thee have I not forsaken:

10. Fear not; For I am with thee: Err not: For I am thy God who hath strengthened thee and I have succored thee and made thee secure with my right hand.

11. Lo, all those who oppose thee will have been put to shame and confounded; For they will be as though they were not: and all thy adversaries will perish.

12. Thou wilt seek and shalt not find the men who shall ill-treat thee: For they will be as though they were not, and there will be none who war against thee.

13. Because I thy God am the one who holdeth thy right hand, who saith unto thee; Fear not, O Jakoob, thou fewest, Israel; I have become thy responsive-helper, saith thy God, he who is redeeming thee, O Israel.

15. Lo, I have made thee new saw-like, threshing wheels of a threshing-wagon as it were and thou wilt thresh mountains and pulverize hills and make them like fine dust,

16. And thou wilt winnow them; And a wind will take them and a cyclone scatter them: But thou will have rejoiced in the sacred places of Israel.

17. And the beggars and the needy will be glad: For they will seek water and there will be none; their tongue will have become dried up with their thirst; I the Lord God, I the God of Israel will hearken, and will not forsake them;

18. But I will open rivers upon the mountains and fountains in the midst of plains; I will make the desert pools of water, and the thirsty land with conduits of water:

19. I will put into the land without water cedar and box-wood myrtle and cypress and white poplar:

20. That they may see and know and reflect and at the same time fully know that the Lord's hand hath done these things, and the Sacred One of Israel hath showed it.

21. Your crisis is drawing nigh saith the Lord God. Your counsels have drawn nigh, saith the king of Jakoob.

22. May they have drawn nigh, and told you the things that are going to come to pass or the former things what they were, may ye have said: and we shall fully know your mind, and comprehend what the last things are and the things to come; May ye have said

23. May ye have told us the things that are coming in a last period, and we shall know that ye are gods; Do good and bad and we shall wonder and at the same time see.

24. Whence ye are and whence your employment; From out the earth an abomination have they chosen you.

25. But I have awakened the one from the North and the one from the rising of the sun; They will have been called by name; May rulers have come, and like potter's clay and as a potter treadeth the clay, even so will ye have been trodden down.

26. For who will declare the things from a beginning that we may know and the former things, and we shall say they are true? There is no one who foretelleth nor who heareth your words.

27. I shall give authority to Sion, and Hierousalem I shall comfort in a way.

28. For from the nations, lo there was no one, and from their idols there was no to declare; And if I shall ask them; Whence are ye, they may not answer me.

29. For they are they who make you go and who are leading you astray in vain.

COMMENT.

The 39th chapter opens with a historical account of the first diplomatic relations established between the kingdom of Joudah and the kingdom of Babylon, these relations growing out of the incident of the sickness of Ezekias recounted in the preceding chapters.

The indiscretion, credulity and vanity of Ezekias shown in his confidential treatment of these men who were entire strangers to him, are fitly reflected in "the Word of the Lord" that comes to him through the prophet Hesaias, and well illustrates the general truth that God holds us responsible for the use of the common sense with which he has endowed us. We get a glimpse of God's providence and far-reaching purpose and we also see how great a conflagration a little spark of indiscretion in mundane matters may kindle. The closing remark of Ezekias in the 8th verse shows us on how low a plane of goodness and nobility his character rested.

"Let peace and righteousness though occur in my days." Where is the potent purpose and ardent aspiration for the coming generations?

In the 40th chapter the gospel rings out again full and clear with its trumpet-tone of hope, and in such a striking contrast to the predicted calamities of the preceding chapter that it is difficult to believe that "the voice" is the same voice of God. But the inter gospel has quoted the substance of it and interpreted it for us. John when interrogated as to who he was, says I am only "a voice" that "voice" heard so long ago, but now heard again as predicted then, confirming the truth of the 8th verse. "But the oracular Word of our God abideth forever." Notice "wages" not "reward" in the tenth verse. God nowhere in the Scriptures promises "reward" for work. He presents himself always as "wages-payer." To serve him is an honor it is true; but he wisely makes us earn our wages. Eternal life is the gracious offer of God; but wages and rations are meant if we enlist in the divine warfare, and "the denarius a day" if we hear his call and work in his vineyard. None of God's gracious gifts are rewards of merit. He promotes his "bond-servants" who stand trial and show themselves trustworthy. Man's accounting for merit in the sight of God is very fully given here in the 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th verses and it figures zero doesn't it? In what follows of this chapter we are given to understand that there may be an excuse for the idolatry of "the nations" but not for Jakoob and and much less for Israel, enlightened and redeemed Jakoob.

Observe in the 31st verse, "those who wait for God change strength." This is the key-word to interpret the next chapter. See how the first verse of the 41st chapter reads and note the importance of this word properly rendered, as it is rendered "renew" in the C. V. and R. V.

"Renew yourselves toward me, ye islands; for the rulers will change strength."

Who is the "who" of the second verse of this 41st chapter? Can we of this day have any doubt? This day of proposed and coming international arbitration and judicial procedure emanating from Christian people and Christian effort?

The "who hath energized and caused these things" of the 4th verse is a wonderfully suggestive query. There is a polar difference between a casual energy and any instrumentality moved by it. Theologians seem to have forgotten this in their philosophical formulations. This is one of the senses which God is first and last as here asserted in the last clause of the 4th verse and God be praised "The ends of the earth" are coming together now "each one judging to succor his neighbor and brother"—not in the idolatrous way either as depicted in the 7th verse but "as Bahraam's seed" (see 8th verse) "called from the spying-places of the earth" (see 9th verse) "I have succored thee and made thee secure with my right hand" (see 10th verse). Do ye likewise succor, and impart this strength and security to your neighbor. This is the exhortation of the gospel.

Is what follows from the 9th verse to the 21st to be interpreted as applicable to the Christian Church as a redemptive and judicial agency, irrespective of any reference to Jakoob as a nationality and Israel as a redeemed nationality? Is all this talk hereabout rivers of water and the revivifying of barren land and replanting it with forests and fertility as well as gathering together here a people scattered over the face of the earth to be interpreted figuratively? Is there to be no literal restoration of the land of Palestine and its people? Is the Christianity of this nineteenth century the real fulfillment of this and many more similar prophecies in this book? I trow not. How many Israelites have been converted to Christianity?

Is this what Paul means when he says "And so all Israel will have been saved? And is the Mohammedan possession and domination of the "Holy Land and City" a realization of all these divine promises to Jakoob? Or is redemption so far in this year 1896 but the few large drops that precede the shower of God's grace yet to come? Is the gospel thus far but an eclectic gospel calling out people for his name to be used later as an instrumentality with divine power and endowment to call out nations?

The Spirit.

Editor Restitution:

In RESTITUTION of May 18th, I see a communication from Bro. J. W. Gamble regarding the Spirit, that I wish to notice briefly. In the first place he says, "the brethren claim to have the Spirit of the Lord, the Holy Spirit, or Holy Ghost which are synonomous terms. "I have yet never found the brother who was posted that believed the Holy Ghost to be the proper term to use in any of the Scriptures he cites. I must say I am at a loss to understand the Brother for he starts out to tell us what it is that guides him and cites to. Gen xlviii. 16; Psa. xxxiv. 7: and others to prove angel guidance, and says he could enumerate but thinks this enough to establish the point that, we are not guided by a spirit outside of the Bible. If the angels guide the Brother and encamp about him and protect him, isn't that outside the Bible? I have heard this matter discussed many times and by many different persons but never heard one say that they thought there was any promise of the Spirit outside or separate from the Word. All agree that the Bible is our instructor and unfolds to us the plan of God, and tells us what to do to please him. But how, dear brethren, after we have done all the Word commands us to do and brought to where we can cry "Abba Father," are we to suppose our Father in heaven still stands aloof from us and closes his ears to our cry for help to do his will? Just as well argue to me that the earthly parent after he had laid down certain rules for the government of his child that he would lend it no assistance in its efforts to carry them out if appealed to. Is there any thing abhurent in the thought that God has promised if we obey his commandments, or in other words believe his Word that he will be with us, hear our prayers, give us knowledge if we lack it. To my mind this is one of the most important questions of the day so far as the church is concerned. If God has promised us the Spirit, and we haven't it something is wrong, and if so, wouldn't it be far better and infinitely profitable to try and right that wrong than to say it never belonged to us in order to account for its absence.

The Brother quotes: "If you have not the Spirit of Christ you are none of his." and applies it to disposition. We are told that the "Spirit was poured out upon Christ without measure," was that disposition? And doesn't it imply that upon some others it had or would be poured out with measure.

Yes Brother says, "You say we are all sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise," and gives us then to understand that we cannot receive or expect that Spirit until the resurrection. Let us examine Eph. i. 13 and 14 carefully. Here Paul says, "In whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the Word of truth, the gospel of your salvation in whom also after that ye believed ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory." Now, what do we find in these two texts? 1st, That they trusted in Christ after they heard the Word of truth (not error) which Paul here calls the gospel of our salvation. 2nd, After having heard the gospel and believing it they were sealed with the Holy Spirit. 3rd, We find this Spirit to be 1st Holy, 2nd a promise. Now, the question arises, a promise to who? Read Acts ii. 39, "For the promise is to you and to your children (the Jews) and to all them that are afar off (the Gentiles) even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Now the only difference that ever came up between us as a people in regard to this point was, how many were to receive it. Some say the apostles and a few that they laid hands upon. But, my brethren, you who have abandoned mysticism and loose and deceitful handling of the Word of God, do you want to return to that again? Doesn't it tell us plainly to whom it was promised? It takes no stretch of imagination, nor great learning to understand this plain declaration of our heavenly Father through Peter by the Holy Spirit. Even as many as the Lord our God shall call. Does that mean you, my brother, my sister, have you been called by the gospel? To prove who the afar off ones are read Eph. ii. 11-16. After we become the child of God through the belief of the gospel it makes no difference where we are we can reach the throne of God, through the spirit our prayers and supplications are wafted away to him, the God of mercy, by the silent messenger, and the God we serve, and who never forsakes nor fails to fulfil his promise through the Spirit, removes the barriers, gives unto us wisdom, if not his Word is broken. He has promised, am I to become a doubtful servant, am I to put my trust in princes or the sons of men, or in the living God? We study our Bible. The brethren say we are sufficiently well posted to go to the world and deliver the gospel message. He goes, but he hasn't gone far with that glad message until he begins to find out how weak and giddy the world is, and finds himself at a loss to know what to do with a full knowledge of the gospel. He finds very soon he has exhausted all his own power, got to the end of his resources. Now comes the cry, "Lord, what shall I do, where shall I go, who will hear?" Help me to outride those many obstacles, direct me to that lost son of Adam that is hungering for the Word of life. This comes from the depths of an earnest heart, and the same Spirit that guided of old will to my mind never be withheld. This is far different from trying to get the Holy Ghost at a mourners bench, and by a sinner at that, a person to whom God never promised his Spirit. You hear a brother say, "no use to preach here; no one here." You listen to the many misrepresentations, to the many vain epithets, the doors are locked against you, and if you would stop here and listen to frail man, the good news would cease; but the Spirit of God is working in the heart of some earnest ones and they cry mightily to God. They are heard. The barriers are broken down, the doors are thrown open, the message reaches the heart of some, the Spirit of God has prevailed. Then we give God glory. It is because of our knowledge of the Word that the bars are put up against us. It must be something outside of this to let them down. These are not drawn from the imagination, but are practice and no doubt the experience of every minister of the one faith. We haven't the time nor space to speak of some other points in the article at present but submit the above in love.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all Things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 1, 1896. NUMBER 25.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Kingdom of God.

We copy these beautiful verses from the Glad Tidings for 1884:—

The Kingdom of God, seek it first, ye who love!
For Christ in his glory will shortly appear:
This righteousness practice, this favor obtain.
Then you on this earth with his loved ones shall reign.

The Kingdom of God in its coming will leave
No trace of the darkness which now we perceive:
But will spread in all lands a glorious light.
And soon chase away all the sorrows of night.

The Kingdom of God: 'tis yours, Abraham's seed.
If the Master's commands you constantly heed.
And do his good pleasure in constant delight.
You'll inherit a place in the Kingdom of light.

The Kingdom of God, Oh! What bliss it will bring:
With Jehovah our God, and Christ as our King;
What glory, and honor, with peace and good Will,
And life without end—Come and have it who will?

"WE prove and brighten our own faith in laboring under difficulties and discouragements to develop faith and good conduct in others."

THE account of the destructive work of the earthquake, and tidal wave in Japan furnished to the government of the United States says, that no less 30,000 lives were lost.

IT has been well and truly said that "Metaphysics are capital things for doubtful disputation and admirably adapted to the development of sounding brass and tinkling cymbals."

THE following is an English poem on perseverance in common nature—

"Go on, go on, go on, go on.
Go on, go on, go on.
Go on, go on, go on, go on.
Go on, go on, go on."

WHERE men's acts and words are not central in love, they have not yet known the truth as they ought to know it. They are mere clouds without water, giving promise of rain, but mocking the thirsty ground beneath.

THE Dean of Wells says, "The universality of immersion, in the practice of the early church, supports the English Version,—they went down both into the water. The Eunoch would lay aside his garments, descend chest deep into the water, and be plunged under it in the name of the Lord Jesus."

CHILLINGWORTH said, "I cannot find any rock for the sole of my feet but this rock only. I see plainly and with mine own eyes, that there are popes against popes, councils against councils, some fathers against others—the same fathers against themselves,—a consent of the father of one age against the consent of the father of another age,—the church of one age against the church of another age. In a word, there is no sufficient certainty but of Scripture only."

Christ Our Working Example.

IT is of the first importance to effectual fellowship and effectual service of every kind in the truth, that the mind be occupied and controlled by the right ways of the Lord. What there are have been illustrated to us at every step in the progressive revelation which God has made to us in the Scriptures of his will and purpose. It is in these "right ways" that Christ bade his disciples to occupy themselves till his return. A perfect example of the "right way" is furnished to us in Christ's own case. We have not a monotonous, mechanical Christ,—one going round and round among men like a clerical cipher. There was in him something fresh and vitalizing at every turn. He was not the character pictured to us in the second person of the Orthodox Trinity, nor the mere humanizer of the Unitarian conception. He was, if we thus express ourself, the human counterpart of God himself. He could thunder as well as sunshine. He could wait the breezes of the spirit, or he could blow a gale when circumstances called for it. It is an everlasting instruction to follow him from place to place and not the overmastering surroundings which brought out such different manifestations of speech and bearing. We see him blessing little children, and then reproving great men. At one time men wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth,—at another hypocrites quailed before his cutting rebukes. At one time we hear him saying, come unto me,—at another, depart ye cursed. In one case he supplies the needs of five thousand people; in another he overthrows the tables of the money changers, and whips them out of the temple. In one instance he attended a marriage feast, while in another he forbade a man to go and bury his own father. In one instance he wept over Jerusalem, on another he denounced the leading men of his day as a generation of vipers. On one occasion he filled fisher's nets, another he drowned a herd of swine. From these and many other illustrations of the spirit of Christ it is evident that "the Spirit of Christ" does not consist of sentimental sympathies. Men of "broad views" cannot reconcile all his ways with their notions, but the children of light discern only different aspects of the same spirit in all he did and said, and can justify all his attitudes. And more than this, they remember that he said to his followers, "learn of me."

The Question Drawer.

THE SCAPE GOAT.

Two goats were brought to the High Priest of the Day of At-one-ment. One was a "sin offering," and the other was call d the scape goat or The Escape Goat, because he was driven away and allowed to escape in the wilderness. Take notice that the sin offering was not the scape goat,—and secondly, that the sins of all the children of Israel were confessed over the live goat and having put them upon the head of the goat, he is sent away into the wilderness, bearing all their iniquities into a land not inhabited, and let go. Thirdly, Leviticus xvi. 10 shows that the scape goat is presented alive before the Lord, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape goat into the wilderness. As God had done nothing wrong; as he was essentially holy, just, kind, good, merciful and gracious, he could not be changed for the better. To change him would be for the worst. If he were to be changed we would know nothing of him. It is man that needs changing,—man that is not at one with God. To say that God was at one with man, would imply that man was the superior, and that God had offended him, or at least that by mutual confession the two had come to an understanding. But that condition of things did not exist. God was the lawgiver; man was the offender. If it was God's prerogative to make the law, then, certainly it was the offender who needed to be at-one with God.

The question is, how was this effected by means of the scapegoat? At-one-ment was attained, but how? Let us see. The live scapegoat was brought, and over it was confessed all the sins of the people, and in a symbol they were laid on the head of the animal. Let us imagine ourselves there. There stands the goat before all the people as the very embodimen. of all their sins. Here substitutionists think they have all the advantage. And from a superficial glance it looks that way. We must not be satisfied with a superficial glance. We want to ascertain on what principle at-one-ment was effected.

Did the goat suffer the penalty due their sin? Was he put to death in token of his punishment instead of him? Is he sacrificed as an expiation of sin? No, indeed. Expiation is the Pagan corruption of the meaning of sacrifice. What! offer to God the very embodiment of the nations' sins? If our readers agree with us that this would not be an acceptable offering to God, they will be interested to know what became of the goat and his symbolic burden. The goat is taken into the wilderness nevermore to be seen or known; and having conferred their sins through their High Priest, this transaction says to them by a powerful symbol, that God has put their sins so far away from them, that they should be remembered against them no more.

We see sin confessed,—sin repented of,—sin pardoned,—sin put away so far as the East is from the West, but no satisfaction or expiation for sin. Pardon excludes satisfaction,—satisfaction excludes pardon. There is nothing to pardon, if satisfaction has been made. When it is remembered that the sin offering was first slain, and after that, the sins were symbolically laid upon the goat and the loaded animal not slain but hurried off to an uninhabited land, it is difficult to see anything that favors substitution; but how easy for an adopted child of God to think of the blessed apostolic assurance, that "if we confesses our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Returning to Rom. iii. 25, 26 we call attention again to the fact that Jesus was set forth by God to be a propitiation—not a propitiator. But how? Through substitution? No! But "THROUGH FAITH IN HIS BLOOD." A careful reading of the passage refutes the idea of propitiating God; and explains that we can be at-one with God through faith in his blood. Substitution and satisfaction exclude faith in the blood. We earnestly claim that the doctrine of satisfaction or substitution cannot be harmonized with the principle of justification by faith. He has the object been shed there had been no satisfaction or reconciliation for sin, except through faith in it. As God is [illegible] the means of reconciliation, we [illegible] propitiations already [illegible] needs changing.

We never could understand how Christ's work be at all vicarious if it be not altogether vicarious. If he died instead of the sinner, did he not also render perfect obedience for the sinner? And if another has rendered perfect obedience for the sinner, is not the sinner relieved of his obligation to be obedient? We see no warrant at all for speaking of partial substitution. Surely it is one thing or the other. To substitution—if a substitute for the sinner be found, can he be a substitute without taking the sinner's place and suffering the sinner's doom? [illegible] instead, or in place of the sinner, ought not the sinner [illegible] does not go free? Are [illegible] been satisfied how [illegible] tested by his substitute? [illegible] sentence upon the sinner does not through a substitute escape death? If not, then for what purpose does he need a substitute?

We quote further from our review of Elder Sewell, as follows:—"You say that Paul entered the kingdom," but as no proof accompanies the assertion I cannot afford to notice it.

"You admit all that is said about the Branch in Jer. xxii. 5, 6. I am glad of this because it says: "Thereby cometh that God will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King and reign and prosper and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." It says, too, "that in his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and that his name shall be called, the Lord our Righteousness." You very kindly admit all this because it says all this. You go further and actually admit that that King is Christ,—that is, that the King revealed to by the prophet is Christ. You are mistaken I think, in saying that the subject changes at verses 5 and 6, for it only adds other particulars, as will presently be seen: "And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and I will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase, and I will set up shepherds over them; and they shall fear no more nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord." You will please notice.

1. This was not the return from Babylon because it is a gathering out of all countries whither "I have driven them," saith the Lord; and he did not drive them into all those countries till about 38 years after Pentecost, by the Romans.

2. Notice that after the gathering referred to they should "fear no more nor be dismayed, neither shock, they be lacking, saith the Lord." They have been dismayed,—have lacked, since the return from Babylon; They are lacking still; and this is positive proof that their gathering is still future. Can we know anything further concerning the delightful period? Why yes; the subject is resumed immediately, as follows: "Behold the days come saith the Lord, that I will raise up unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper; and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely." In verses 3 and 4 it is the remnant of the flock that is to be gathered, (what is left of it) and dismayed no more. In v. 6, Judah and Israel are saved and dwell safely. You may deny, if you please that both verses refer to the same gathering of the same people, but verses 7 and 8 will set the it beyond controversy that they are the same. Besides, you have admitted that verses 3 and 4 refer to the literal descendants of Jacob, and so I will prove that verse 6 does also: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, the Lord liveth which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, but the Lord liveth which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them, and they shall dwell in their own land." v. 7. This needs no comment.

Is anything revealed in reference to the means employed to bring about this deliverance, which is to eclipse that from Egypt, or any more facts in regard to that people? Yes; we learn from v. 5 that a Branch is to [illegible] and a King and [illegible] Yet admit [illegible] that he was [illegible] that [illegible] he will [illegible] not dwell safely [illegible]

[illegible] the reign and glorious [illegible] and [illegible] earth, and not in heaven. Each article says he shall be [illegible] "there." The Lord is there" [illegible] and he [illegible] and [illegible] Israel dwell safely." See also [illegible] Jer. xxiii. 6. [illegible] Israel dwell safely [illegible] Jer. xxxiii. 16

Smith and Wilson Discussion. Number 3.

First Proposition:

Resolved: The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

It is refreshing to see the negative reaching after other proof than a few doubtful texts from the Bible. To yield nature, poets, reason, history, science and plainest Scripture to the affirmative is not the best way to elicit truth, if there be any truth in the position held by the negative.

Now that Elder Wilson has invoked commentators and dictionaries, we would be greatly obliged if he would name the English, Greek and Hebrew lexicons, and the commentary on the whole Bible which he regards as standards. The affirmative considers this request as crucial. In whatever way it is met it will impale the negative. There is no immortality in his system.

The reader can obtain a good fair idea of the way the Scriptures will be treated by both parties if he will take his New Testament and note the first Scripture quoted from it by the negative. It is the Resurrection chapter, 1 Cor. xv. From this the negative drew the conclusion that Paul teaches that two natures, natural and spiritual, do not exist contemporaneously in the same person, that we have only the physical nature now and will receive the spiritual nature later.

The affirmative called attention to 1 Cor. i. 15; and Gal. vi. 1, where men are called spiritual, and showed that the negative changed the word 'body' to 'nature.' The negative says "I am afraid you are mistaken."

Elder Wilson certainly wrote what I have quoted above. Now the word 'nature' does not occur in the entire chapter. The apostle is writing of the body; ten times that word is found. Read for yourself and be prepared for other collisions of theory with the Scriptures. "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body."

"That is not first which is spiritual but that which is natural; then that which is spiritual." "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." So reasons Paul, concerning the fleshy body and the heavenly.

Adam, Jesus and Paul bore the earthly body of flesh and blood. Jesus, when Paul wrote, was bearing the heavenly and spiritual body. The saints are to have spiritual bodies. To make that Scripture teach that man has no spiritual nature, is to turn it to a thought Paul never had in view, a thought combatted by the Word as well as by the consciousness of man.

Establish that theory and you destroy all possibility of man being made in the likeness and image of God. For God is a spirit. If man has no spiritual nature then he is deprived of the only likeness of God. For surely no one would contend that God is a huge man with legs and trunk and arms, that would give the gorilla a claim to be in the likeness of the Creator.

This is a fair sample of the way in which this theological opinion will often clash with Christ and the Twelve.

How shall we account for the wonderful phenomena of the mental powers? The engineer's and architect's skill, the astronomer's bold calculations, the poet's fancy, the orator's inspiration appear to be above earthly birth. Can you believe that the dust formed brain can produce such works of genius?

The sole activity of matter is motion. But motion is not thought. The constituent elements of the brain are these:

Water	80.	parts
Albumen	7.	"
White fatty matter	1.53	"
Red " "	.70	"
Osmazome	4.12	"
Phosphorus	1.50	"
Acids, salts and sulphur	5.15	"
	100.00

Put any amount into a skull do you think that by any method of shaking or churning or vibrating a thought would be produced?

Admit that there is a controlling intelligent being called the spirit or the mind or the soul, which uses the nervous system especially the brain, much as the player of the organ, and all phenomena admit of a rational explanation. Then we can understand how the mind may be hampered by the imperfection of the organ. Deny the presence of a conscious supreme being, one far superior to the body and you are involved in hopeless confusion, and in unrelenting conflicts with facts.

For if brain substance does the thinking then the less brain the less thought. The elephants brain is larger than man's, why does he not surpass man in mental power? The chimpanzee has a brain in shape like the human, he makes no advance. Have you ever seen a person paralyzed on one-half of the body? The muscles were there but one-half the brain was diseased, inactive. Did the patient lose one-half his mental abilities? Not at all. We have noted a number of instances, take one. A boy shot in the head lost brain substance daily but retained his mental powers unimpaired till he died eighteen days afterward. The size of the brain left was not larger than an egg.

Dr. Lionel Beale is the best known English physiologist. He says: "Many nerves, and some organs of sense, may be destroyed and the mind not only escape destruction but remain unimpaired. A considerable part of the brain matter may be damaged and yet the mind retain its integrity. —Protoplasm page 151.

The frontal lobes of the brain are recognized as the seat of intellect. The nerves here are called motor nerves, they originate motion. The posterior lobes contain automatic nerves which without our volition control breathing, circulation and nutrition. Chloroform a rabbit or a monkey, apply electrical lobes with a mild current to the posterior lobes and the limbs, eyes, ears or mouth will move. The brain has been mapped out so the operator can tell precisely what muscle will move on touching any part of the back brain. But on touching the frontal lobes there are no results.—Ferrier: Functions of the Brain p. 158.

Take a frog, remove the front brain, put him in the water. He will swim till he reaches the bank, climb up, remain there motionless till he dies. A fish thus treated will swim, avoid no obstacle, seek no food and perish.—Joseph Cook: Biology p. 182.

"The removal of the frontal lobes causes no motor paralysis or other evident physiological effects, but causes a form of mental degradation which may be resolved in its ultimate analysis to loss of the faculty of attention."—Function of the Brain p. 288.

These experiments prove that an external agent uses the brain. It is intelligent, it directs movements of the body which cannot move without the consent of the presiding being. That being knows, it often increases in knowledge and power when the body is decaying, without it the body is inert and devoid of consciousness though the brain substance may be perfect.

To this agree the apostles: The spirit of man knows things, (1 Cor. ii. 11,) as the inward man, is renewed while the outward and visible man is decaying, (2 Cor. iv. 16) and when it is separated from the body the body is dead. (James ii. 26). The apostle does not add that the spirit is dead also, nor does the argument above prove that it does. It is submitted to show that God's works do not contradict his word: to show that the exact methods of science lead to the conclusion that materialism is untenable.

Geo. T. Sarra.

Reply No. 3.

In this paper, Elder Smith while speaking of the spirit, says, "When it is separated from the body the body is dead. (Jas. ii. 26) the apostle does not add that the spirit is dead also, I am glad the Elder has quoted this passage to prove the conscious existence of the spirit after the death of the body as it is a fair sample of texts the affirmative depends upon. Read the passage, and then refer to the margin in your Bibles and you will find the translators have there inserted the original meaning of the word spirit in this passage. The marginal reading for "spirit," is "breath." "The body without the breath is dead." That fact is potent to every one without any argument. There is nothing about a breath of air to retain consciousness after leaving the body.

Again: "If man has no spiritual nature, then he is deprived of the only likeness to God. For surely no one would contend that God is a huge man with legs and trunk and arms." I contend that God is a person, and that the likeness between God and man consists in physical form. I will now give a Scripture proof. Heb. i. 3: (Jesus) "being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person." Here God is called a "person," and also that Christ was an "express image of his person." An "express image," must be a correct likeness. It is also a fact that Christ had the physical form of his brethren. Now if Christ was the "express image" of God, and we know that we have the same form as Jesus, it follows that God, Jesus and his brethren, have all the same personal form.

Elder Smith, in his last paper speaking of the dual nature of man, suggested that it required body, soul and spirit to make one man. That is doubtless correct, but the three are no separate conscious personalities. Body and soul is applicable to both animal and vegetable life, as well as man.

The original Hebrew for "living soul," is nephesh chayyah, and nephesh meth, for "dead soul." In Gen. i., we read, "Let the earth bring forth nephes'h chayyah after his kind, cattle and creeping thing, and beast after his kind."

Gen. i. 20: "The moving creature that hath (Hebrew margin) soul."

Gen. i. 30: And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is (Hebrew margin) living soul."

Rev. xvi. 3: "Every living soul died in the sea."

So we see that the original creation are "living souls," as well as men; but a living soul is not an immortal soul.

Now with regard to man, Gen. ii. 7: "And the Lord God formed man (not a house for man) of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a (nephesh chayyah) living soul."

Some may suppose the "breath of life" breathed into man to be the external principle which marks the difference between man and the animal creation. See Gen. vii. 21, 22: "All flesh died which moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle, and of beasts, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man, all in whose nostrils was the breath of life."

With regard to the body and soul of vegetable life, see Isa. x. 18, 19: "And shall consume the glory of the forest, and of his fruitful field both soul and body."

See 1 Cor. xv. 26: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

Compare this with a quotation Eld. Smith makes (1st article, 1st col.) to illustrate his view of death.

"The bitterness of dissolution, these fortune's pangs of child birth.
What is death? To be born again, an angel of eternity."

According to the Bible this "angel of eternity" is an "enemy" destined to be "destroyed," it is also the fruit of sin. "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Jas. i. 15.

"The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. May the blessed Lord deliver us from this "angel of eternity." There is no harmony between the Bible teaching and such a theory. To illustrate I will take another example.

Dr. H. W. Thomas of the People's church said, "We may reasonably suppose that going out of the body makes no change in the soul. Self-consciousness is not affected.—memory, reason, love are the same. . . . There is no reason to believe the body will ever rise again. The spirit has its own body. Death is resurrection."

He says "self-consciousness is not affected memory, reason love are the same." The Holy Book says, Psalm cxv. 17, "The dead praise not the Lord neither any that go down into silence." Psa. vi. 5. For in death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" "Put not your trust in princes nor in the son of man in whom there is no help, his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4.

He says, "Death is resurrection," "There is no reason to believe the body will ever rise again." The Bible says, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plague, O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes."

We have in the Hebrew, three words that are rendered soul, they are, neshamah, neshmath, and nephesh. Only once is neshmath so rendered. See Job xxx. 15: "They pursue my soul as the wind." For neshamah, see Isa. lvii. 16: The spirit would fail (not live forever) before me and the souls (neshamah) which I have created." There is nothing immortal here. In every other instance, the word is naphesh, and occurs in the Old Testament about 720 times. It is rendered soul 460 times, and life 100 times, breath, desire, lust, appetite, heart, self, person, thing, creature, body, dead, he, me, man, one, and any, and not in a single instance does immortality attach to the word.

In the New Testament we have the Greek word, psuche. Psa. xvi. 10. is quoted in Acts ii. 27, and psuche is used as a Greek translation of the Hebrew nephesh. The word occurs 105 times, and is rendered soul, life, mind, heart and you. And in no case is the word immortal used in connection with it, as applied to man. In the Hebrew language, the learned Parkhurst says, "Nephesh (soul) as a noun, has been supposed to signify the spiritual part of man, or what is called his soul. I must for myself confess that I can find no passage where it has undoubtedly this meaning."

The following are a few samples of the Bible usage of the word soul. The first text speaks of "persons," "thieves," "asses," and "sheep" having souls: Numb. xxxi. 28. "Levy a tribute unto the Lord, of the men of war, which went out to battle, one soul of five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beeves, and of the asses, and of the sheep."

Lev. v. 2, 4. "If a soul touch any unclean thing, whether it be a carcass of an unclean beast, or a carcass of unclean cattle, or the carcass of unclean creeping things, and if it be hidden from him, he also shall be unclean and guilty, or if a soul shall swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil."

Prov. xix. 15. "Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger."

Prov. vi. 30. "Men do not despise a thief if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry."

Psa. xxx. 3. "O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave. Thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit."

Jer. ii. 34. "In thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents."

The phrases "immortal soul," and immortality of the soul," are of very common usage in pulpit oratory, and one would naturally suppose they could be found in the Bible, but they are not there. I will make Eld. Smith a present of $100 for each and every text containing those phrases.

Revelation xiii. and xiv.

The "gospel" of our day is the glad tidings of what God proposes to do. The "gospel" of the "age" is the glad tidings of the hour having come for the accomplishment of that purpose. It is a proclamation addressed to the political world in general. It is a blunt summons to do something of which governments know nothing except as "wrath." "Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come," etc. see Rom. xiv. This strikes the keynote of the coming dispensation. It is the great difference between the present age and the future age. In the Psalms we read of a similar admonition and relating to the same hour of judgment. "Be wise now therefore, O ye kings, be instructed, ye judges of the earth serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling (kiss the Son) lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him." It would seem until the arrival of this hour of judgment God as it were takes no notice. He keeps silence and men suppose him unregardful, and every one is doing what seemeth right in his own eyes. . . But the day is appointed, viz. "He hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." When the day arrives the world will be apprized of the fact and summoned to give attendance as the symbol before us informs us. But the proclamation will not be heeded. "The kings of the earth will set themselves and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord," etc, not knowing who he is and so the power will be broken as with a rod of iron, and dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel." The thrones being thus cast down through the breaking of their political powers, ...the survivors who disavow themselves from the enemies of the Lord will find sparing mercy at his hand to the lengthening of their lives, and their admission to the kingdom of God as mortal subjects. Thus the remnant will probably respond; but as regards the masses, the message falls on and the worshippers of the Beast rush on to the torment awaiting them in the presence of Lamb; against whom they advance, and whose power comes terribly forth to their destruction. Read 2 Thess.

There is a very great contrast between the scenes exhibited in this 14th chap. of Rev. and those in the previous chapter "Weeping endureth for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." The chapters in question exhibit this fact in symbol, so far as concerns the class of whom Jesus said, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." We have the long, dark, distressful history of Europe under the Papacy in chap. 13, and the inauguration of the joyous morning in chapter 14. This chap. 14 is more interesting. It brings with it, as applied to man, in

Obituary.

Died at the residence of her daughter Mrs. Flora Brown, in Dallas Ore., Elizabeth Plummer, aged eighty-two years. Seven children and numerous grand and great grand-children are left to mourn the loss of one whose place can never be filled.

Deceased was a native of Tennessee and in 1830 was united in marriage to Philemon Plummer. She became a member of the Christian Church quite early in life and in the year 1859 having been taught "the way of the Lord more perfectly," by Bro. Hernandy, united with the Church of God since which time she has believed and "Earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints."

Her beloved companion has been eleven years "resting in hope" and she was willing and anxious to sleep by his side till the "Trump of God" should call them forth to an "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and which fadeth not away."

The many sympathetic friends who congregated at her grave with beautiful floral offerings and tearful tributes of affection testified to the loving esteem in which she was held by young and old of Dallas. A quartette of sweet voiced singers sang softly and tenderly, her own selection, "What a friend we have in Jesus" and as the glorious comforting promises contained in the 15th chapter of 1st Corinthians were reverently read by Bro. Mulkey of the Christian Church in obedience to her last request, every heart was thrilled and eyes were dimmed with tears of joyful hope as well as sorrow. As the clods were falling on her casket there floated out on the sweet June air in softest cadence her other chosen hymn.

"We shall sleep but not forever.
There will be a glorious dawn.
We shall meet to part no never.
On the resurrection morn."

May the Lord hasten the day of his glorious appearing and kingdom is the prayer of her bereaved ones.

Joseph E. Emerson was born in Georgia, Ohio, March 1st, 1818, and died May 25, 1896, aged 78 years 2 months and 25 days. He came to Marshall county, Ind., in May 1839.

Bro. Emerson became obedient to the gospel many years ago and continued to cherish the hope of the gospel, until death. To live in the faith is grand, and to die in full faith of a resurrection to eternal life is sublime. To be numbered with the holy ones who "died in faith" is the highest honor that can be conferred. A large audience listened attentively to the answer to the question of the ages, "If a man die shall he live again?" Solved by the Lord Jesus Christ, bringing immortality to light by a resurrection to eternal life.

Anna Louretta, wife of Harvey Elder, and daughter of C. L. and Clara Parks (known here at Argos as Retta Parks granddaughter of Sister Sarah A. Tribbey of Argos, Ind.) was born in Newton County, Ind., Dec. 23, 1872, and died at her home two miles West of Ogden, Ill. June 5th 1896, after a few days illness with inflamation of bowels. She was united in marriage on Feb. 26th, 1896, to Harvey Elder, and only lived a little over three months of happy wedded life. She leaves a husband, father, mother, four brothers, three sisters, gran ma, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. She united with the Church of of God at Argos, Ind., in 1888, and we hear she has lived a consistent Christian life until her death. She asked her husband and friends to meet her on the other shore, and we trust she quietly fell asleep in Jesus to await the resurrection.

Conviction finds little mercy in human judgment. In the Christian life there is reason to fear that men be controlled by it. Our Lord warned his disciples of their danger in this respect—"Whoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." It is possible to profess discipleship to Christ and be ashamed of his "words." There are doctrines which he proclaimed that are repulsive to human wisdom which there is a temptation to ignore. Silence, when his "words" are assailed, may be the token that we are ashamed of the Gospel.

"THE SCRIPTURES OPENED."

Thoughts and themes for Bible students, by Robert Ashcroft. This is a new work of 875 pages, containing a variety of lectures and short articles on important Bible subjects, exhibiting the revealed purpose of God concerning the earth and all its families, how we may become identified with those purposes, "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ" of all that God hath promised. It is believed the book will commend itself to the unprejudiced mind, and be useful in leading to a more perfect understanding of and love for the Scriptures of truth. Numerous testimonials of a very satisfactory character concerning the merits of the book have been received from prominent brethren scattered abroad, and which we can find no place for in this brief notice. Sent by mail, postpaid, on the receipt of $1.00. Address this office.

"A LETTER TO FATHER SIX."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and Their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, with gamut for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth: 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open letter to J. A. Conant," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in RESTITUTION, April 22, 1895. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Addie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the RESTITUTION of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Summer Land.

O summer land of God! where winter's chill
And storm-cloud shadows come no more;
Nor tides of evil dash their angry waves
On the golden sands of the fairer shore.

There peace reigns and bounds the crystal sea—
The benediction of his gracious hand
That once made calm white-crested Galilee,
When the waves went down at his command.

From that summer land may reach us here,
To chase away all fear and hate;
And by our side, soul-whispering, may come
A touch of the infinite calm.

What is the Difference?

Bro. Holt desires to be shown a distinction between members of the Church of God, and the Seventh Day Adventists.

In reply I would say, there is a marked distinction between those who are members of the true Church of God, and either the First or the Seventh Day Adventists. Both of them are adverse to, and seek to destroy the very base of the gospel of the kingdom of God.

If there is one thing above another that Jesus emphasized in his preaching, it was the glad tidings, or good news concerning the kingdom of God. It was the burden of his preaching. And he has ordained that "this gospel of the kingdom of God shall be preached in all the world for a witness." Matt. xxiv. 14.

Jesus went through every village preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Mark i. 14; Luke viii. 1.

He sent his disciples to preach it. Luke ix. 1, 2; Luke x. 1–9.

Philip preached it, and when they believed it, were considered fit candidates for baptism. Acts viii. 12.

Paul preached it. Acts xix. 8; xx. 25; xxviii. 23-31.

There is but one hope (Eph. iv. 4) and one gospel. Gal. i. As there is but one gospel, the gospel of the kingdom is that gospel.

I will now prove that neither First Day, or Seventh Day Adventists believe this gospel, but seek to destroy it.

Jesus preached so much about the gospel of the kingdom, the disciples became anxious to know when the event would occur, and asked him: (Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" And he also promised them as a reward, that when he himself should reign in glory), they also should sit upon twelve thrones judging (or ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel.

The kingdom could not be restored to Israel, or the disciples rule over Israel, unless Israel should be restored (which is now taking place).

It is a notorious fact that these Adventists have long denounced bitterly the doctrine that Israel shall be gathered home, and dwell safely upon the mountains of Israel, so beautifully described by the prophets.

The kingdom could not be restored again to Israel, unless Israel had previously possessed the kingdom, and was the kingdom of God upon earth: I will now prove from God's Word that Israel was previously God's kingdom, and when restored will still be the kingdom of God.

The Israelites petitioned Samuel to set a king over them like other nations. The Lord said unto Samuel: "Hearken unto the voice of the people, in all that they say unto thee, For they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them."

After the reign of Saul, David was selected, and in his coronation prayer, said: "Thine is the kingdom O Lord, thou art as head above all." And before his death, he said, Solomon was chosen "to sit upon the throne of the Kingdom of the Lord, over Israel." 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. See verse 23: "Then Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as King." See 2 Chron. ix. 8: "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighteth in thee to set thee on his throne to be King for the Lord thy God."

After this, wicked Kings sat on the throne of the Lord, but the Lord could not permit this, and said to the last occupant of the throne: "Thou profane and wicked Prince of Israel whose day is come when iniquity shall have an end, thus saith the Lord God, remove the diadem, and take off the crown, this shall not be the same, exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 25–27.

Now notice, it is, throne and kingdom that was overturned that should be given to him "whose right it is," and not some other. "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel."

Who right is it? Speaking of Jesus, the angel said: "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of Kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 30-33.

How can these Adventists have Jesus reign on the "throne of David," and "over the house of Jacob," unless the overturned throne is restored, and the "house of Jacob" now in exile return home?

"The throne of his Father David," does not relate to the seat David sat on, but to the regal power, locality and people. Victoria would still sit on the throne of Britain, if they should discard the present seat, called a throne, and substitute it with another, as long as she exercised regal power over the British people. But if she should be banished from the country, stripped of power, and another reign in her place, she would not any longer occupy the throne of Britain. But if she should be restored to her country, and power over the British people, then the kingdom would again be restored to her.

So Jesus could never reign on David's throne, unless the locality, and power over the same nation that David ruled over was given him.

"The Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion." Micah iv. 7, 8.

"They shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord." Jer. iii. 17.

"The Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23.

Jesus claimed before his judge to be the "King of the Jews," and yet these Adventists tell us that the Jews as a nation will never be restored. How can Jesus sit on the throne of David, and as the King of the Jews, reign over the house of Jacob forever, and that people forever remain in exile?

There would be no force or use in language to say that the "diadem," and "crown" which was removed, and throne overturned, should be given to him "whose right it is," unless the throne, diadem and crown, which had been removed, and not some other, should be given to the rightful occupant.

The gospel of the kingdom (which is the saving faith) cannot be understood, or preached, and leave out the literal reign of Jesus on the throne of his Father David (which once existed, but now in ruins) and reign over the house of Jacob (now in exile, but is being restored) forever.

The disciples had good cause for asking the question: Lord, wilt thou at this time, restore again the kingdom to Israel?

Now, Bro. Holt, cannot we see, that the gospel of the kingdom cannot be preached, and leave Israel in exile, as these Adventists do? Hence there is a marked distinction between Adventists, and true members of the Church of God, who believe and obey the gospel of the kingdom.

With regard to communing with Adventists, I would say, what fellowship can obedient gospel believers have with those who destroy the gospel?

We must be firm in the faith, yet kind and gentle to all men.

W. H. WILSON.

Exhortation.

Dear Restitution:

I think we should at all times be able to tell what we believe and why we believe it, and take the Bible for it. Then as the Bible is before me as I write this letter, I think it would be proper to tell what I think about it. We believe that it teaches when man dies, he is dead, and is buried and waits until Christ comes and is then resurrected from the grave and this earth will be the saints' home. That then as when we will have glory, honor, immortality, life eternal. That it will not take place at death as so many people think. I will now give some Scripture to prove what I have been saying. We will turn to Gen. ii. 7, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Then man was a dead soul until God put breath into him and then he was a living soul (or man). God put a certain tree in the garden. He forbid this man or soul to eat of it lest he die. But he was persuaded by the serpent, and did eat of it. Then death was the penalty, Gen. iii. 19, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. v. 5, "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years and he died." Gen. xxv. 8, "Then Abraham gave up the ghost and died in a good old age, an old man and full of years, and was gathered to his people. "Then turn to the 14th chapter of Job. But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost and where is he?" This ghost in the margin of my Bible says a little puff of breath. Psalm cxlvi. 3, 4. "Put not your trust in princes nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish." Eccl. xii. 7. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it. Refer back to chapter iii. 19, 20, 23. "For that which befalleth the sons of man befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity: All go unto one place: all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" So they do not go to heaven and play on the golden harp, and know more after they are dead than they did before. For we are taught in John iii 13, "That no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man which is in heaven." And in Acts ii. 3, 4. That David is not ascended into the heavens; and in the twenty-ninth verse that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. But they are hid in their graves and wait till the their change come. Job xiv. 21. "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not and they are brought low and he perceiveth it not of them." Now we come to the resurrection. Turn to Jer. xxxi. 15, 16, 17. "Thus saith the Lord a voice was heard in Ramah lamentation and bitter weeping; Rahel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord, Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy works shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And their is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border. A prophecy relating to the time of Christ's birth, when all of the children were killed from two years old and younger. Read Matt. ii. 16, 17, 18. Daniel xii. 2, 3. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." 1 Thes iv. 16, 17; 1 Cor. xv., commence at verse 12 and read down to verse 24, commence at verse 50 and read the rest of the chapter. Then as we believe that the earth will be the saints' home I will refer to Psa. xxxvii. 9, 10, 17, 18, 22, 28, 34. In this chapter we find that evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord they shall inherit the earth. That the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, and their inheritance shall be for ever. The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein for ever. Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it. Prov. x. 30. The righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth. Christ himself taught it in his sermon on the Mount. Matt. v. 5, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." I think that I have given ample proof upon this subject. So let us look for the Lord Redeemer who is to come to this earth. As he was once we are sure he will come again. For we are taught in Acts i. 10, 11, 12, "He will come again. "And while they steadfastly looked toward heaven, as he went up behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye, men of Galilee why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Matt. xvi. 27, "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. xxiv. 30. "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Then to prove where he will reign we will turn to Rev. xiv. 1, "And I looked and lo, a Lamb stood on Mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads." Micah iv. 7. "And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast afar a strong nation; and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forever." Isaiah xxiv. 23. "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed when the Lord of hosts shall reign on Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."

We do not believe that times will be any better until Christ does come and be our King. Then we will have peace on earth, good will toward men. Then is when we can enjoy what we have been praying for: "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes: There will be no more death, no more sorrow, no more pain for the former things are passed away." This all applies to this earth when every thing is made new. Then is when that is to come to pass that is taught in Isa. xi. 6, 7, 8, 9, "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and the little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Then is when we will peace and harmony. Then is when we will have immortality and eternal life, and live for ever with the Lord. When he reigns over Jerusalem on Mount Zion in the land of Canaan. The land that God promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and to all that believe and look for him the second time. We must be baptized in the likeness of Christ's death, burial and resurrection to inherit this land. If we do we are ready to say, Come Lord Jesus, come quickly.

We are looking for the soon coming King.

Prophecy.

To the Restitution:

Above all [illegible] Heavenly Father has seen fit to reveal to us His purposes and has called upon [illegible] to write down His will for the benefit of man. These revelations are called prophecy. The word prophecy is used in the Bible in different senses. Sometimes it means history written before the event occurs, as in Ezek. xxxviii. 8, xxxix. 8. About 683 years before the birth of Christ God gave a communication which he desired to make to the children of men whose words should be called the words of God," (Read carefully Deut. xviii. 15, 18, 19, of Peter xx.

Your last article on Ezekiel and it, proves conclusively that these two prophecies refer to one and the same transaction. In this I think you are mistaken. The [illegible] Gog and Magog are mentioned by both prophets [illegible]

In Rev. xx. [illegible] an angel coming down from heaven having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand, and he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and satan, and bound him a thousand years." When is satan to be bound? At the commencement of the Mill-anium. When will he be released? "And when the thousand years are finished satan shall be loosed." What does he do when he is loosed. "And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle" [illegible] and they compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved City, and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them."

Who are it that gathered these nations together to battle? Satan. Who is it to lead the armies of God will fall upon the mountains of Israel, as foretold by Ezekiel? [illegible]

What is given to the armies who [illegible] "and the camp of the saints surrounded the camp of the saints." They are devoured by fire. If they were thus devoured they certainly would not need any burial. But how was it with Gog's army who fell upon the mountains of Israel? Let Ezekiel answer. "Seven months shall the house of Israel be burying them." Ezek. xxxix. 12. Again, the children of Israel were seven years burning the weapons both the shields and the bucklers, the bows and the arrows, the hand staves and the spears." Was there any wood left to be burned after the devil and his armies were destroyed by fire?

Satan's army made an attack on the saints. It won't do to call the unregenerate Jews who inhabited Jerusalem at the time Gog attacked that city, saints. They had not so much as acknowledged Christ as their Messiah at the time the attack was made. The prophet says "the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward. Ezek. xxxix. 22.

No, the fulfillment of the two prophecies takes place more than a thousand years apart. The one spoken by Ezekiel will be fulfilled before the second advent of the Savior, that spoken by John more than a thousand years after the happening of that glorious event. Two objects are accomplished by the great and terrible war foretold by Ezekiel.

1. The Lord breaks the war spirit of the world and causes the nations to cease beating their plowshares into swords and their pruning-hooks into spears, which they are now doing. Therefore the process will be reversed and the swords will become plowshares and the spears, pruning-hooks, and nations will not learn war any more.

The Lord will be magnified and sanctified in the eyes of many nations. Ezek. xxxviii. 23.

The world will be thus convinced that God rules in the affairs of men.

The Japanese are still pagans. They propose to celebrate their victories by erecting a gigantic statue of Buddha, the metal of which will be supplied from the ordnance captured in the late war. It will be 120 feet high, will cost $1,000,000, and be erected at Kioto.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Origin of the "Sweet By and By."

"In this quiet little town, Richmond, Wis., of some 800 inhabitants, in Walworth County, on almost the extreme southern boundary of the State, leading the quiet, monotonous, self-sacrificing life of a country physician, lives one of the past war times poets, Samuel Fillmore Bennett, who served "for three years of the war" as Lieut. Bennett of the Fortieth Wisconsin Volunteers, whose name has dropped almost into oblivion, though his song, "The Sweet By and By," has been sung and heard by nearly every music loving person in this and foreign lands at some time since it was written by Dr. Bennett twenty-four years ago, when he was not long home from the war.

At the time of the inception of the song Dr. Bennett had returned home from Ann Arbor, Mich., where he was graduated with highest honors and had become an attache of the Elkhorn Independent.

He and a musical composer, J. P. Webster, long since dead, were friends inseparable. Webster was of a despondent nature; in many ways an extremist, while Bennett was more cheery. Webster appeared before his friend one day, more than ordinarily downcast, when Bennett inquired, "What is the trouble now?".

"It is no matter; it will be all right by and by," replied he.

Like an inspiration or a voice from the unseen land came to Bennett the idea of the song. "The Sweet By and By." Turning to his desk, writing off-hand with pencil, in less than thirty minutes he handed Webster the hymn worded as it reads to-day.

As Bennett handed the lines to Webster two friends, S. E. Bright, now a resident of Fort Atkinson, and N. H. Criswell, who long since joined the great majority, entered the room and listened to Webster as he improvised the music on his violin, hastily jotting down the notes on a bit of waste paper; in less than ten minutes these fourmen were singing the hymn, "The Sweet By and By," to an audience of one, H. R. Crosby, who remarked with tears in his eyes, "Gentlemen, that hymn is immortal."

Within a few days it was sung by school children on the streets; then it was published as a Sunday-school hymn, and hastily as sheet music, translated in many languages.

Aside from their intrinsic worth and beauty the words were peculiarly fitted to the spirit of the times in which they were written, when so many hearts were sorrowful because of a "Nation's sluin," watching to grasp any comforting word or melody, with both of which "The Sweet By and By" was replete, a fact that doubtlessly hastened the popularity of the hymn. —Tribune.

The Sultan of Turkey's presents to the Czar upon the occasion of the latter's coronation consisted of a number of rich carpets and other costly articles, including a diamond pin valued at £2,000 ($10,000), intended for the Czarina. In addition the Sultan sent a high decoration to the Czar, and forwarded presents to the principal members of his household.

A whole mountain of asbestos is said to have been discovered about four miles north of Mt. Vernon, Ore. The asbestos fibre varies from half an inch to two inches in length, and is of excellent quality. The discovery was made through the herding of sheep on the mountain. Where the animal had trampled the rock the asbestus threads showed up like bunches of wool.

Prof. Orfila, President of the Medical and Scientific Academy of Paris says: "Tobacco contains the most deadly and subtle poison known to the chemist except prussic acid." The poison of tobacco is called nicotine, from Jean Nicot, who sent the tobacco seeds or plants from Portugal to Catharine de Medici in 1559, who was instrumental in its cultivation in France.

THE copy for the "Wilson-Smith Discussion" has not arrived. We have to go to press without it.

A PERSON who is a brother of Christ at the meeting of the ecclesia, but not in the wicked surrounding of the week is deceiving himself.

A MAN possessing the truth, but destitute of the principle of love, in which it has its origin and end, is a bastard and not a son: an ugly abortion in the family of God.

ONE of the first features of an excellent man's excellence is that he cares little whether anybody 'knows it or not. He does not parade his good works in any sense—just does them, that's all.

LAMARTINE said.—"There is only one stimulant that never fails, and yet never intoxicates—Duty. Duty puts a blue sky over every man—up in his heart, maybe—into which the skylark, happiness, always goes singing."

THE power of hope as proverbially great. We see it in all the relations of life. Give a man a reliable ground of expectancy of good, and see how it wakes his sluggishness and stimulates to effort. It makes all the difference between a heartless way of working and the opposite.

HE who fails to reflect before acting walks with his eyes shut, and advances with danger. He also falls very often because the eye of reflection does not enable him to know whither his footsteps lead." Gregory the Great is credited with these words. They are as true now as when first penned.

SAY, you brother, it is no part of godliness to try and gain wealth by a "stroke of luck," and to pocket money for which no adequate service has been performed. It is "the way of the world," but it is a bad way. Truly there are days in which there is special need to pray, "lead us not into temptation."

O WHAT an exalted honor to have Christ mention our names with approbation in the presence of a countless assemblage of approved ones of all ages, and myriads of angels! The sinner's honor is a mere flash in the pan compared to this. It is nothing at all in the eternal reckoning. It is a momentary affair. It is soon over. It is not worth the purchase.

Lachish Discoveries.

We learn from the Sunday Magazine, of England that before Dr. Bliss compelled the mound to yield up its great secret he was rewarded with many "finds." He unearthed jars and all sorts of implements, a wine-press, heaps of burnt barley idols, etc. He also laid bare a hot blast furnace, containing ore and slag. It thus seems that 1,400 years before Christ, (or perhaps 1500 years) the Amorites knew how to use the hot air blast instead of cold air and that they anticipated the modern improvements in iron manufacture due to Nelson, and patented in 1828. At the bottom of the Tell, Dr. Bliss laid bare what he believed to be the foundations of the old Amorite city. The mud-brick walls were thirteen feet thick and twenty-eight feet high. On May 14, 1892 he found in a great ash-bed, a coffee colored stone with wedged-shaped inscriptions on both sides. This discovery marks a new epoch in the history of explanations in Bible lands. This table contains letters from the Governors of Lachish to the Pharaohs of Egypt, and there is no doubt about the exact date. In 1887 a peasant woman had discovered similar tablets at Tell-el-Amarna in Egypt, about 180 miles from Cairo. These tablets contained 170 letters from Palestine, and the names of kings who were contemporary with Joshua, and they confirm the historical accuracy of the Book of Joshua. Some of the letters in the Tell-el-Amarn tablets are from Lachish, and both in style and contents they agree with the tablets discovered by Dr. Bliss. The two sides of the tally have thus been brought together, and the veracity and date have been established. This double discovery created a great sensation among the learned, and the story of it claims a foremost place in the romance of exploration. The Lachish tablet is the first written record of pre-Israelitish times that has yet been found on the soil of Palestine. The Lachish letters are in entire harmony with measureless egotism and vanity which are revealed by picture, sculpture and hieroglyph, upon miles of the surviving Egyptian monuments. They show that Pharaoh demanded even from his chief rulers, the most abject and preposterous flattery. Zimrida, the governor of Lachish, thus addressed his over-lord of Egypt. "To the King, my lord, my sun-god who is from heaven, thus writes Zimrider, the governor of the city of Lachish, thy servant, the dust of thy feet. of the King, my lord, the sun-god from heaven, bows himself seven times seven. I have very diligently listened to the words of the messenger whom the King, my lord, has sent to me," etc. Many passages in these letters read like extracts from the book of Genesis.

The Moabite stone is said to date 890 or 900 years B. C., and authentic history on the monuments of Egypt does not go much further back, but a scarab or seal of Amenhoten III. fixes the date of the Lachish tablets as not later than 1400 B. C. The writing is perfect in its kind, and very beautiful—revealing a high degree of literary culture. The spade is proving mighty in solving antiquarian and Biblical problems. The Higher Critics, so-called have maintained that the books of Moses could not have been written at the dates assigned, as writing was not known in Palestine till the eighth or ninth century before Christ. It is not possible to hold such a theory now: it has been demonstrated that the Israelites, both in Egypt and Canaan were surrounded by literary nations, who had carried the art of writing to a surprising perfection. It cannot now be held that the early readers of the Old Testament must have been derived from mere tradition. Skeptics are getting far more careful of late. They stand in awe of the pick, crow-bar and spade.

"The Question Drawer."

MORE CONCERNING SUBSTITUTION.

In further considering this great subject we remark that Christ, we understand, was perfectly obedient and righteous himself, but not for others, on the principle of substitution. The fact that every man is to be judged for his own works seems to exclude the idea of substitution. We remember quite well what we were taught from the Assemblies Shorter Catechism, viz: that "the righteousness of Christ is imputed to us, and received by faith alone," and the supposed proof, "the Lord our righteousness;" and "He was made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption." If these words "our righteousness, prove imputed righteousness, do they not prove imputed wisdom, imputed sanctification, and imputed strength, and salvation and hope as well as righteousness; He is said to be our strength, and salvation and hope. What? All this instead of us. Oh! what becomes of us, if he is righteous, and wise, and sanctified and redeemed instead of us. This is the very essential oil of substitution. How do you like it?

Jesus performed the only act that could reconcile us to God. We perfectly agree with Paul that this was to make peace by the death of the cross. Not for a moment would we question the necessity of Christ's death. Not for a moment would we allow or think we could have been saved without his death; but for all that we cannot believe that he died as the substitute of any man.

He died as one of us. Died as our representative. He was made in the likeness of sinful flesh,—in the likeness of his brethren for the suffering of death. He died unto sin once, but he lives again—lives by God: death hath no more dominion over him. Having died, he was entirely freed from sin. Sin of his own he had none, and hence could not be freed from sin of his own. But he was one of our race and possessed our nature, which is death-doomed. To be freed from that nature he died and was freed from it, then sin had no further claims upon him. He settled the whole account against him thus.

He died in order to be made perfect through sufferings. Heb. ii. 10. He died because God could not otherwise through him "condemn sin in the flesh." Rom. viii. 3. He died because "it was necessary that the same nature which had transgressed should suffer the penalty of death in the person of one who was sinless." He died in order to abolish death, and bring life and immortality to light in his own person, and to others through faith in the good news concerning the same. He died because he could not otherwise have been raised again for our justification. He died because only in that way could he destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage. Heb. ii. 14, 15. He died because in the economy of God there was no remission of sin without the shedding of blood, and there was no other person with blood unpolluted by sin. He died because the blood was necessary to make the new covenant effective. His blood was the blood of the everlasting, life-imparting covenant; and we learn from Heb. xiii. 20 that he was the first to pass again through that blood-confirmed instrument, for we there read, "Now the God of peace that brought back from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep through the blood of the everlasting covenant."

The Son of God died as testator of the Father's will. Paul in Heb. ix. shows that where there is a testament or will, there must of necessity be the death of the testator, that is, the maker of the will. In this case God was the Will-maker, and he could not not die. And in the light of this fact it appears that Christ was a substitute after all,—not for man, but in place of God.

He died to redeem the Jews from the curse of the law, "blotting out the hand writing of ordinances that was against them and contrary to them, and nailing it to the cross."

He died to remove the barrier between Jews and Gentiles. The middle wall of partition which was added till the seed should come that being taken down, Gentiles have access to the Abrahamic covenants of promise. He died that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living. This is plainly stated by Paul in Rom. xiv. 9. And if he could not become Lord of the dead and the living without dying, we have another sound reason why there was no salvation without his death,—although he died instead of no one.

He died as an example for us that we are called upon to imitate, if necessary to lay down our lives for the brethren, but not instead of them.

He died as our associate, and we have to suffer in association with him. We submit that the Lord's sufferings on the cross, are by no means the sum of his sufferings. It was a life of suffering, and we have enlisted to suffer with him, and our reign with him depends upon our suffering with him. We have given but the merest outline of the truth on this grand theme but we trust this will cause some to investigate for themselves till they are ready to exclaim with the apostle "O, the depths of the richest both of the wisdom and knowledge of God," etc.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.—A Reply to "The Christian Oracle." No. 10.

The work entitled "The Great Commission," by R. Milligan, is, I believe, a standard work in the Body to which you are identified. It commences with the following sentence:—"The last commission of Jesus Christ to his twelve apostles, is the fundamental law of the kingdom of heaven on earth." This, on your own confession was given before he was crowned. You say "Jesus was crowned in heaven," after asserting that "No kingever had the authority to give laws to his subjects until crowned." I trust you will see that you have erased your own track here, without any more help from me, and I will pass on to what you say about 2 Tim. iv. 1. You claim that the kingdom has been set up since the departure of Christ, and that this Scripture in Campbell's Translation reads:—"At his appearing IN his kingdom." This makes it appear to favor the prominent doctrine of the Body he founded. But, as out of fourteen different translations before me it alone uses a preposition instead of a conjunction. The consensus of learned criticism appears to be opposed to the Campbell reading. I am aware that Kai is used for a great many purposes, but I do not think it is rendered "in" in the common translation at all. And so far as the lexicographers, Liddell and Scott, Grove, Green, Greenfield, Parkhurst and Bagster are concerned, they seem to be of one mind, each meaning attributed to it. It is evident that Mr. C. [illegible] the testimony of the [illegible] kingdom caused him to depart from the true meaning of the Word. Here we see the

QUESTIONABLE PREPOSITION

with the whole of the Scriptures against it. He will certainly be in his Kingdom when he appears in it,—but that by no means proves that he is in it [illegible] Peter said [illegible] Timothy exhorted [illegible] charged them before [illegible] Paul says he [illegible] said in [illegible] of his own experience this life [illegible] the Lord, that "thenceforth there is laid up for me a crown [illegible] righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me AT THAT DAY, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Do not the words at that day point directly to the day of his appearing and Kingdom spoken of in the first verse? He is going to have a crown on that day.

A CROWN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS

it seems. It is laid up for him, from the time of his sentence. The righteous Judge will bestow it upon him, [illegible] is not one of the dead to be [illegible] at that time, together with [illegible] to have his appearance. This [illegible] the foundation from under those who preach the reward in heaven at death, for surely if any man would be rewarded at death Paul would be. But Paul to Timothy is in beautiful [illegible] with Paul to the Thessalonians where he shows that it is at his appearing that he will be glorified in his saints and admired of all them that believe. Those who teach that the kingdom is the church and the church is the kingdom mostly believe that they are immortal, and that at death they either go to an place, or go to heaven as their home. Let us ask how much interest such a dichotomist can take in the appearing of Jesus? If they suppose themselves to be immortal and exist right on after the death of their house, or body, [illegible] certainly they do not depend upon Christ for life, because he bestows [illegible] hid with him in God for his [illegible] when he appears. Those who claim to be dead and alive at the same time alive after death before the appearing;—can not expect to receive from him what they claim to have without him. Then why would they love his appearing? And if they

INTERMEDIATE

DO NOT LOVE HIS APPEARING

what prospect have they of receiving a crown when Paul receives his? If they suppose they go to heaven at death they must also suppose that Christ would be glorified in them there, and hence could not expect him to come here to be glorified in them and admired of them, as says Paul. If they are in heaven already, will they expect to hear him say, when he takes the throne of his glory on earth, (see Matt. xxv.,) "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world?" Another verse in this 2 Tim. iv., is the 18th. There the apostle says, "And the Lord shall (future) deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom," or as Campbell's Translation, "Will preserve me to his heavenly kingdom." I admit that that at or near the close of Paul's life-labors he had not yet reached the kingdom of heaven—had not yet entered it, but was confident that the Lord would preserve him to it, or into it,—and Paul is once more in beautiful harmony with Paul, for we read in Acts xiv. 21, 22, that he urged the disciples at Lystria, Iconium and Antioch to continue in the faith, and that we, he (himself and they of the places named) must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." This was to prepare them for the course of discipline to be passed through before they could or would enter the kingdom of God. If they were in any kingdom it was not God's kingdom.

THIS IS INFALLIBLE EVIDENCE

London, July 1.—[Copyrighted, 1896, by the New York Times.]—The perplexed continental situation is at all events a trifle clearer than it was a week ago.

Ever since the disaster of Adowah threw Crispi out of power Italy's position in international politics has been queer to the verge of mystery. It was known that the new Premier, Rudini, disliked the triple alliance, and believed that friendship with France was the true Italian policy. Knowing these to be his views it was natural to suspect him of seeking to carry them out, and the uncertainty as to what he might not secretly be doing in this direction has been a source of chronic uneasiness here, as at Berlin and Vienna, since last April.

Now this element of doubt is removed. Rudini, under what compulsion one knows not, has committed himself to the triple alliance and a warm English understanding in outspoken terms, and the Italian Chamber has approved his attitude by a large majority.

It is especially useful to have this matter cleared up, because we are plainly drifting into a difficult and dangerous situation.

There has grown to be a regular alternation now of weeks when the Ambassadors of Constantinople think they have patched up the rotten old fabric of the Turkish Empire so that it will stand a while longer, with weeks when new and alarming fissures yawn and the whole structure seems toppling for the final fall. This is one of the bad weeks. Crete, so far from being pacified by the Porte's belated concessions, is systematizing its revolt into a revolution. The Christian Deputies elected to the National Assembly which the Sultan has summoned to meet at Canea, either say it is unsafe for them to attend, or, if they come to Canea, hold aloof, intending to issue a proclamation stating that the assembly is a fraud and that their true allegiance is due to the Revolutionary committee.

The Cretans now are holding most of the rugged parts of the island in force. They have 2,000 Turkish regulars shut up in the fortress of Kandianos and expect to be able to starve them out, while elsewhere in mountain encounters the Turks are continually defeated by ambushed rebels.

The Greek Government still maintains a semblance of neutrality, but the Athenian press is quite out of hand now and openly preaches a Cretan propaganda. It is notorious, too, that a swarm of small Greek traders are in Cretan waters, professedly distributing relief, but really landing guns, cannon, and munitions of war for the rebels. Stories come to-day of a disturbance on the Turco-Greek frontier. They may or may not be true, but certainly they are not surprising.

In Armenia, also, matters suddenly have taken a turn for the worse. It is understood to-night here that something exceptionally terrible has happened at Van or in its vicinity. The Armenian committeemen here say 3,000 non-combatants have been slaughtered by Turks and Kurds.

From experience one learns to discount such figures, but no doubt a sufficiently shocking story will arrive from Van in a day or so.

What perhaps is of more immediate importance is the sudden revival of predictions from Constantinople of revolutionary outbreaks in the Turkish capital itself. Precisely how much of this sort of thing Europe can stand or where it will draw the line baffles prophesy. It is evident enough, however, that the nearer the doomed Ottoman Empire approaches to dissolution the closer the European powers are drawn toward the necessity of deciding what and who shall take its place. That this decision inevitably will be settled by the sword has been an axiom in European politics for generations. Whether it really is unavoidable no one can say, but we are drifting all the while nearer to the point where it will be made clear.—Tribune.

Alliances With Spain.

Reports from Europe are to the effect that the France-Spanish alliance, or the negotiations to conclude such an alliance, have been broken off. It is stated that some progress had been made and that the French naval squadron, which was sent to Corunna, was received by the Spaniards with such signs of rejoicing as to indicate they were impressed with the belief that France would be their ally. Then suddenly a cool wind blew between them. The Russian papers were unfriendly and naturally the French papers followed suit, and both expressed more or less sympathy with the Cubans, though the French have some millions invested in Hispano-Cuban securities.

The real reasons for the sudden change are not set forth. It is estimated, however, that it was brought about by Spain herself, that she had had a better offer in another quarter, either from Germany or from England, neither of whom cares to see the Franco-Russian alliance made any stronger. The statement, however, is only surmise. It is more than likely, after the official statements of Spain's condition, which have been made in her Parliament, and after Gen. Campo's declaration that it would require 400,000 men for five years to come and $1,000,000,000 to conquer Cuba, that France saw the folly of concluding an engagement of any kind with a power which is virtually bankrupt and has a war on its hands which will last years to come, unless some strong nation intervenes, ruin the country financially, and strip it of all the fighting men left. As an ally to any power Spain would be an incumbrance instead of an auxiliary. She has no financial standing with which to keep up such an alliance, no war strength with which to help an ally, no power on land or water. She has sent hundreds of thousands of men to put down what she calls a roving band or mob of guerillas and spent millions of dollars and has not asserted her control on a square mile of territory occupied by the revolutionists. She has exhausted her principal source of revenue by making war upon the Cubans and destroyed the business of the island. The idea that any nation should want this moribund Spain as an ally is absurd. It would pay the European nations better to compel her to remain neutral.

The Thief on the Cross.

Editor Eagle:

Since Sunday's lesson upon the crucifixion I have been asked by members of several Sunday schools what we, who believe in conditional immortality, only those who through faith, obedience and works have obtained a good report entering into immortal life at the resurrection, would do with the expression, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," found in this lesson. I believe that there is great interest in this matter and am pleased, with your kind permission, to give it the attention its importance demands, for upon it depends largely whether the gospel of the kingdom will be fulfilled, or is a fiction.

From Hebrews xi. 39, 40 we learn that Abel, Abraham, Moses, David and many others having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided a better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect. When Christ brings down the Heavenly Jerusalem, when he establishes his kingdom under the whole heavens, they and we shall be gathered together with him. Referring to the need of a resurrection, Peter (Acts ii. 34) says, "For David is not ascended into the heavens." If Christ be not risen, our faith is vain. But as Christ is risen, we shall also arise. We shall not all sleep but we shall all be changed. We that are alive shall not precede them that are asleep, but in a moment, at the last trumpet sound, the living and the dead in Christ shall be immortalized together. When the nobleman's kingdom is ready for him, he will return.

In the lesson the penitent malefactor had prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." If Jesus answered according to the text, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," I can not harmonize the Scriptures. The reply is not pertinent to the petition and does not agree with the teachings as to the gospel of the kingdom. But the real Luke, the Greek, does not give any reason for such discrepancy. The word to-day is translated from the Greek adverb of present time semeron, meaning now, this day, to-day. It has no comma before it and the construction makes it naturally modify the preceding verb. Proper translations are the following: "Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise;" "Verily this day I say to thee, thou etc.;" "Verily now I say unto thee, thou shalt surely be with me in paradise." The paradise was on the earth. The new, enlarged and beautified paradise, with the Savior as the central figure, will also be on the earth, the new earth, cleansed and purified as by fire.

The false rendering of our text presents other difficulties. Jesus gave up the ghost, better Jesus gave up the breath, strictly correct according to the Greek, Jesus expired before the close of the day of crucifixion. The malefactors did not die that day, and their bones were broken as they were taken from the cross. If they entered the immortal abode at death, Jesus entered one day (today) and the malefactors another, the one the immortal abode of bliss, the other the immortal abode of torture. Jesus then had not said, "Thou shalt be with me to-day," but "Now I say unto thee, thou shalt be with me when I come unto my kingdom," or in my kingdom. Again after the resurrection Jesus said to Mary Magdalene, "I am not yet ascended to my father."

Not one jot of God's Word shall fail of fulfillment. At the proper time the dead in Christ shall arise and the living in Christ shall be changed together with them, and so shall we ever be with the Lord, when he comes in his kingdom.

[Selected by A. Drew.]

The Coming of Christ.

A sound on the rampart, a sound at the gate,
I hear the roused lioness howl to her mate;
In the thicket at midnight they roar for the prey
Over which they shall riot till the dawning of day:
For wrath is descending on Zion's proud tower,
It shall come like a cloud,
It shall wrap like a shroud,
Till like Sodom she sleeps in a sulphurous shower.

For lo! the day cometh when all shall be flame:
When, Zion! the sackcloth shall cover thy name!
When thy bark o'er the billows of death shall be driv'n:
When thy tree, by fierce lightnings, from earth shall be riv'n!
When the oven, enkindled by mortal, shall burn,
And like chaff thou shalt glow
In that furnace of woe,
And, dust as thou wert, there to dust shalt return.

'Tis the darkness of darkness—the midnight of soul:
No moon o'er the depths of that midnight shall roll:
No starlight shall pierce thro' that life-chilling haze;
No torch from the roof of the temple shall blaze.
But, when Israel is buried in final despair,
From a height o'er all height,
God of God, Light of Light,
Her Sun shall then shine—her great Sovereign be there!

Then the sparkles of flame from his chariot wheels hurl'd,
Shall smite the crowned brow of the god of this world,
Then, captive of ages! The trumpet shall thrill
From the lips of the seraph on Zion's proud hill;
For, ventured in glory, their monarch shall come:
And from dungeon and cave
Shall ascend the pale slaves,—
Lost Judah shall rise, like the soul from the tomb!

Who rushes from heaven? The angel of wrath;
The whirlwind his wing, and the lightning his path!
His hand is uplifted,—it carries a sword!
'Tis Elijah he heralds the march of his Lord!
Sink—sink in eclipse! Earth, earth, shalt thou stand,
When the cherubim wings
Bear the King of thy kings?
Wo, wo, to the coward! Wo, wo, to the land!

'Tis the day long foretold, 'tis the judgment begun:
Gird thy sword, thy most mighty, thy triumph is won,
The idol shall burn on his own gory shrine:
Then, daughter of anguish, thy day-spring shall shine:
Proud Zion, thy rule with the olive shall bloom,
And the musk rose distil
Its sweet dews on thy hill:
For earth is restored, the kingdom is come!

Plea for Stability.

The competent man, capable of assuming responsibility in great emergency is a pearl of great price.

Ordinarily competent men are not scarce, and men willing to assume responsibility are legion; but the former too often fail through lack of nerve, when most needed, and the latter are generally of the class famed for rushing in where angels fear to tread, and it is from these last public officials are usually selected; because the public does not choose its agents as do business men, but prefers the most impudent and clamorous in advancing their own interests. This explains why we always are on the brink of financial distress, in the throes of financial distress, or trying to extricate ourselves from financial distress. We oscilate between baseless booms and dismal depressions.

With all our wealth we are chronic debtors to foreigners. With all our wisdom, we cannot rule ourselves respectable, and our municipal mismanagement and political squabbles are a national scandal. With all our power, (our military officials report,) our coasts are at the mercy of any buccaneering fleet. With all our civilization, we are involved in sempiternal wranglings with other powers. With all our business capacity, our commercial flag has practically disappeared from the high seas, and strangers command the trade of nations at our door. With all our statesmanship, we have not risen above the petty exclusive policy of the oyster, or "Heathen Chinee." With all our influence, we cannot protect our citizens or missionaries abroad. These are the thorns that torment us, make business dull, trade timid, laborers discontented, and the "good times" are always coming but never arrive.

The Lord is preparing for his kingdom and selecting his executive officials, and for this, has planned to secure the noblest and ablest, as fit to assume efficiently the responsibility to be delegated them. "Thou hast been faithful in a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." One of his chief demands is humility and self-abnegation, as contrasted with the impudence, pride, and self-assertion, the world mistakes for worth and delights to honor and reward. Christ seeks followers who, by knowledge of his Word, have prepared themselves to carry his designs into execution, who have the self restraint and courage to hold fast that which is good, when isolated and opposed by tradition, popular opinion, and false teachings.

Christians frequently mourn their segregation from sympathy and support. God is teaching them to stand alone. To be self-reliant. Abraham was separated from his people. Moses, David, John the Baptist and Christ all came out of the wilderness. Elijah said, "And I, even I only am left; and they seek my life to take it away." In desert Patmos John saw the revelations of God.

"All who would live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution." It is the trial of faith—no cross no crown. It is absolutely impossible to be an active Christian and not to beat variance with the world. The closer we draw to God the more fully we realize that our views conflict with popular beliefs, and this causes friction. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Knowledge of his Word gives the Christian a standpoint that elevates him above the mists that envelop the world, and furnishes prophetic insight, and a key to passing events that clears his comprehension, and teaches truths the world cannot understand, and so the children of light are misunderstood and disliked by the children of darkness.

"If it be possible live in peace with all men;" but it is not always possible if we do our duty. The "good fellow" is usually a man of lax or indifferent principles—Christ spoke out. The disciples utterly refused to cease preaching their whole doctrine. All in Christ's kingdom will have to show the marks of the cross, as did the Master. Whether or no we "be carried to the skies on beds of flowering ease," we shall not find that the mode to enter the kingdom of God, for that has to be entered "through much tribulation."

"Woe unto you when all men speak well of you, for so did their fathers to the false prophets." What can this mean but that popularity is a mark of submission to the Beast? For friendship to the world is enmity to Christ. "Good policy" generally means "Bad Christianity." The prophet that hurts no one is not preaching the whole gospel. When Stephen preached the gospel "they gnashed on him with their teeth," and then murdered him. When Christ spoke out at Nazareth, "they were filled with wrath," and tried to murder him, for even a "liberal policy" seems to have its limits. When the Pharisees paid Jesus the compliment of attending his discourses, he did not try to conciliate them by a "judicious address," but called them serpents and a generation of vipers. In our day this would be considered "bad form," as "hindering his usefulness," and condemn him to obscurity. "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" said Ahab to Elijah, because he would preach evil and not good was in fact a "Calamity Howler."

Even the beloved John was so uncharitable that respectable church members often feel constrained to apologize for his letter to the Elect Lady. As for Paul, setting aside his insignificant personal appearance and "bad delivery," he utterly lacked the qualifications to secure success as a popular pastor. Even so eminently respectable an authority as the High Priest Ananias, declared him to be "a pestilent fellow," and Paul admitted that he preached what the orthodox church of his day called "Heresy."

"Conciliation" and "Good Policy" are today undermining the popular churches. Lot tried the "broad-minded" theory, settled in the cities of the plains and probably run for office on the liberal platform. "He will needs be a judge" said the men of Sodom. Gen. xix. 9. Perhaps agreed with Dr. Burrows that "the only way to unite is never to mention subjects on which we are irrevocably opposed," or that, "a sincere worship, anywhere and everywhere, is true worship." Most likely he felt the need of religious companionship, and joined the church at Sodom on the understanding that no questions of creed would arise so long as he paid his dues and kept his mouth shut. Abraham, on the other hand, was "a bigoted, old fanatic behind the times,"—probably never attended their church sociables or pink parties, and utterly refused to assist in paying off the mortgage on Chemosh, and puttying up, painting and otherwise overhauling that dilapidated deity. It is not at all probable that Sarah allowed her daughters to preside at stalls to raise funds for nickleplating the fish scales on dragon's tails. Whereas, Lot's daughters married well, and his sons-in-law were active members of the "Young Men's Heathen Association" in Gomorrah. No wonder Chederlaomer (who was a stranger and did not understand fine distinctions) mistook him for a heathen and carried him off.

Christ did not come to send peace on earth but a sword. When good is actively opposed to evil there can be no other result. It was not a threat but a prophecy.

Strife must continue until the destruction of all evil by the power of Christ's coming.

Christians therefore are not asked to undertake the impossible, i. e. convert the world, which can only occur by obliteration of evil; but to hold the fort until relief arises, never to cease their warfare, or make a truce with the foe, but to hold fast that which is good, to fight the good fight of Faith, to sound the trumpet continually and clearly for if the trumpet gives forth an uncertain sound, (which it will do if we hold back any part of revealed knowledge) who can prepare himself for the day of battle?

When the Christian Soldier is urged to be "More conciliatory," or "to sink controversial points," or to "say nothing that offends" those who "do not see things just as we do," (all of which means to conceal the real truth,) there is but one Scriptural reply, "Get thee behind me Satan—for man shall not live by bread alone—but every Word of God."

Satan is tempting you to deny the Lord and partake of the sin of Meroz.

"Curse ye Meroz, saith the Angel of the Lord,—Curse ye Meroz bitterly—because it came not to the help of the Lord, the help of the Lord against the mighty.

"Eternal Life."

"Sing them over again to me,
Wonderful words of life;
Let me more of their beauty see,
Wonderful words of life."

One of the most wonderful and at the same time most painful Heresies of our times is that those words seem to have lost their power over the hearts of men. The Lord Jesus kept the offer of eternal life always first and foremost in his conversation with man. It formed as it were both the warp and woof of his discourse. He declared that to give it was the purpose of his mission, and the highest possible gift he could bestow. That it was impossible to earn it or buy it, that it was a free and undeserved gift of the Father and only to be procured through faith and obedience of the gospel. That to secure it a man was justified in sacrificing or abandoning every conceivable good thing this life could produce, or bestow. In fact he could not secure it unless he did so abandon this world and all its claims and pleasures. That to obtain it one must needs become an enemy of this world, hate it with a cordial detestation, surrender it, and the love of it, even of his own life and all that belonged to it; crucify it and his own flesh and blood likewise.

The Master never tired of explaining and enforcing the doctrine of eternal Life. Nor did his hearers tire of the message till they rejected the Messenger. And then his wonderful comment was simply "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." To those who believed he was the one who had "the words of eternal life," and they realized that they could go to none other and find them. In like manner his Apostles were charged to "go unto the people and declare all the words of this life." And the record of their sayings and doings, their sermons and their epistles, bears witness that as did the Master so did the servant bare to a world of dead and dying the message of eternal life.

First and last and all the time the gospel is a message of life, life, life, eternal life. And the record shows that it was little else either more or less for the first century of its history. All its grand victories over a world besotted in sin and given over to the evil one; all its mighty triumphs in the halls of learning or among the simple in the cottages of the poor, were wrought by the magic of those all-powerful words.

The words of the poet, the tongue of the orator, the sweet strains of the songsters of Israel, each and all found their inspiration in the message of eternal life.

It gave strength to live and bear the heavy burdens of the weary world; it gave courage to die and robbed death of all its terrors. The weak and tender and delicate woman or child became, by its wondrous power transformed into heros, invited the flames to torture or the wild-beast to devour, teachers of the law, understanding blushing and laughing into t[he] of death. O mystery of mys[te]wonder of wonders!! The years r[o]y; the message became stale and powerless and unprofitable, until now, this hour it has become like a tale that is told. It is prattled in the pulpit, it is chanted in the choir. The singers sing it, the preachers preach it; the orators extol it, the writers praise it. Yet the message falls upon the ears of the dead. The message is itself dead. It has become an unknown tongue which neither they that speak nor those that hear can understand. The words are the same, the sound is the same: but the sense is gone. It has become a sounding brass, a tinkling cymbal." Eternal is no longer everlasting; life is no more life. From words that are "quick and powerful and sharper than a two-edged sword" instinct with joy and full of glory; they are degraded into a mere meaningless formulary, like the mumbling of incantations of those who commune with the dead. O! wonderful, transformation. O! Tragedy of tragedies! Christ Jesus is slaughtered in the house of his friends. Who has done this? The hand of the ancient enemy is here; it is his work—alas! his masterpiece. From "Eden's Bowers" the siren song still lulls the hearts of those who transgress; still deceives the unwary and nullifies God's gracious gift. "Ye shall not surely die" brought death into our world, sustains and multiplies its ravages and by the horrid alchemy of hell transforms it into life.

"Rebellious Inventions Against God's Law."

In a late Sabbath Advocate, Eld. Rust writes under this pretentious headline. He says that a man by the name of Adams has written 198 inches, or just sixteen feet and a half in column width, in The Restitution, to relieve his crying conscience and enlighten a world sitting in darkness. And as this is my name I expect he means me. It seems that the Elder has run up against a solid rod of objections to the sabbath, and is confused, and has lost his balance, and has said hard things about the objector, such as, "Mr. Adams is an Antinomian, and believing that God now has no law which man is required to obey." Elder, why will you thus strain at a gnat and swallow a camel, and thus break the fourth commandment? Are you not guilty of all? Then he says, "Mr. Adams positively denies the most plainly expressed statements of the Bible namely, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Now, come Elder, be fair, I only deny your opinion, or construction of this Bible statement, that is all. How is your conscience, Elder Rust? Then this Elder says, "This writer says he has been on both sides of the question; this is another powerful reason for fearing him as being a safe guide * * * This again shows him as a very dangerously vacillating man to follow." I understand that the Elder himself has been on both sides of the question, and also other questions, I ask, is he a safe captain, or is he now a dangerous man to follow?" "This sounds much like the popular mad dog cry." You will remember that the Elder is trying to quiet the mind of a good sister who is bothered over some of those objections. She can see those objections, and so can the Elder both see and feel the force of them, as his pretentious effort plainly indicates. Hear what consolation he gives to this good Sister. "Well, there are many things that we do not understand, and perhaps never will." Isn't that an easy way out? Oh, what joy and comfort that little remedy has given many a poor troubled soul! One would naturally think that any theory that was susceptible to such a solid phalanx of objections—sixteen feet and a half long, "or one thousand and one," was to say the least a very objectionable theory. The Elder then tries to show a contradiction in the position that an angel wrote the ten precepts, and in the answer that God wrote them. As I have not that paper before me, I will venture to state this as my position, now and then. "That angels and not God the Father, spake and wrote the ten precepts, and that angel's name was God, for God's name was in him. And that angel spake the ten precepts with a great voice; also gave all the commandments to Moses, but not with a great voice. Read Acts vii. 53; Gal. iii. 19; Heb. ii. 2; Ex. xxiii. 20, 21. The Elder then treats us to an effusion of his legal ability, reminding us most forcibly of Paul's language to Timothy. From which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling. Winona Lake Excursions. Special Rates via Pennsylvania Lines for Winona Assembly.

Season excursion tickets to Winona Lake (formerly Eagle Lake, Ind.,) will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines on and after June 21st. The return limit will include Oct. 31st, allowing a season's sojourn at this delightful resort. Special low rate tickets, good returning fifteen days from date of sale, will also be sold during the months of June, July and August.

Winona Lake is the site of Winona Assembly, which affords notable opportunities for recreation, instruction, entertainment and devotion. The Assembly grounds, comprising over 200 acres, surround the Lake, a beautiful sheet of water near Warsaw, Ind., on the Fort Wayne Route. Many pretty cottages have been erected on the grounds, which are nicely shaded. The improvements include a fine park, bicycle track and ball ground, with a large amphitheater; an auditorium seating over 3,000 persons; college halls, hotel, restaurants, and supply stores. Rates for entertainment at the hotel and boarding houses will be found very reasonable. The fishing is fine, and the large fleet of row boats and steamers afford facilities for delightful boating. The summer school will be in session from July 20th to August 14th, in charge of Dr. John M. Coulter. In August a Bible Conference will be held under the direction of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. Well-known educators and lecturers will take part in the educational work. Time may be pleasantly and profitably passed at this pleasant resort, and body and mind invigorated by health-giving recreation and instructive entertainment.

For rates and information about train facilities apply to Ticket Agents of the Pennsylvania Lines, or address F. Van Dusen, Chief Assistant General Passenger Agent, Pittsburgh, Pa. For information concerning the Assembly address Rev. R. V. Hunter, Eagle Lake P. O., Ind.—July 30.

Books and Tract List.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL."

Thoughts and themes for Bible students, by Robert Ashcroft. This is a new work of 375 pages, containing a variety of lectures and short articles on important Bible subjects, exhibiting the revealed purpose of God concerning the earth and all its families, how we may come identified with those purposes, "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ" of all that God hath promised. It is believed the book will commend itself to the unprejudiced mind, and be useful in leading to a more perfect understanding of and love for the Scriptures of truth. Numerous testimonials of a very satisfactory character concerning the merits of the book have been received from prominent brethren scattered abroad, and which we can find no place for in this brief notice. Sent by mail, postpaid, on the receipt of $1.00. Address this office.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, with points for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 1-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conant," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in RESTITUTION, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the RESTITUTION of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Address, THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

Hesaias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 44.

1. And now unyest thou have heard, O Jakoob my child, and Israel whom I have chosen.

2. In this wise saith the Lord God who created thee and moulded thee from a womb; yet again will thy cry for help have been responded to: Fear not my child Jakoob, and Israel my beloved, whom I have chosen:

3. Because I am going to give water to those who are going their way in thirst in a place without water; I am going to place my spirit upon thy seed, and my blessings on thy offspring;

4. And they will spring up like grass in the midst of water and like a willow beside flowing water.

5. This one will say I am God's; and this one will call for help in the name of Jakoob, and another will inscribe with his hand, I am God's, and in the name of Israel will he cry for help.

6. In this wise saith God, the King of Israel, and the One who hath redeemed him, the God of Sabaoth, I am first and I am after these things: Besides me there is no God.

7. Who is even as am I? Let him stand and call and announce, and prepare for me from the time when I created man unto the animates-age; and let them declare unto you the coming things before they have come.

8. Do not hide nor cry; Have ye not marked them well from the beginning, and have I not declared them to you? Ye are my witnesses as to whether there is a God besides me; And they did not hearken then.

9. Those who were moulding and graving; they were all unprofitable; all who make the concepts of their minds which will not profit them; but they will have been put to shame.

10. Who mould a god and all those who grave unprofitable things.

11. And they all have withered back to that from which they came to pass, and all the senseless from men have been gathered together, and stood together and confounded and together put to shame.

12. Because a carpenter hath sharpened iron: He hath wrought it with a hewing-axe, and stood it with a gimlet, and wrought with the arm of his strength; and he will hunger and grow weak and cannot drink water.

13. A carpenter when he hath selected wood hath stood it by measure and fitted it together with glue, and made it like the form of a man, and like the beauty of a man to stand it, may comprehend that there is no God except me. I am the Lord God and there is no more.

7. I am he who prepared light and caused darkness, who causeth peace and produceth evil things; I the Lord God am he who causeth all these things.

8. May the heavens from above have rejoiced, and may the clouds have rained down righteousness: May the earth have sprung up and headed mercy and may it have sprung up with righteousness at the same time. I am the Lord who generated thee.

9. How much better than clay of a potter did I lift up? Will the ploughman plough all the day long? (not). Will the clay say to the potter, What art thou making, nor hast thou hands? because he is not working?

10. Shall the moulded thing have answered the one who moulded it? Is there one who saith unto his father, why wilt thou beget? And to his mother, why dost thou suffer birthpangs?

11. Because in this wise saith the Lord God, the Sacred One of Israel, the One who hath caused the things to come. May ye have asked me about my sons, and about the works of my hands may ye have commanded me.

12. I made the earth and man upon it; I stuid up the heavens; I commanded all the stars.

13. I have awakened him a King with righteousness, and all his ways are upright; He will build my city, and he will return the captivity of my laity; not with redemptive prices nor with votive-gifts, hath the Lord of Sabaoth said.

14. Thus saith the Lord of Sabaoth. Aiguptos hath toiled wearily and the commerce of Aithiopoi and the men of Sabaeim, high ones will cross over unto thee, and will be thy bondservants and will have followed after thee bound hand and foot and they will cross over unto thee and do thee homage, and in thee will they offer votive-prayers; Because in thee is God, and there is no God except thee.

15. For thou art God and we did not know it, the God, the Savior of Israel.

16. All who oppose him will have been put to shame and confounded, and they will go their way in shame. Renew yourselves unto me, ye islands.

17. Israel is being saved by the Lord with an eternal salvation: They will not have been put to shame nor shall they be confounded during the animatesage and still on.

18. In this wise saith the Lord who created the heavens: he is the God who demonstrated the earth and created it; He deliged it; not in vain did he create it, but to be inhabited did he mould it; I am the Lord, and there is none besides.

19. Not in secret have I talked nor in a dark place of the earth; I have not said unto the seed of Jakoob; Seek in vain; I am, I am the Lord who talketh righteousness and declareth truth.

20. May ye have been gathered together and may ye have come; May ye have taken counsel together, ye who are being saved from the nations. Those who exalt the wood of their own carving have not comprehended, and those who offer votive-prayers unto gods that do not save;

21. If they will declare, let them draw nigh, that they may have comprehended at the same time who hath caused these things to be heard from the beginning: Then was it told you, I am God and there is no other besides me, a justified One, and a Savior; There is no one except me.

22. May ye have turned unto me and ye will have been saved, ye from the furthest limit of the earth; I am God and there is no other.

23. By myself do I swear, righteousness will go forth from my mouth; my words will not be turned away—that every knee will bow, and every tongue will swear by God;

24. Saying, righteousness and glory will come unto him: and all those who set limitations to them (his people I think) will have been put to shame:

25. From the Lord will they have been justified, and in God will they have been glorified, all the seed of the sons of Israel.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all Things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 22, 1896. NUMBER 28.

Comment.

How the gospel rings out in this 44th chapter! Observe the significance of "Child Jakoob" and "Israel my beloved."

How could the assurance of the covenant promise be greater than in the third verse—last clause? "I am going to place my spirit upon thy seed and my blessings on thy offspring." See the different ways in which the recognition of the source of help is spoken of; but all to the glory of God.

If there is anything made specific in these 44th and 45th chapters it is the personal oneness and causal responsibility of God. Language is exhausted to emphasize and make this concept clear.

The absurdity of idolatry on the part of an intelligent human being could not be made to appear more absurd than in what is said here.

How could the rationale of it be made plainer than in the 13th verse?

In the light of revelations as brought out in the 20th verse there is still less excuse for Israel's idolatry, if such a thing be possible. Notwithstanding Israel's blindness though how assured is God's mercy as brought out in the 21-22-23-24-25-26-27-28 verses, which lead us up step by step to the instrumentality Kuros (Cyrus) to be used in the first restoration of the city and nationality and instruction given him in the first part of the 45th chapter. The latter part of the chapter is nothing if not Messianic. Kuros and Kurios both appear in this chapter as minor and major instrumentalities in God's hand to accomplish his purpose. The two words Kuros (Cyrus) and Kurios (Lord) have the same root source and differ only in the latter having the dominant i Consider God's argument here in the 8th and 9th verses of the 45th chapter, his argument for the ultimate triumph of righteousness in creation when his work is finished. The great trouble with theology and all the systems promulgated thus far is that they are partial views of God's character and work. "Now we see in part" God's perfections are always spoken of in the Scriptures as accomplished facts, even though we finite creatures cannot see that they have been begun. How long apparently has it taken theology to apprehend that in God's plan and purpose it takes the first and last Adam both to make the perfected man and that all the intermediate humanity was a part of the great plastic purpose being worked out in God's studio of Creation.

Notice the cut-mark in evidence here in this 45th chapter, 9th verse—"Will the ploughman plough all day long"—is the same thought as found in the 28th chapter, 24th verse—an cut-mark in evidence of the "One Isaiah." Also the cut-mark of "the potter and the clay" illustration introduced earlier in this book, used here also in this chapter.

Again observe carefully the argument of the 12th and 13th verses. Is the entirety of the statement and the prophecy here fulfilled in Cyrus? Were "all his ways upright?" How much of a "captivity" did Cyrus return? Still more, is the statement and prophecy of the 15th and 16th verses fulfilled in Cyrus? "For thou art God and we did not know it, the God, the Savior of Israel." Was this salvation of Cyrus, the "eternal salvation" of the 17th verse? Do you believe the prophecy of the 18th verse? "Not in vain did he create it; but to be inhabited did he mould it."

How does this statement agree with the general conflagration theory and the transportation of humanity as "ghosts" to some heavenly place elsewhere?

"May ye have taken counsel together" of the 20th verse is what we are trying to do in this work of translation and comment. And we would not be of the number referred to in the 24th verse "who set limitations."

See how exactly the statement of the 25th verse agrees with what Paul says about "justification" in Romans.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Spirit.

Editor Restitution:

With your permission I would like to exchange a few thoughts with Bro. Adams on the above subject. I am glad to see that you allow a little discussion once in a while, and I think it would be as interesting and instructive as a love-feast. Some of the brethren found fault with your action not allowing a friendly discussion, but I am glad to see you so liberal, and I will prove to you that I am glad, some time in the future, as the only way you can test a man is by his works.

Now, Bro. Adams, you seem from your language to say that I don't know much about the Bible, or I would not use ghost and spirit as synonymous. Now, Brother, we know that ghost and spirit were not synonymous before we ever saw Nebraska or you. I did not ask you to write an article on my ignorance, I only asked you to prove by the Bible or demonstrate that you had the spirit generally understood by common people to be the Holy Ghost or Spirit, and are used interchangeably in the Bible. C. V. 1st you prove it, or demonstrate it? If you did I failed to see it, and I believe you know better, as you used to preach straight goods and that the Bible was our only guide. Better leave this delusion and get back and do the first works, lest your candlestick be removed. You refer us to Eph. i. 13, 14 to try to prove that you have the spirit. Why not read the 10th verse and get the context. You seem to be a stickler for this rule. Why not stick to it. I think when you read the 10th verse, if you are honest, that you will see that Paul here has his mind on the kingdom, and uses past and present tense for future, as his rule generally is—speaks of things as though they were when they are still in the future. Acts ii. 39, is the next quotation you give to prove the presence of the spirit in this day and age. Read the context here also and see if Peter had not his mind on the kingdom. We don't doubt but the people or at least a favored few of them got the Spirit. Did they not demonstrate that they had it? Can you? We say that the Spirit was given in the times of the apostles, but we challenge the proof of the Spirit operating on any one since the death of the apostles. If you have proof, why not produce it? I will accept it as fast as I did the truth from your preaching, and I was one among the first that did accept it. It did not take me a month either to see the dividing line between truth and error, but I prove all things. I don't accept because some one else does.

Two quotations are all that you give us as proof. Two quotations are too little for such a big article. Was you afraid to give us any more? You start in with your own wisdom and say after we have done all that the Bible requires us to do and brought to the point where we can cry, Abba Father, and then put your own construction on it, and apply it in the present tense, when Paul that had the Spirit applies it in the future. For proof see Rom. viii. 23. I am surprised at you, Brother, trying to make out that you have done all that the Bible requires us to do. Would to God I could say so conscientiously, I would feel like I had the Holy Ghost. You say the Bible tells us how we can please God. Well, if we please God, what then is lacking? Enoch pleased God, and as a reward for that God took him. Then you say if we have not got the Spirit there is something wrong. Now, if we can please God by following the teaching of the Bible, then tell me what need you have for the Spirit, or what part would the Spirit perform. You deny the Spirit being dispensed on. Then Brother, please tell us what it is. Christ got the Spirit at baptism in the shape of a dove, antitype of the dove in the ark. Did you get it at baptism or when? The apostles got it at Pentecost. Did any get it besides the apostles? You might as well argue that you could tread on serpents, drink poison, etc., as to make these applications to the present age. The New Testament was not written in the days of the apostles. Therefore they had need of a helper or spirit. We have all that the Spirit said, and did, in those days in the shape of a New Testament or Spirit. Therefore, we have no need of a spirit to teach us. The Bible is all sufficient if we follow it. Before the flood the Spirit was given to a select few, they were to be examples and guides for the rest in the times of Moses. The same when the great Prophet came, it was given to a chosen few to guide the masses, as we have the record of all the progress, and since the voice was heard in the temple at Jerusalem, saying, "let us go hence." There has been no spirit since, nor will there be till the birth at the resurrection. Now, Brother, don't hide behind my ignorance but come out and tell us when you got the Spirit, and give us chapter and verse where it operated on any since the death of the apostles. Also tell us in what way you can prove your position. We are after truth not theories.

Yours for the truth.

J. W. GAMBLE.

[Personality should be left out in writing an article. Argument is all right. Be careful to wound the feelings of none.—ED.]

Unitarianism in Scotland and England.

The Christian of London, England says, "Rev. Robert Spears, an influential Unitarian minister, had some unpalatable facts to lay before the Unitarian Association at the May meeting. He had to say that where as there were 170 churches in 1800, and 320 in 1850, and 378 in 1888, there are only, 354 this year (1896).

In Scotland Unitarianism is aided by a large bequest made for its propagation, and yet the seven churches which represented it in 1850 have only increased by one in forty-six years.

The Christian carried [illegible] some Unitarians boast that they do not grow by making separate congregations, but by silently spreading their views among the orthodox churches and that in this assertion there is "too much truth." "The fact is, it (Unitarianism) is not a faith but a negation, a denial of the very truths which in all ages have given the church power to conquer. "Unitarianism it seems to us, tends to the whittling away of the value of the Bible, the befitting of Christ, and the emptying Christianity of the specialities it does assuredly possess."

The same kind of process is carried on with regard to the person of our Lord and the special features of the gospels, and with the result that congregations are dissolved. The soul of man needs and will have a Divine Savior and a supernatural gospel."

Let the reader note the words, "silently spreading their views."

1 John i. 7. "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist."

2 Peter ii. 1, 2. "There shall be false teachers among you, who shall privily bring in destructive heresies [margin sects of perdition] denying even the Sovereign Lord (despotes) who bought them, bringing upon themselves swift destruction."

1 John iv. 15 "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God abideth in him, and he in God." 2 Jno. i. 9. "Whosoever goeth onward [margin taketh the lead] and abideth not in the teaching of Christ hath not God; he that abideth in the teaching, the same hath both the Father and the Son. If any one cometh unto you and bringeth not his teaching, receive him not into your house, and give him no greeting; for he that giveth him greeting partaketh of his evil works."

In spite of all preventions mistakes will occur as to what the views and teaching of any body of believers may be. "I heard one of your preachers say so and so." is a frequent remark. What care, then, should be exercised indefinitely ascertaining the views of those licensed to represent those they are affiliated with, and thus to a certain extent, made responsible for their utterances either to the credit or discredit of the body sending them forth!

WM. T. BAKER.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the reorganization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisite to the forgiveness of sins and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

EDITORIAL STAFF,
Directors of the C. P. Association.

M. JOBLIN, Corresponding Editor.

PLYMOUTH, IND. JULY 22, 1896.

WE have not received the copy for Smith-Wilson discussion.

READER, if you will make it a rule to understand the parts of the Divine Record in harmony with the Purpose of the whole you will make rapid progress, and be saved the task of unlearning every little while.—try it.

AT the present time it looks as if the Powers of Europe were never so jealous of each other; and it looks as if the hatred of England by the continental powers would shortly culminate in an attempt to humble her.

ANOTHER name was added to the list kept on record in the "Lamb's Book of Life," on Sunday, July 21, 1896. Finney McCrory, a young lady made the good confession, and by Brother J. L. Winee was buried in baptism. The Church at Plymouth welcome her, and our prayer is that she will continue strong in the faith, and that she may receive the best of all gifts, "Eternal Life."

THAT article on "Stability" in the last number has the ring of the right metal. We wish the Editor would place it on a side galley and mark it "fire matter," and insert it again every little while. H. T. B. is evidently aiming to be one of the faithful watchmen. They are greatly needed now. Brethren and Sisters—We mean you who hold that only God's truth sanctifies and saves—let the warning notes ring out, and God will bless you.

MR. GLADSTONE'S opinion of the Turkish government is not a very flattering one. He says: "My opinion of the Turkish government as now exhibited to the world, is that it is the greatest scourge to mankind, and the greatest scandal and disgrace to religion, including the religion of Mahomet, to be found on the face of the earth." Distress is increasing in all the Anatolian districts: 400,000 need help in seed, corn, oxen, bread and clothing.

DR. JOHN EADIE says, "The words 'my soul' mean merely 'myself.' It is obvious that the argument based upon it, that Christ's soul went to sheol, and his body to the grave, has no foundation. The Hebrew does not warrant this distinction. Christ's soul, in such an idiom, is his entire person. Now, what is meant by sheol (Greek, Hades)? It is explained in the second clause. It is the place where corruption is to be seen, the region of the dead. So the Apostle understood it. Though he was to die, death's power was to be very limited. He was not to be abandoned to its dark dominion."

WE have intelligence from Crete, by way of London July 14, to the effect that all the members of the Christian and Mussulman members of the Assembly had arrived at Canea. The resolution demanding the annihilation of the Halepar convention will, it is said, be submitted by the Christians for the consideration of the Assembly without delay. The Mussulmans are bitterly opposed, during the negotiations, to permitting the insurgents to remain armed. It is reported that if the porte refuses to make the concessions demanded hostilities will be resumed. The Turks are arming the native Mussulmen and bloody work is expected.

To the Great Joy of the household of faith in Cleveland another trusting soul took upon her the saving name on Sunday, July 12. After the breaking of bread a number of earnest addresses were made by way of welcoming the new sister, and urging her to watchfulness, prayerfulness, study of the Scriptures and earnest work for God and truth while probation lasts. Our New Sister Ullman was a member of the Lutheran Body before she heard the joyful sound of the gospel life from the dead to inherit God's kingdom. Our fervent prayer is that she may adorn the doctrine of the Anointed till he appears for those who are his, or to the end of life's journey. We expect to bury others shortly

A PARAGRAPH in Glad Tidings says Russia is quietly attaining her ends by diplomacy. She has made friends with Bulgaria, and has taken Turkey under her wing. Nothing can now stop her from fulfilling her destiny and the attainment of Peter the Great's will, viz.: The possession of Constantinople. We look for this being accomplished in the near future. When this takes place, the great war will commence, the greatness of which, and its results on the human race are fully portrayed in the prophecies of Ezekiel and others. It is sufficient to say that ere it is over, the Lord Jesus will appear on the scene, to take to himself his great power and glory, and reign speedily.—he will make the nations feel his power, for he will rule them with a rod of iron, and destroy those who destroy others.

"MEN have been for ages working on the surface of things, trying to improve relations between man and man, and to bring about a better state in the earth. But to the thoughtful it will be apparent that any real remedy must apply to the cause instead of the result. The cause of all the envy, hatred, malice, uncharitableness, war and bloodshed in the earth is in the rebellion of man against the just and equal control of his Maker. It is necessary therefore, that we be at peace with God. But in order that this may be achieved, it is necessary that we remember that the cause of estrangement lies on our side. It is therefore needful that we submit to the kingship and authority of our God."

The Question Drawer.

The question is asked us: "What does the words sprinkling in the blood of Jesus Christ" mean? The language is addressed to those elected according to the foreknowledge of God the Father. Now as to the means of their election. On what principle had they been elected? How had the foreknowledge of God caused him to arrange for their election? The answer is, "Through sanctification of the spirit:" That is through their separation from the mass of mankind by the spirit. How did the spirit effect this separation, or divide them from the rest of the people? We find the answer in John xvii. 17, where Jesus prays in behalf of his disciples, "Sanctify them through thy truth.—thy Word is truth." Or more exactly, as in the Diaglott, "Sanctify them in thy truth, thy word is the truth;" that is, the sanctifying agency the separating power: we know of no other. The positive proof of this is furnished in the preceding verses. In the 8th verse Jesus says, "Because I have given to thee the words which thou hast given to me, and they received and knew truly that I came out from thee, and believed that thou didst send me." Again in verse 14 he says—"I have given thy word to them, and the [consequence was] the world hated them, because they are not of the world, as I am not of the world." And so the line is distinctly drawn by the truth: the truth separates from the world, sanctifies, sets them apart for God, elects them. And what is the result? What does this lead to? It leads to obedience. "Unto obedience," is the reading of the Common Version.—"In order to obedience," the reading of the Diaglott, and the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." The first act of obedience to the Word of truth given by the spirit is immersion into the Anointed Jesus. That, [presupposing heart-belief and heart-obedience] secured pardon of the past,—a righteous standing before God, and a title to an incorruptible inheritance: and a living hope, see verses 3 and 1. But here the questioner would like to know why, or for what purpose those whose sins are remitted are said to be sprinkled with the blood of Jesus Christ? What need is there of sprinkling after a burial with Christ?

We suggest first, That as the immersed believer never really comes in contact with a drop of the blood of Jesus Christ, the sprinkling is not real, and one must look elsewhere for the reason of the employment of this phrase. When Israel was brought into the bonds of the first covenant, it was on this wise: An altar of earth was made unto God, whereon to offer sacrifice; an altar of unhewn stone was built, see Ex. xx. 24, 25. Besides this, twelve pillars, one for each tribe of Israel were erected. We understand that the unhewn altar represented God, and the pillars represented the people. Moses took half of the blood of the peace-offerings and sprinkled it on the altar. Then he took the book of the covenant and read it to the people; and they answered: "All that the Lord hath said, we will do, and be obedient." Moses then sprinkled the people, with the other half of the blood, and then the agreement between God and them went into effect—both parties were bound by it. We think this explains why we read of sprinkling of blood of Jesus in 1 Pet. i. 2. It shows that the believer has heard, believed, and complied with the conditions exacted of him and is brought into the bonds of the new covenant. That then and there the blood of that covenant shed by Jesus the Anointed, is applied to him, and he is bound to God. This seems to us to be the simple truth in the case, and reference to Heb. x. 22, we think, will tend to confirm what we have said. We there read of hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience; that is one thing: our bodies washed with pure water, another. The latter is our voluntary act of obedience,—the former is the work of the Spirit, through appointed means, if we get the mind of the Spirit here. And in Heb. xii. 24, we read of Jesus as the Mediator of the new covenant, and of the blood of sprinkling that speaks something better than Abel. We see no conflict between body washing in obedience to faith, and heart-sprinkling from an evil conscience.

The Trial of Faith.

The first chapter of 1 Peter is a precious portion of the Spirit's Word. It is packed full of precious uplifting, comforting truths. After the address and greetings, the buoyancy of his hope makes the apostle fairly run over. Says he, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." To what hope had they been begotten? He proceeds to say: "To an inheritance, incorruptible, and undefiled, and unfading, preserved in the heavens for you." This is taken as proof by the religious world that heaven is their home. Of course we have gotten a long way just that notion, and should have a ready answer to all who make the claim. It does not here mean that the landed inheritance deeded to Abraham and his Seed, the Christ, is in heaven. It is what Paul speaks of as a building of God, a house not made with hands, that he and his brethren expected to be clothed with. It is expressed in other words in Col. iii. 3, where it says: "Our life is hid with Christ in God, and when he who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." All deeds to real estate have to be recorded at the court house; they are preserved and recorded there; and Christ our life holds our Eternal Life in trust for every overcomer. It is reserved in him, "in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time; wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now, for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations." For what purpose are we thus assailed? Why that "the trial of our faith, being much more precious than gold that perishes, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." The Diaglott reads: "The proof of your faith," that is, the test, —faith verified by trial, that is.

In the Old Testament the proof or trial of faith is frequently compared to the trial of gold by the process of smelting, or refining by fire. In Job xxiii. 10 we find the patriarch saying, —and it is a precious text, as showing the utmost confidence in God his Father. He was in deep affliction, and had been crying out, O that I knew where I might find him that I might come even to his seat.....Will he plead against me with his great power?" No! "But he would put strength in me:" that is, to enable him to bear what he may not see fit to remove. Yes, He "would put strength in me." Would to God that with all our superior advantages and privileges we could ever say with Job in dark and trying hours, "He will put strength in me."

In the next two verses he is somewhat sad because it seems as if God had hid himself from him so that he could not see him. But Job immediately recovers himself, and utter the precious words all God's children should be familiar with with: "But he knoweth the way I take; when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." What child-like trust! What a heavenly, submissive spirit? In Psa. lxvi. 10 the Psalmist says, "For thou O God has proved us; thou hast tried us as silver is tried; thou broughtest us into the net; thou laidest affliction upon our loins; thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and through water; but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place."

In Mal. iii. 2 we read, "But who may abide the day of his coming? And who shall stand when he appeareth? For he is like a refiner's fire, and like a fuller's soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver. It is said that the refiner sits and watches the molten metal till he sees himself reflected in it. Can it be that the Lord employs this figuratively, to show us that his chastening is with a view of teaching us that his chastening is for the purpose of producing his moral likeness in us. We think it is just for this purpose.

Gold is the most precious metal, but faith in God's promises is far more precious than gold. As gold is tried, proved and refined by fire so faith is refined by temptations. As the heat of fire separates dross from gold, so all alloy must be separated from faith. It is well to remember that the Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering; well to remember that we have enlisted to suffer with him, and to fill up what of his sufferings still remain. We must know the fellowship of his sufferings. The cross precedes the crown. We must expect to find sorrow and affliction. We are notified that tribulation is our lot in this world; but in the Anointed we have peace. It is well to remember that the great Physician has thoroughly diagnosed our case, and knows exactly what medicine we need. Let us all resolve and carry out the resolution, not to prescribe and take our own medicine. If we do, it will certainly neutralize his. Let us feel safe in his hands, and ever say with Job, "He knoweth the way I take." Job followed directions, as we take it, and in perfect confidence of a successful issue, says: "When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." Let us heed the admonition of v. 13, and having girded up the loins of our minds, and being vigilant hope to the end for the gift to be brought to us at the revelation of Christ Jesus.

Signs of the Times.

"For the powers of heaven shall be shaken." Luke xxi. 26.

This is the last one of the signs of the near coming of the Lord. It is given as the reason why men's hearts would fail them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. What is meant by the powers of heavens being shaken? Does it not mean the mighty forces of the atmospheric heaven as shown in the terrible cyclones that have destroyed so many lives and homes? The Greek word translated power is Dynamite. It is that on a largescale. The words that follow next after this sign are, and "then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory." "And when these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." The great price of redemption was paid at the first advent,—at the second redemption will be gained by all who comply with the conditions.

But what will be redeemed? Let the inspired apostle answer. Rom. viii. 23. He says, "We groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of our body, for we are saved by hope." Here redemption and salvation are made identical, and both at the resurrection of the just. Good reason for "lifting up the head." "So, likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

When the 7th trump shall sound, "the kingdoms of this world (and the republics too will become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.") Rev. xi. 15. If the kingdoms of this world are literal, then we should pray for a literal kingdom to come. The next verse after the signs that "show the kingdom nigh at hand" is a statement that has troubled many and is used as an argument strong by those who oppose the near advent, or any future advent.

"Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." I have turned to the Greek Lexicon and find that the word translated thus, before generation, is a demonstrative pronoun and means this or that. That generation, that see the signs spoken of, would not "pass away till all be fulfilled." This passage is the main argument of an increasing number of D. Ds. who say that Jesus will never come either before or after the Millennium. I saw a notice that a man who was formerly president of a college, Pastor of an orthodox church, etc., would read a paper at the ministers meeting on the "Second Advent." He said over and over again Jesus would never come again. And some score of ministers clapped their hands in warm approval. But this denial is in the face and eyes of many plain Scriptures. He said all the resurrection that will ever be is at death.—that God will have a spiritual body ready for him at death. Jesus said unto Martha, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live, the same man that was dead, live again, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." John xi. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up and a cloud received him out of their sight. As they were gazing up into heaven, two angels were sent to tell them that the same Jesus which is taken up into heaven shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven. Did these angels lie? Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them who look for him shall he appear the second time without sin, unto salvation, which cannot be gained until that appearing. Heb. ix. 28. He writes to Timothy that he expects a crown and it will be given to all who love his appearing.

How are we to know?

The brethren have been invited to call for the services of Evangelists with their tents this summer, as usual: but the question has suggested itself "How are we to tell whom it will be safe to invite to any particular locality?"

There are tents and parties in the field under the control of Josephism to a certain extent. That is, a tent or party of Evangelists may be under the direction of a committee partially, or perhaps mainly composed of, or peculiarly dominated by those denying that our Lord Jesus Christ was the only-begotten Son of God, and maintain that his parentage was wholly human.

Will not such a committee choose Evangelists who either hold these views or agree to be silent on the subject?

As between them and their fellowmen and themselves they have a right to employ and pay whom they will; but brethren urged to invite them to their localities have a right to know whether they are fighting under the Christian, or Anti-christian Unitarian flag.

These are not the days for tolerating "Mr. facing both—ways."

A great political party has lately in its National Convention deliberately repudiated the one mediator between God and man by inviting one who belongs to the people who crucified him to offer a prayer for guidance in the deliberations in which that name which is above every name was ignored, and the prayer applauded; and the nominee of that convention, himself a member of a Protestant denomination, accepted the nomination. With increasing frequency do we witness the same ignoring of our Savior in Protestant pulpits, without a protest on this point by the people, who seem to be callous on the subject.

Again we ask, "How can we tell who to invite?"

Report of Labor.

Dear Restitution:

I have been working a new field of labor near Logansport, Ind. At the last meeting held there (first Sunday in July) two obeyed the law of pardon. In the presence of a few witnesses husband and wife were buried in the baptismal tomb, and assisted to rise as we trust to walk in newness of life. Beautiful symbol! glorious type! Burial and resurrection of the Master to eternal life. Man's life forfeited by sin, death symbolically suffered by dying to sin, the "old man (body of sin) crucified. Sin pardoned, a new life began. How beautiful. Others almost persuaded. I think they will obey at the next meeting. The interest is good, and the opposition as usual is strong, but the objections have been met and we hope to press the claims of the truth with all the energy we possess. Our motto is and has been "no compromise with false teaching." Insisting upon a belief of the gospel and obedience to the law of pardon as being essential to salvation. No salvation through sincerity in belief of error. Yours in the belief of an unperverted gospel.

We live for the good of others if our living be in any sense true living. It is not in great deeds of kindness only that the blessing is found. In "little deeds of kindness," repeated every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the street, at the neighbor's house, in the play-ground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness.

The Frigate-Bird of Brazil.

(To hyphenate-quillen.)

Santa Barbara is the largest island of the Abrolhos, a small group off the Brazilian coast, midway between Bahia and Rio Janeiro. At its southwestern extremity is a little isle, whitened by bird-lime and bones, called "O Cemiterio," from the strange, pathetic fact, as we are assured, that the pirate-birds of the vicinity invariably resorted to this sepulchral-looking spot on the approach of death, and that the islet was strewn with their bones. "At low water one day," says Prof. C. F. Hartt, the geologist, "I visited the cemetery," and found such to be actually the case. There were the remains of hundreds of these birds, some recently dead, but the most of the skeletons were desiccated and bleached. Nowhere else did I see a dead frigate-bird, and it would seem that for generation after generation they had gone to "O Cemiterio" to die."

Lone frigate-bird, thou'rt coming o'er the deep,
Through sunset glow, to quiet isle asleep.
To a paradise where all thy kindred lie,
Thou'rt coming now, e'ermore to die!

For best thou toiled, but now, thy duty done,
Rest to thy eyes, brave bird, at set of sun.
Thou'rt coming on, with instinct of the heart,
To meet in death the partners of thy mirth.

So would I go, life's service all complete,
In faith and love, trusting Christ's summons, sweet,
Gathered to him as child to mother's breast:
"Come ye to me and I will give you rest."

Selected.

Life—What is it?

"For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." James iv. 14.

There has been much said and written about life, which is mere theory or opinion, and not built on facts. This is of course of little value. As human beings we know that we live, and that we are in the midst of life. We also know that there are various kinds of life—vegetable life, insect life, animal and human life. The life of each one had a beginning. All are of the earth and composed of inert matter. It is inert or non-living until some outside force acts upon it. It has no inherent life. Each plant, insect, or animal may be finely organized, showing infinite skill and power in its formation, and yet be devoid of life. The power that made each form organized it with reference to life, and for the propagation or continuance of its species. The source of life to all living things is the Great Self-Existent. "He giveth to all life, and breath and all things;" "in him we live and move and have our being." Acts xvii. 25, 28.

Man has been constituted lord of the earth, and all things upon it. His organism places him far above all other forms of life which surround him. He possesses not only animal life, but intellectual endowments, moral sentiments, and spiritual capabilities. Man's exalted position as lord of creation, and his great intellectual powers, have puffed him up, so that he has become vain in his imaginations. He thinks that he is a demi-god—a part of the divine essence—and as divinity cannot die, therefore the life which he now has, which has been given him by Deity, he presumes will somehow be continued after the death of the body. This vain conceit is thus expressed by the poet—

"The sun is but a spark of fire,
A transient meteor in the sky,
The soul immortal as its Sire,
Shall never die."

The soul or life, though given by Deity, is not necessarily immortal. Man may manifest intellectual powers which may appear godlike in their character, but they do not confer endless life. When Adam was created he was a perfect being, but he was not immortal. He was placed in such circumstances, however, that he could perpetuate his existence indefinitely by having access to the tree of life. But being placed under law by his Creator, he transgressed, and the sentence of death was incurred. He was driven out of paradise, where the life-giving tree was planted, and consequently when sin was finished it brought forth death. James i. 15. "The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. The sentence the Creator pronounced upon Adam was—"dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This was a dissolution of his entire organism. Solomon, when speaking of the end of man, says, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit (breath) to God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 7; Gen. ii. 7; iii. 19.

Adam being cut off from the tree of life, in course of time died, and returned to the ground from which he was taken. His posterity were born in his likeness, and possessed his nature. He was mortal, and consequently he could only give them a nature subject to death. "In Adam all die." The high moral and mental endowments of mankind, though infinitely above what are possessed by the animal creation, yet they do not prevent death to give immortal life. In this respect man has no superiority over the beast; "as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath;.....all go unto one place; all turn to dust again." Eccl. iii. 19, 28. Since, then, that man is mortal, he cannot live forever while under the law of sin and death. If he should ever attain an immortal existence it must come from some outside source. The question asked by Job,—"If a man die, shall he live again?"—is very important, and comes with great force to every one. The present life is transient, only a shadow—a vapor which appeareth for a short time—and at best is very unsatisfactory. Apparently, death ends all. Nature, science, philosophy, and every day experience do not solve the problem. Revelation alone can do it. The Bible reveals the future. It tells us that God, our Creator, in his infinite mercy and goodness has made it possible for mortal man to obtain immortality. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16. This future life is given only through the Son of God." "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi. 23. Death comes to us through Adam—eternal life only through Christ.

It is revealed in the Bible, that God has chosen and appointed his Son Jesus to become the head of a new race. Hence he is called "the second Adam—the Lord from heaven." The germs of this new life come from incorruptible seed sown into good and honest hearts—called "the word of the kingdom," "the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever" and "which by the gospel is preached unto you." Matt. xiii. 19; 1 Pet. i. 23-25. "The word of the truth of the gospel" is the seed by which this new race are begotten. Paul said to the Christians at Corinth, "In Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." The apostle was the chosen instrument to sow his seed, or the knowledge of the gospel among the Gentiles. He made known to them the "unsearchable riches of Christ," which was contained in the gospel. He was not ashamed to preach "Christ and him crucified," or "the kingdom of God," and to teach these things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. This gospel has a spiritual force in it, and quickens men who are dead in trespasses and sins who, it is received and cherished, it reforms men, and makes them into new creatures in Christ Jesus. They live a new life—"old things are passed away, and behold, all things are become new." Individuals thus begotten are children of God; "and if children, then heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." The apostle Paul wrote to the church in Galatia,—"Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." Natural or fleshly men become children of God according to the spiritual law of regeneration.

First. Belief of the gospel concerning "the kingdom of God, and the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ."

Second, Repentance toward God, thinking with God, or ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well.

Third, Immersion in water into Christ, for the remission of sins, or being born of water. See Acts xxviii. 31; viii. 12; xxxi. 20; iii. 19; ii. 38; Luke xxiv. 47; John iii. 5.

Fourth, Then a patient continuance in well-doing, seeking for glory, honor, and incorruptibility will secure eternal life and the kingdom of God, by a resurrection from the dead; Rom. ii. 7; 2 Pet. i. 5–11. This process of evolution,—taking a fleshly son of Adam and transforming him into a son of God—is revealed only in the Bible. The plan has been "made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and brought life and incorruptibility to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10.

This is the only true philosophy of a future life. The theologians and philosophers of the present day believe and teach with Socrates the dual nature of man, and the immortality of the soul. The Bible teaches the mortality of man, and that immortality is given conditionally. Jesus is the bread of life. Bread is eaten in order to sustain life; so Jesus must be appreheuded by faith to be the Son of God, the Savior of the world. "This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." John xvii. 3. "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved" or have life. John iii. 17. Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." John v. 40. Again he says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." John v. 24. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36. This eternal life is future though spoken of as present. It is a matter of promise, and therefore of hope. Jesus promises it to all his sheep. John x. 26, 28. And he says that it is the Father's will that all who believe on him may have everlasting life, and therefore he promises to raise them up at the last day. John vi. 40. Thus we see that in order to possess eternal life this corruptible body shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality, by a resurrection or an equivalent change. Jesus Haimed resurrection power, and he proved it at the grave of Lazarus. He said on that occasion, "I am the resurrection and the life." And since then he has said, "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore, and have the keys of hades and death." Rev. i. 18.—H. Wilson.

The world's Great Want.

Oppression and corruption among the powers that be, has of late years become so great, that the people have resorted to almost all kinds of government, until change and revolution have become the order of the day, and all to no purpose. Experience proves the people are incapable of self-government, but God has designed a government and king, even David's throne restored, and Jesus, the Anointed One will occupy it, and with the resurrected and changed saints, will govern this world in righteousness, under whose rule, war, slavery, intemperance, and vice of every kind will be done away. The earth will be crowned with gladness, and peace and plenty will be the people's blessing, when with improved health, prolonged life, enlarged intelligence, and taught by the saints, they will so cultivate the earth, that want will soon become a stranger. If the people really understood their best interests, there would be one universal cry, "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done, on earth as in heaven," but whether they pray so or not, these grand events are right upon us. Nothing in God's Word is more positively or plainly taught. The coming and Kingdom of Jesus, was the theme of the prophets, the song of the sweet singers of Israel, the message of the angels, the enquiry of the wise men, the subject of the transfiguration, the watchword of the apostles, the message to John on the isle, in which he that overcometh is promised rulership with Jesus when he comes, (for this honor hath all the saints). In view of these mighty events, where should the man of faith be found? When he stands with Abraham on the Mount, comprehending the designs of God, and realizes that if faithful, he shall be made immortal, his powers of knowledge and enjoyment enlarged beyond description, and associated with Jesus and the saints, heir to all God promised the fathers, and to have to teach, assist, and do his bidding, those grand old angels that were with and instructed Adam in the garden, and have been all down through the prophetic and apostolic days God's messengers of information and mercy, and will be the grand body guard of Jesus when he comes again. When with Jesus as King, the saints as nobility, the angels as executive officers, the whole world the territory, the pleasing and glorious occupation will be for a thousand years, to convert this world, to bring it back 'to its Edenic state, when "the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the whole earth. Oh! what a grand enterprise the saint of God is engaged in. Filled with the faith, he is filled with the spirit of God, and will of necessity, act God-like. He can't stoop to dabble in politics, to jockey in trade, to cheat in weight or measure, to slander or misrepresent in word or act. He loves the Faith and those of the Faith; he has no selfish crotchets to divide the brotherhood. No, no, wherever he meets one who has the great essential idea of the Faith, and has obeyed from the heart, and is living unspotted from the world, he fellowships him as brother, leaving non-important details to the winds, choosing rather to help unite and save, and in order that the Great King may soon come, is helping to finish up the "taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name."—D. S. M.

Thoughts for Thinkers.

1. Is the soul a part of God, or a part of man?

2. If it is a part of God, can it sin?

3. If it is a part of man, is it not mortal, and subject to death?

4. Is there any intimation in the Bible that God put (what is technically called) an immortal soul into the first man, at his creation?

5. As Adam was made of the "dust," is it not said, that this man of dust "became a living soul," and not an immortal soul.

6. If the soul is an immortal or spiritual thing, must it not die a spiritual death? seeing that the Scriptures say, "the soul that sinneth it shall die."

7. As nothing can die except what is mortal, if the soul dies a spiritual death, must it be spiritually mortal?

8. If the soul is a spiritual thing, and immortal, it must have spiritual immortality; how then can it die a spiritual death?

9. If literal death destroys a literal thing, must not spiritual death destroy a spiritual thing?

10. How could David say, "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave," if the grave has no dominion over the soul?

11. If the soul is the conscious and responsible part, how is it that, by repentance, it escapes to paradise at death, and leaves the innocent body to suffer the penalty?

12. If the righteous go to glory at death, did not the serpent speak the truth? Gen. iii. 4.

13. If God spoke the truth, does not that which he calls the soul return to dust?

14. But if that (which man calls the soul) does not surely die, did not the serpent speak the truth?

15. How can the clergy say that "modern spiritualism" is of the devil?—do they intend to say that HE (the devil) is proving the immortality of the soul, which they have long tried to do, but always failed?

A Wonderful Work.

Many authors have appeared in the world. Their various productions are innumerable, like the stars. And of making many books there is no end. But it is a fact worthy of everlasting remembrance, that the great God himself has condescended to furnish us with a work of which he is the author, a work which he wrote with his own finger, "two tables of testimony, tables of stone written with the finger of God." Ex. xxxi. 18.

It is a very small book, and yet comprises more than all others. "I have seen an end of all perfection: but thy commandment is exceeding broad." Psa. cxix. 96. It is so perfect a work that without the proper understanding and acceptance of it, all other books, the Bible not excepted, are of no real value to us. Without it, we would not inquire after the Savior or the gospel, for "they that be whole need not a physician," and "by the law is the knowledge of sin." Jesus has left us no such personal writing. How vastly important must these ten commandments be, which God thought best thus to execute with his own hand. It is his holy will that the same shall be written in living characters in the heart (mind of affections) of all those who belong to his kingdom. Jesus himself is thus distinguished: "I delight to do thy will, O my God! yea, thy law is within my heart." Psa. xl. 8. So, likewise, the righteous, who shall inherit the new earth, will submit to this divine law, will obtain a live copy of it by the Spirit of God in their heart. "The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment. The law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps shall slide." Psa. xxxvii. 30, 31. For this object, indeed, was the divine Teacher sent from heaven: "That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Rom. viii. 4. Six hundred thousand men were witnesses when the divine Law-giver with his own voice publicly proclaimed this royal law. And after a space of more than three thousand years, their prosperity is still preserved, scattered over the earth, and everywhere willing to testify to the divine origin of this holy work. And not only they, but also all those servants of God who "delight in the law of God after the inward man" have testified, and do testify, that "the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." And they know by experience whereof they affirm. Let us, then, "hear the conclusion of the whole matter. "Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the duty of man." Eccl. xii. 13.—Advent Review.

Making Matches.

The operation of making matches from a pine log may be divided into four heads, namely: Preparing the splints, dipping the matches, box-making and filling. When the timber is brought into the cutting-room of the factory it is seized upon by a gang of men, who place it before a circular saw, where it is cut into blocks fifteen inches long, which is the length of seven matches. It is then freed of its bark, and taken to the turning lathe, which by means of a special form of fixed cutting blade and running its entire length, a continuous cord, the thickness of the match is cut off.

As the block revolves and decreases in diameter the knife advances and a brand of veneer of uniform thickness obtained. As the veneer rolls off it is met by eight small knives which cut it into seven separate bands, each the size of a match. By this one operation seven long ribbons of wood, each the length and thickness of a match are obtained. These are then broken into pieces six feet long, the knotty parts removed, and they are then fed into a machine, which acts like a straw chopper, which cuts them into single matches.

This machine cuts 150 bands at the same time, and a mechanical device pushes them forward the thickness of a match at each stroke of the cutter. This little machine, with its one sharp knife, can cut over 10,000,000 matches a day.—The Woodworkers.

"Good Enough" Boys.

"I made a bobsled according to the directions given in my paper," said Fred Carroll, petulantly, "and it won't run."

"So I believe," said his friend, George Lennon. "You also made a box telephone, and that didn't work."

"How do you account for it?" asked Fred, curiously.

George smiled as he answered quietly, "You did not make them according to directions."

"Didn't I put in everything required? What did I omit?"

"You omitted exactness. When you made the telephone you did not draw the wire tight as directed. You let it hang slack, and when I spoke to you about it, you said it was 'good enough.'"

"I thought it would do."

"Of course you did! Then in making the sled, you made two mistakes in your measurements. You nailed the forward cross-cleat about six inches from the end, thus interfering with the play of the front bob, and the guards were so low down that a fellow's knuckles scraped the ground. The consequence was that there was no satisfaction in riding on the sled. It was a 'good enough' sled. Instead of being careful to have every measurement exact, you guess at some, and make mistakes in others; and to every objection you replied that it was 'good enough.' That generally is one not good at all."

How many "good enough" boys are reading these lines? The boy who sweeps his employer's store, and neglects the corners and dark places, is sweeping "good enough." So is the boy who skims his lessons, or does the home chores in careless fashion.

Only Sleep.

The ancient Christians called their burial places dormitories; "For," said they, "our friends do not die, they only sleep." Jesus said of Lazarus, "I go that I may awake him." Beautiful figure of death, is peaceful, restful sleep! Sweetly to sleep through the night of death to awake in the morning of eternal day.

How sweet to sleep while time shall sweep
Earth's shadows all away!
Then waking, sing with Christ the King,
And light of endless day!

It is related of Michael Angelo, that while walking through an obscure street in Florence he discovered a fine block of marble lying neglected in a yard, and half buried in dirt and rubbish. Regardless of his holiday attire he at once fell to work upon it, cleaning away its filth, and striving to lift it from the slime and mire in which it lay. His companions asked him in astonishment what he was doing, and what he wanted with that worthless piece of rock!

"O, there's an angel in the stone" was the answer, "and I must get it out."

He had it removed to his studio, and by patient toil, with mallet and chisel, he let the angel out. What to others was but a rude, unsightly mass of stone, to his educated eye was the buried glory of art. A mason would have put it into a stone wall; a cartman would have used it for filling in, or to grade the streets; but Angelo transformed it into a gem of art, and gave it value for ages to come.

What possibilities of virtue and usefulness may not a good man see in a child? Do we know how to get the angel out? Are our children to be only for filling in?

One who was recently in India observed the fascination which the Holy Scriptures had for the native converts. When they went abroad from their homes the only piece of luggage they carried was the New Testament; and every night upon the hill-side, camping out, it was a glorious sight to see those natives lighting their fire, and then for hours sitting around it with the stars shining beautifully above, reading chapter after chapter of the glorious story of the life of Christ.—The Church at Home and Abroad.

An Epic on Water.

Look at that, ye thirsty sons of earth! Behold it! See its purity! How it glitters, as if a mass of liquid gem! It is a beverage that was brewed by the hand of the Almighty himself! Not in the simmering still, or smoking fires, choked with poisonous gases, and surrounded by the stench of sickening odors and rank corruption, does our Father in heaven prepare the precious essence of life, the pure cold water; out in the green glade and grassy dell, where the red deer wanders and the child loves to play—there God brews it; and down, down in the deepest valleys, where the fountains murmur and the rills sing; and high upon the tall mountain-tops, where the storm-clouds brood and the thunders crash; and away, far out on the wide sea, where the hurricane howls music, and the big wave rolls the chords, sweeping the march of God—there he brews it, that beverage of life, health-giving water! And everywhere it is a thing of beauty; glimmering in the dew-drops, singing in the summer rain, shining in the bow; gem, till the trees all seem turned into living jewels; spreading a golden veil over the setting sun, or a white gauze around the mid-night moon; sporting in the glaciers, dancing in the hail-shower; folding its bright curtain softly about the windy world and weaving the many-colored iris, that seraph's song of the sky, whose woof is the rain drops of earth, whose web is the sunbeam of heaven, all checked over with the celestial flowers by the mystic hand of refraction; still always it is beautiful, that blessed life water! No poison bubbles on the brink; its foam brings no sadness or murder; no blood stains its limpid glass; broken-hearted wives and starving orphans shed no tears in its depths; no drunk and shrieking ghost from the grave curses it in words of eternal despair. Beautiful, pure, blessed, and glorious, give me forever the pure, and sparkling cold water!

Sleep.

Sir Philip Sidney calls sleep, "the poor man's wealth" and he might have added, it is every man's health. Men have often, according to their notions, attempted to limit or extend the hours of sleep. Thus the "immortal Alfred" of England divided the day into three portions of eight hours each, assigning one for refreshment of the body by sleep, diet, and exercise, another for business, and the third for study and devotion. Bishop Taylor considered three hours, and Richard Baxter four hours, was sufficient for any man.

"Nature requires five,
Custom gives seven,
Laziness takes nine,
And wickedness eleven."

The error into which these and others have fallen arises not only from the fact that in this, as well as in other things, every man is a law to himself, but from the varying amount required in each individual case at different times, depending upon the amount of renovation required by the nervous and muscular systems. John Wesley, the distinguished founder of Methodism, who attained the age of eighty-eight, and who could comm[illegible] sleep on horseback, says very p[illegible] orly, in some curious remarks w[illegible] he has left upon sleep, that no r[illegible] ure will do for all, nor will the s[illegible] amount of sleep suffice even for[illegible] same person at all times. A pe[illegible] debilitated by sickness requires m[illegible] of "tired nature's sweet restorer" t[illegible] one in vigorous health. More sle[illegible] also necessary when the strength [illegible] spirits are exhausted by hard labo[illegible] severe mental efforts.—Evangelical Journal.

Thirty-five years ago, in the p[illegible] market-places, on the Old Cal[illegible] River, Africa, human flesh was [illegible] just like beef. Announcement.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Iowa will be held at Marshalltown, commencing Aug. 13 and continuing over Sunday Aug. 23. Brethren, begin to prepare to attend this meeting, come and let us see each other eye to eye, face to face, and feel the blessedness of clasping the hands of those of like precious faith, thus giving us a foretaste of the soon coming kingdom. We need your presence to cheer us, your counsel to guide us in the work. Are you not interested? We trust you are and hope that you will make as special effort to attend. We desire to make this the best meeting we have ever held, come and help us to do so. Notice of rates will appear later.

Editor Restitution:

Please state through the columns of THE RESTITUTION that Bro. John Foore of Temple, Arizona will hold a series of meetings in Santa Ana Cal., commencing July 30th and continuing as long as interest is good. We desire that all the brethren of the Abrahamic faith of Cal., especially Southern California should be in attendance, for there are but few of us and we will need the co-operation of all to make the meeting a benefit to the scattered household of faith, and presenting the pure Gospel of Christ to a lost and ruined race. There are but few of us, but if each one will lend their influence toward forwarding the cause of truth much good may be accomplished in the Master's cause. Let all who can, come prepared to camp during the meetings. We have secured a large tent to hold the meetings in. To those who do not wish to camp on the ground will say that rooms furnished for light housekeeping can be secured reasonably. There are but few of us here and accommodations limited. Any information desired from any of the brethren regarding the meetings will be cheerfully answered by me.

Winona Lake Excursions. Special Rates via Pennsylvania Lines for Winona Assembly.

Season excursion tickets to Winona Lake (formerly Eagle Lake, Ind.,) will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines on and after June 21st. The return limit will include Oct. 31st, allowing a season's sojourn at this delightful resort. Special low rate tickets, good returning fifteen days from date of sale, will also be sold during the months of June, July and August.

Winona Lake is the site of Winona Assembly, which affords notable opportunities for recreation, instruction, entertainment and devotion. The Assembly grounds, comprising over 200 acres, surround the Lake, a beautiful sheet of water near Warsaw, Ind., on the Fort Wayne Route. Many pretty cottages have been erected on the grounds, which are nicely shaded. The improvements include a fine park, bicycle track and ball ground, with a large amphitheater; an auditorium seating over 3,000 persons; college halls, hotel, restaurants, and supply stores. Rates for entertainment at the hotel and boarding houses will be found very reasonable. The fishing is fine, and the large fleet of row boats and steamers afford facilities for delightful boating. The summer school will be in session from July 20th to August 14th, in charge of Dr. John M. Coulter. In August a Bible Conference will be held under the direction of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. Well-known educators and lecturers will take part in the educational work. Time may be pleasantly and profitably passed at this pleasant resort, and body and mind invigorated by health-giving recreation and instructive entertainment.

For rates and information about train facilities apply to Ticket Agents of the Pennsylvania Lines, or address F. Van Dusen, Chief Assistant General Passenger Agent, Pittsburgh, Pa. For information concerning the Assembly address Rev. R. V. Hunter, Eagle Lake P. O., Ind.—July 30

Books and Tract List.

"THE SCRIPTURES OPENED."

Thoughts and themes for Bible students, by Robert Ashcroft. This is a new work of 375 pages, containing a variety of lectures and short articles on important Bible subjects, exhibiting the revealed purpose of God concerning the earth and all its families, how we may become identified with those purposes, "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ" of all that God hath promised. It is believed the book will commend itself to the unprejudiced mind, and be useful in leading to a more perfect understanding of and love for the Scriptures of truth. Numerous testimonials of a very satisfactory character concerning the merits of the book have been received from prominent brethren scattered abroad, and which we can find no place for in this brief notice. Sent by mail, postpaid, on the receipt of $1.00. Address this office.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its dissemination. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

"HAVE I GIVEN UP THE ATONEMENT OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract now, being 12 duodecimo pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and a request was made by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5 cents each or 50 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, with gamut for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 208 pages. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism." A 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared in a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts. each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conard," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in RESTITUTION, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the Restitution of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Hesperia, McBride, Watson and Byron have no regular preaching. The church at Raisin Center is provided over by Brother L. C. Chase.

The congregation at Scholls, Oregon, meet every Sunday for Bible study by means of Sunday School, or preaching, or both, and would be pleased to have all letters of church, and brethren from a distance meet with us. The Elder is W. W. Trusdell.

The Church of God, at Niagara Falls, N. Y. meet every Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. for worship at the Church, on the corner of Cleveland Avenue and 10th St. All are welcome.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is only to think that you can hold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When ordering a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Our Gospel.

Ours is not a cheerless Gospel,
Asking much and giving nought,
Full of penances, full of tortures,
As the price with these were bought;
But is running over with gladness,
Purified from all alloy,
Giving only love and blessing,
For its spring is perfect joy.

It has no cheerless bondage
That our Gospel bids us bear,
Making life a ceaseless sorrow,
Burdened deep with sin and care;
But is rich life-giving freedom,
In the love of Christ our Lord
Asking only willing service,
Giving back a rich reward.

Ours is no mysterious Gospel,
Hidden under doubt and shade,
Far beyond our feeble vision,
In the dust of ages laid;
But is truly welcome tidings,
Telling of the Christ that died,
Of the full and free salvation
Purchased by the Crucified.

Communicated.

Hesaias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 46.

1. Bel hath fallen: Nabo hath been broken; Their sculptured things have become wild-beasts and domestic animals; Ye carry them bound like a burden on one weary.

2. Faint and hungry, not strong moreover, like those who will not be able to be saved from war; but who have been led away captive.

3. Hear me thou house of Jakoob and all the remnant of Israel, ye who are being taken up from the womb and who are cast from childhood.

4. To old age, I am, and until ye have grown old am I; I am sustaining you; I created and I am going to remit and take you up and save you.

5. To whom have ye likened me? See, ye have designed, ye who are being led astray.

6. Ye who are symbolizing with gold from a purse and silver by weight; They will weigh it, and when they have hired a gold-pourer they have made a thing made with hands and they bow down and worship them.

7. They take it up on their shoulder and go their way; and if they set it upon its place it remaineth; it cannot be moved; and whoever may call unto it for help, will not be heard; it cannot save from calamities.

8. Remember these things and sigh: May ye have repented ye who have been led astray; May ye have returned with your heart,

9. And may ye have remembered the former things from the minute age on, that I am God and that there is no one besides me:

10. I who declare beforehand the last things before they have occurred and likewise that they have been consummated; And have said, All my counsel will be established and all that I am counseling I shall do;

11. I who am calling one that flyeth from the East, from a land afar off concerning things which I have counseled; I have said and I have led, I have generated and I have created; I have led him and I have prospered his way.

12. May ye have hearkened unto me ye who have lost heart, ye who are far from righteousness.

13. I have made my righteousness draw nigh, and the salvation from me I shall not make slow; I have given in Sheon salvation unto Israel for a thing of glory.

CHAPTER 47.

1. Go down, Sit upon the ground thou virgin daughter of Babuloon, sit down into the ground thou daughter of Chaldaia, because nevermore shalt thou be called delicate and refined;

2. Take a mill-stone, grind fine flour; Cover thyself with thy veil, cover thy gray hair; Make bare thy legs; cross rivers;

3. Thy shame will have been uncovered, thy reproaches will be manifest: The assertion of the sight I am going to take away from thee; Nevermore shall I surrender it to (mere) men.

4. The One who hath delivered thee is the Lord of Sabaoth, his name the [illegible] One of Israel.

5. [illegible] communication; [illegible]

of Chaldaia: never again shalt thou have been called mistress of royalty.

6. I became embittered toward my laity; thou didst pollute mine inheritance; I gave them up into thy hand: but thou didst not show them mercy: Thou didst make heavy the yoke of the elder, very heavy.

7. And thou didst say: Forever shall I be a ruler: Thou didst not apprehend these things in thy heart: nor didst thou remember the last things.

8. And now hear these things, thou delicate one, thou who art seated in confidence, who art saying in thy heart: I am, and there is no other: I shall not become a widow nor know orphanage.

9. Now on the other hand these two things will come upon thee suddenly in one day, childlessness and widowhood will come suddenly upon thee in thy pharmacy: in the exceeding strength of thy enchantments:

10. In the hope of thy wickedness: For thou hast said, I am, and there is no other; Comprehend: there will be the understanding of these things, and thy wickedness will be thy shame: and thou hast said to thy heart, I am and there is no other;

11. And loss will come upon thee and thou shalt not know: a pit and thou wilt fall into it: And wretchedness will come upon thee, and thou shalt not be able to become clean: and loss will come suddenly upon thee and thou shalt not know it.

12. Stand now in thy enchantments and thy much pharmacy; things which thou didst learn from thy youth up, if thou canst be profited;

13. Thou hast toiled wearily in thy counsels: Let them stand and save thee, the astrologers of the heavens, those who see the stars: Let them tell thee what is going to come upon thee:

14. Lo, they all will have been consumed like kindling upon a fire, and they shall not deliver their soul from out the flame, because thou hast coals of fire: Sit upon them:

15. These will be thy responsive-help: Thou hast toiled wearily in thy barter from thy youth up; each man hath been led astray by himself, and for thee there will be no salvation.

CHAPTER 48.

1. May ye have heard these things, ye house of Jakoob, ye who have been called in the name of Israel, and who have come from out Judas; ye who swear in the name of the God of Israel; ye who remember not with truth nor righteousness;

2. Ye who withstand the name of the sacred city, and are firmly fixed in your opposition to the God of Israel; The Lord of Sabaoth is his name:

3. The former things still did I declare and they went out of my mouth, and became heard: Suddenly did I do, and they came to pass.

4. I know that thou art hard, and thy neck an iron sinew, and thy forehead copper.

5. And I told thee long ago the things; what they were before they came upon thee; I made them heard by thee, lest perchance thou shouldst say the idols did them to me, and shouldst say the sculptured things and the moulded things enjoined them on me.

6. Ye heard them all and ye did not comprehend: Moreover I have caused the new things to be heard by thee, the things from now on, that are destined to occur: And hast thou not said,

7. They come to pass now and not of old, and that not in former days thou didst hear them? Lest thou shouldst say, Yes, I know them:

8. Nor didst thou know nor distrust, nor from the outset did I open thine ears. For I know that wouldst set aside, and moreover wouldst be called a transgressor from the womb.

9. For my name's sake shall I show thee, mine anger, and my renowned things shall I bring upon thee, that I may not utterly destroy thee:

10. Lo, I sold thee not for money, and I delivered thee out of a furnace of poverty:

11. For my own sake shall I do to thee, because my name hath been abominated and my glory I will not give to another.

12. Hear me, O Jakoob and Israel, whom I am calling: I am first and I am forever:

13. And my hand founded the earth and my right hand stayed up the heavens: I shall call them and they will stand together.

14. And they will all have been gathered together, and they will listen. Who told them these things? Loving thee I did thy will unto Babuloon, to take away the seed of Chaldaious.

15. I talked, I called, I led him and prospered his way.

16. May ye have gathered together and hearkened to these things: not in secret from the beginning have I talked. When they came to pass, I was there, and now the Lord, the Lord hath sent me and his spirit.

17. In this wise saith the Lord who hath delivered thee, the Sacred One of Israel: I am thy God: I have shown thee how to find the way in which thou shalt walk.

18. And if thou hadst hearkened unto my commandments, thy peace would have become a river as it were, and thy righteousness like a wave of the sea:

19. And thy seed would have become like sand, and the offspring of thy womb like the dust of the earth; nor now shalt thou be utterly destroyed, nor shalt thy name perish in my sight:

20. Go out from Babeloon: Flee from Chaldaioi; Announce a voice of rejoicing, and let this become heard: Announce it unto the farthest limit of the earth; Say, The Lord hath delivered his bond-servant Jakoob:

21. And if they thirst, he will lead them through the desert; water from a rock will he conduct for them: a rock will have been riven, and water will flow, and my laity will drink.

22. There is no greeting, Saith the Lord, for the irreverent.

COMMENT.

Chapter 46th is a prophecy of the fall of Baalism as exemplified by the Chaldeans and in the Babylonian Empire of that day with the clustering that was to come upon Jakoob for being involved in and mixed up with it. The usual emphasis placed upon monotheism and the ultimate assertion of it in Jakoob throughout the civilized world as God's instrumentality to be realized in the Christ as the "seed" of Jakoob and the consequent restoration and promised glory and blessedness. Of course the grosser forms of Baalism have passed away before the spiritual breath of Christianity wherever it has gone throughout the civilized world; but monotheism as taught in this chapter is still very far from being realized even in so-called Christianity, and much of the positive science of to-day is but a subtle form of Baalism—a worship of the creation instead of the Creator. Any philosophy or religion that rejects the first Great Intelligent Cause of all things and attributes "energy" or creative power to either matter or natural law is only a refined Baalism in disguise: and any monotheism that divides and distributes personality as does the theology of the day is merely "a disciple of words" as Paul calls it. Personal responsibility and causal energy centered in one person and that one person "the God of our Fathers" could not be stated in more explicit term nor unequivocal language than we have had so far in this book of "Hosaias the son of Amoos."

Chapter 47th recites more fully and particularly the sin of Babuloon as a ruler and instrumentality under God to chasten his special people. The failure to show mercy to the captives the pride and selfishness exemplified and the total disregard of God's agency in the whole matter fully brought out. We need to remember that the Babylon of that day was a universal empire and the Chaldeans were the ruling nation of the civilized world. Read secular history and see how literally the prophecy of this chapter has been fulfilled, and how utterly that great pomp and glory has passed away into oblivion. The lesson of it we are told is for "the last days" and we as nations are in these "last days" with similar judgments impending over us if we heed not the instruction herein given.

The exhortation of the 48th chapter is especially addressed to the "House of Jakoob" in the name of "the Lord of Sabaoth" an appellation that is nowhere in the Old or New applied to "the Christ." Let the reader note this and look it up.

A remarkable statement is made in the 8th and 9th verses in connection with the previous specific arraignment of accountability on account of the ancestral revelation vouchsafed Jakoob from the beginning, a statement which recites the foreknowledge of God even of the fact that Jakoob would not comprehend and that he would be "stiff-necked" and obstinate if he did. "Nor from the outset did I open thine ears" Why? The answer is given us in the 9th verse. Does not this agree with Paul's argument exactly as given in Romans and elsewhere on this subject? We may not fathom God's purposes, but we can expect plainly promised results and these are certainly made clear and plain in this chapter.

Read the rationale of the 18th and 19th verses, which states one way in which God could and would have redeemed his promise to Jakoob. Then read the 20th and 21st verses which tell us that there is still another way in which it can and will be done, and that "the Lord's arm is not shortened that it cannot save." "There is no greeting though for the irreverent" of the 22nd verse teaches us that this way must be in the pathway of "true-reverence"—as opposed to idolatry, or wrong reverence however sincere.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Consistency.

"We should know not anything—neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun." Eccl. ix.

To mourn for the dead is un-Scriptural. To mourn for personal loss owing to the death of those dear to us is recognized by Scripture as a part of our humanity, but Christians are not to sorrow "even as others which have no hope," for death is but temporary separation as "them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." David mourned until his child died, but no longer.

Christ wept, not for dead Lazarus, but in sympathy for the bereaved sisters. He went to the grave, not to decorate it, or praise the inanimate corpse, but to restore the dead to life, in pity for the living and to illustrate to the multitude that he was truly the Life Giver.

"Let the dead bury their dead, but go thou and preach the kingdom of God," was a rebuke of the wasting time and money over those whom it could not benefit, at the expense of the living.

The habit of honoring the dead is the inception of Confucianism—first honors, then worships.

All not of God must needs be of sin, as Scripture ignores any middle ground.

If Decoration Day be simply an official expression of national grief for her dead heroes, it must be either a hollow form, (and so noxious), or sincere. If sincere, and the dead know it and love us, it must cause the grief; but if they either do not know it, or do not care for us, what purpose can it serve?

If they be in heaven, we surely cannot wish them back, and if we do not wish them back what do we mourn for? If they be in the orthodox Hell, our tears and praises must exasperate and add to their despair, and cannot possibly help them in any possible manner.

Those in heaven, where there is fulness of joy, can care for nothing beyond the love and commendation of God, and our gratitude and praises would, (if they had any effect at all,) only shock their fully awakened sense of unworthiness before him. for "by grace are ye saved through faith, not of works lest any one should boast," which is probably what is done on such occasions. If these honors to the dead have a value, what loss is sustained by those countless mouldering forgotten ones, unknown even and unsung for a scattered resting place!!! If they have no value they are absurd.

Presumably these ceremonies are partly the result of misunderstanding Scripture and a drift nearer to Paganism; partly a process of making political capital by an appeal to an unreasoning emotion that is apt to supply the place of moral duty or Christian faith with the unthinking masses; and partly an outlet for the crazy which possesses the multitude of decorating itself with badges and peacocking in public parades in imitation of military habiliments.

Last Decoration Day in Kansas City the papers reported the suicide of a veteran of 70 years, who stated in a note, that poverty, and inability to procure employment, and faithless friends, drove him to the deed. A payment of the sum squandered over the dead, "who know not any thing," would have enabled his gray hairs to descend in comfort to the grave. If his spirit looked down (as some think) on the puerile ceremonies, and saw his aged wife, and children crying to her for bread, amid the blaze of trumpets and bombastic boastings of hired orators, what must have been his feelings? And will he plead at the bar of God for a grateful and intelligent country that he fought for and so wasted some of the most precious years of his life? "Verily they asked for bread and we gave them a stone, for fish and received a serpent." "A father of the fatherless and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation." "He redeemeth the fatherless and widow, but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down."

Solomon in his day said, "Wisdom crieth aloud in the streets and no man regardeth her," and she was comparatively fortunate, for with us, she is pelted with the mud of public opinion, or ostracized, or even clubbed as an anarchist; for nothing is more unpopular than to draw attention to public folly or national sins, or suggest that we are not gradually converting the world into a Paradise by our wisdom, goodness and wealth.

Nevertheless, it is well to emphasize the fact, pretty often, that Christians are not to be led astray or imitate the example of the masses, for it is written, "we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness," and to "go with the crowd," or be guided by popular opinion, (even if they be so sure they are right that they can afford to be abusive,) is to partake of their sins and judgments.

Pharaoh said, "What every body believes must be wrong," but to be sure he was naturally sarcastic. On one occasion he (or it may have been Lord Palmerston) sent a subordinate to ascertain the opinion of a certain man regarding a certain bill under consideration. "Why," said the official, "What is the use of getting his opinion, he is looked upon as quite unintelligent? Why not ask some one who is a really able man?"

Said the Statesman, "If I wanted to know if this is really a wise measure I should ask him, but as I simply wish to find out what the public is likely to think I prefer to ask the more ignorant man who really represents about the average intelligence on most subjects."

We owe our old warriors a debt of gratitude; we can best repay it by caring for them when living, and cherishing their dear ones when friendless and alone. To reject them and wickedly waste time and money over the dead (who have no more a portion for ever in any thing under the sun,) while the living are starving in the midst of plenty, is ingratitude "the Vice of Republics," and a sin that cries to heaven, and "vengeance is mine, saith the Lord, I will repay."

As for the dead, well has the poet written:

"No longer seek for merits to disclose,
Or drag his frailties from their dread abode,
There they alike in trembling hope repose,
The bosom of his Father and his God."

H. T. BAKER.

Philip, of Macedon, declared that he considered no fortress impregnable into which a mule laden with gold could find entrance.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Selections.

Mr. Gladstone on Immortality.

In Mr. Gladstone's new book on "Butler," just published, he writes: Another consideration of the highest importance is that the natural immortality of the soul is a doctrine wholly unknown to the Holy Scriptures, and standing no higher plane than that of an ingeniously sustained, but gravely and formidably contested, philosophical opinion. And surely there is nothing, as to which we ought to be more on our guard, than the entrance into the precinct of Christian doctrine, either without authority or by any abuse of authority, of philosophical speculations disguised as truths of Divine revelation. They bring with them a grave restraint on mental liberty: but what is worse is, that their basis is a pretension essentially false, and productive by rational retribution of other falsehoods. Under these two heads, we may perhaps find that we have ample warrant for declining to accept the tenet of natural immortality as a truth of Divine Revelation. Immortality, in his view, is a "gift or endowment due to the incarnation of our Lord." The immortality of the righteous is assured, and is "by no means parallel or identical with the declarations of the eternal punishment of the wicked." As to the latter, the notion of universal restitution is not supported by Scripture or Christian tradition, or by any sound philosophy of human nature. "The central and final stronghold of believers is faith in the indefeasible and universal justice of the Divine Being."—Evening News, Edinburgh, Scotland.

Living Again.

Life is to me a marvelous mystery, and yet I know I live and move and think. The reliving of the dead is a process which to me is altogether incomprehensible, and still I candidly believe that the power which first gave life can enliven and re-animate the moldering dust, can bring up again from the depths of the earth. The second life—if so I may term the resurrection existence—will be no more a marvel than the present one. It is not a thing incredible with me that God should raise the dead.—G. L. Young.

Opportunity.

A sculptor once showed a visitor his studio. It was full of gods. One was very curious. The face was concealed by being covered with hair, and there were wings on each foot.

"What is its name?" said the spectator.

"Opportunity," was the reply.

"Why is his face hidden?"

"Because men seldom know him when he comes to them."

"Why has he wings upon his feet?"

"Because he is soon gone, and once he is gone he cannot be overtaken."

It Might Have Been.

What a tremendous significance there is in those words: "It might have been!" and how they sometimes burden us when, advanced in years, we look back and see how golden opportunities were allowed to slip and fields of labor manifestly opened unto us were not occupied.

"And it is not the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone
That gives you the bit of heart-ache
At the setting of the sun."

I stood upon the beach looking off upon the sea: and there was a strong wind blowing, and I noticed that some of the vessels were going another way, and other vessels were going another way. I said to myself: "How is it that the same wind sends one vessel in one direction, and another vessel in another direction?" I found out by looking that it was the different way they had the sails set. And so does trouble come on this world. Some men it drives into the harbor of heaven, and other men it drives on the rocks. It depends upon the way you have your sails set. All the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans of surging sorrow cannot sink a soul that has asked God's pilotage. —Talmage.

When everything goes dead wrong.
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And it always comes with the years,
And the smile that is worth the praise of earth
Is the smile that comes through tears.

It is easy enough to be pleasant,
When nothing forbids you to stray,
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away.
But it's only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who had no strength for the strife,
The world's highway is cumbered today;
They make up the item of life.
But the virtue that conquers passion,
And the sorrow that hides in a smile—
It is these that are worth the honor of earth
For we find them but once in a while.

A MAN may know a great many things and yet be a fool.

"JESUS and his brethren are both of one Father—God; he by inheritance (Heb. i.) they by adoption (Gal. iv.)

"WHILE it is one of the offices of religion to teach us self-restraint and inspire us with high aims, it is not her work to cramp or dwarf any function of our nature."

WE received the following from Bro. Allark:—Please add to rate notice tent will be pitched at same location as last year on North 3rd street. Street cars from depot by the tent every 15 minutes, fare 5 cents.

"PRAYER that is not based on God's promises and offered in the name of Jesus Christ is like the clicking of a telegraphic instrument that is unattached to the transmitting wire. The sound is all right and the petition may be understood on earth, but it will not be transmitted to heaven."

AN English Bible student and scholar says Rev. xxii. 15 would be better translated—"Without are the dogs, even the sorcerers, and the whoremongers, and the murderers," etc., etc., i. e., the entire canine race is specified; not merely "dogs and sorcerers," as in the A. V. and R. V.

COLLETT'S claims of the Papacy, page 49, and page 430 of the Protestant Alliance say in regard to the number 666, the explanation "Latinus," which is probably as old as John himself, is confirmed by the remarkable coincidence "that in the year 666 A. D. the then Pope Vetalianus, ordered divine service to be everywhere celebrated in the Latin tongue."

IN the light of the prophetic Word it is easy to find the subjects proper of the Kingdom of our Lord. Says the Spirit in Jeremiah, "Behold the days come saith the Lord that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah. In those days, and it that time, I will cause the branch of righteousness to grow unto David, and he shall execute judgment and righteousness. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely, and this is the name whereby he shall be called, "THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." Jer. xxiii. 14.

THE 50th Anniversary Number of the Scientific American, New York, just out, is a really handsome and valuable publication of 72 pages. It reviews the progress of the past 50 years in the various sciences and industrial arts; and the various articles by the best scientific writers of the day are ably written and richly illustrated. The editors have accomplished the difficult task of presenting a compendium of information that shall be at once historical, technical and popular. The interest never flags for a moment, and the story of the half century's growth is in itself a veritable compendium of valuable scientific information for future reference. Price, 10 cents per copy.

DR. O. F. WESTCOTT, in dealing with the nature of life in John's Epistle says: "In considering these phrases it is necessary to premise that in spiritual things we must guard against all conclusions which rest upon succession and duration. Eternal Life is that which Paul speaks of as he enters zoe, the life which is life indeed, 1 Tim. vi. 19, and he zoe toi theou, the life of God, Eph. iv. 18. It is not an endless duration of being in time, but being of which time is not a measure. We have, indeed, no power to grasp the idea except through forms and images of sense. These must be used, but we must not transfer them as realities to another order." Again he says: "The life which lies in fellowship with God and Christ is spoken of as eternal life in order to distinguish it from the life of sense and time, under which true human life is veiled at present. 1 John iii. 14, compare v. 16. But eternal life is beyond the limitations: it belongs to the being of God (1 John i. 2 en pros ton patera), and its consummation is the transforming vision of the Son seen as he is. 1 Jno. iii. 2; John xvi. 23.

WRITING in The Young Man for June Ian Maclaren says: "Whoever has represented religion as a competition with one's creditors, or a life-boat from a sinking ship, or a fire-escape from a burning-house, has dragged a fair name in the dust, and been guilty of the worst kind of slander—the degradation of a spiritual idea. One could hardly imagine anything baser than to serve the devil the best of his life and then fly to religion in desperation on grounds of policy. It was a masterpiece of effrontery, a very apotheosis of selfishness. Perhaps the person inclined to this policy will be more impressed by the fact that it will prove a failure. Whatever religion may do for a man, it does not relax the punishment of sin, for indeed there is nothing plainer than the impartial and irresistable action of the Law of Retribution. If one plays the fool in his youth, he has to pay his reckoning afterwards, and religion will not accept his debt. Were religion simply a scheme for condoning sin and feeding selfishness, she would be a curse."

The Gates of Hell.

In Matt. xvi. 18 Jesus says, "The gates of Hades shall not prevail against my church." The figure is that of a beleaguered city whose gates prevail against the invaders, or whose inhabitants cannot get out because out of the hostile forces surrounding it. Here the notion of the traditional hell is obviously excluded; for the church of Christ can neither be supposed to have been in that hell and wanting to get out, or out and wanting to get in. Understood as a prophecy of the resurrection, Christ's words are intelligible enough. The gates of the grave will be powerless to prevent their escape from its dominion, when the time comes for him to call forth his sleeping friends."

Destruction.

"We read in 2 Thess. i. 7-10 that Christ at his coming will punish the wicked "with everlasting destruction from his presence, and from the glory of his power." What the meaning of destruction is we gather from the 20th verse of Psalm cxlv: "The Lord preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy." This shows that destruction is the opposite of preservation. The true meaning of the word destruction may also be seen by consulting 1 Cor. i. 19, "It is written I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent." This is a Hebrew parallelism, the latter half of the sentence echoing the sentiment of the former. Where, then will be the wisdom of the wise when God has brought it to nothing? Now apply this meaning of the word destruction to the fate of the wicked, and what is the result? Why you have a literal fulfillment of the prophecy which supplies Christ with his allusion to the worm that never dies, and the fire that is not quenched! That prophecy is contained in the last two verses of Isaiah's prophecy: "It shall come to pass that from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth and look upon the carcases (not the immortal souls, or the disembodied spirits, but the carcases) of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh."

Bible Truths.

A resurrection of the Body is necessary to a future life. Luke xiv. 14; John xi. 23-25; Phil. iii. 21; John v. 30.

The dead are totally unconscious. Psa. vi. 5; Eccl. ix. 5; Psa. cxlvi. 4; Psa. cxv. 17; 1 Cor. xv. 13-18.

The immortality of the body is a gift promised to the righteous only at the return of Christ. 1 Cor. xv. 54; 1 John iii. 2; Phil iii. 21; but the immortality of the soul almost universally believed in so-called Christendom, is not mentioned once in the Scriptures; it is a heathen fable.

The Lord Jesus has promised to come again and receive his disciples to himself. He will also restore the Jews to Palestine, break in pieces every kingdom under the sun, and upon their ruins he and his saints, (who will be made immortal) will establish the kingdom of God. They will fulfill the gospel of the kingdom by setting up the kingdom on this earth and rule this planet in peace and righteousness for one thousand years, Dan. ii. 44; Dan. vii. 27 Jer. xxxii. 37-40; Psa. lxxii 7, 8; Rev. xx 6.

The righteous do not go to heaven when they die, but this earth will be, after the resurrection the dwelling place of the redeemed when it is made a paradise. Matt. v. 5; Isa. xxxv. 19; Rev. v. 10; and numerous other passages.

There is only one Almighty and Eternal God, 1 Tim. vi. 4; Mark xii. 29; Jno. i. 17; and not three.

The Spirit is the marvellous and all-pervading power of the One Living and true God, Eph. iv. 6; 1 Tim. vi. 16; Isa. xlv. 5; The doctrine of the Trinity is a Romish fable, borrowed from Plato.

Jesus Christ was the Son of God, who by his perfect obedience, death and resurrection, became the means of giving eternal life to all who believe and obey the gospel, at his second appearing on earth. John v. 19; Heb. v. 8, 9; Mark xvi. 15, 16; 1 Cor. xv. 21-23.

Baptism is immersion in water, and is the ordinance in which believers are united to Christ. It is for the remission of sins—washing away of sins, and therefore essential to salvation. Acts ii. 38; Rom. vi. 3-6; 1 Pet. ii. 21; Gal. iii. 27-30.

There is only one faith, one hope, one Lord, one baptism one God and Father. Eph. iv. 4.

The Gospel of the Kingdom. A Reply to "The Christian Oracle," No. 21.

As I now, Sir, you will please follow me to 1 Cor. xv. 45 where we read that the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. It is from the first Adam that we derive this real, but perishable life; and it is as the author of this life that he is here brought into contrast with the second Adam, from whom we must derive the future and everlasting life. The Father has been pleased to make him the grand depository of eternal life for the race. We could not inherit a life from Adam that he did not himself possess,—and hence the Apostle says in the 22nd verse, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." And in verse 49 he tells us that as we have borne the image of the earthy (Adam) we shall also, (not do) bear the

IMAGE OF THE HEAVENLY

(Adam). And it would seem as if the Apostle anticipated our anxiety to know when and how this should take place, for in the 50th verse he says, "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." So that the condition of the Corinthians did not unfit of their inheriting the kingdom. But after that startling announcement, he adds: "Behold, I show you a mystery;" that is, a great truth hitherto not revealed,—what was it? "We

SHALL NOT ALL SLEEP

(the sleep of death) but we shall be changed (so that we can inherit the kingdom of God) in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." This is what is necessary before flesh and blood can inherit the kingdom of God. They have to be changed. The coming forth into a spiritual life, or existence is being born from above. It is bearing the image of the heavenly instead of the earthly. They are then spirit, because born of the spirit as Jesus says.

I now hasten to show you that the resurrection from the dead, is regarded as a birth. Col. i. 18 is exactly in point; "And he is the Head of the Body, the Church, who is the beginning, [of the harvest of dead ones] the FIRST BORN from the dead, that among all (margin) he might have the pre-eminence." Now turn if you please to Rev. i. 5 and read: "And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first born of the dead ones." After the second bringing forth or birth of Jesus he said, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen. And have the keys of hades and of death. This will be the condition of Nicodemus if he be Christ's at his coming, for he will be born from above. That Christ was the "first-born among many brethren," see Rom. viii. 29. And that the church is the church of the first-born see Heb. xii. 23. Christians are called the children of God now, it is true, not because they have been born such, but because of adoption,—legally and constitutionally children. They have experienced a moral and intellectual change—I mean that they have been converted, but are flesh and blood still, and will be till the change indicated above takes place. They are in the begotten state till born from the dead like their Lord.

I conclude these hasty remarks by showing.

1. That except a man be born from above, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. John iii. 3-7

2. Peter, and those to whom he wrote had not been born from above, being in the begotten state act. Be gotten to a hope of a resurrection-life by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. 1 Pet. i. 3.

3. Therefore they had not entered the kingdom.

Signs of the Times.

Bro. Underwood:

I will give some of the reasons why I believe the Lord is soon to come the second time to redeem his people and restore all things that the prophets have spoken.

While reading Bro. Hoyt's excellent article in the last issue of RESTITUTION entitled "Signs of the Times," I thought his exposition of Luke xxi. 25 very timely, and I believe strictly true and an excellent exposition of this important truth, because it is present truth at this time. We must remember God has divine order in all his works. Events will occur just as he has given them to the world. The question was asked privately, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming and the end of the world?" So it was his disciples, his brethren he was committing these important truths to for the church. "The things written afore time were written for our learning." "On whom the ends of the world are come." We find the sun was supernaturally darkened May 19, 1780, or as Mark states it "within those days after that tribulation" making it very definite. No the papacy will never persecute the church for another 1260 years. As to the dark day the reader will please consult Pres. Dwight of Conn. and other historians. In his collections relating to those events. The shower of stars of Nov. 13, 1833, or I will give just one statement from the celebrated astronomer and meteorologist Prof. Olmstead of Yale college. He says those "who were so fortunate as to witness the exhibition of shooting stars on Nov. 13, 1833, probably saw the greatest display of celestial fireworks that has ever been since the creation of the world, or at least within the annals covered by the pages of history. The extent of the shower was such as to cover no inconsiderable part of the earth's surface. "Was the display on that eventful night sufficient to fulfill the prophecy, or will we say with the unbelieving Pharisees and Sadducees, "Lord show us a sign from heaven." Remember, just one lone star was a sufficient sign to guide the wise men to the sacred place. It is very much easier for a wicked world to explain away a truth than to believe it. Just so at the first advent. These were the first two signs and the third and last sign given by our Lord was thoroughly explained by Bro. Hoyt, and to me these are sufficient without a doubt or cavil. No, dear brethren, our dear Lord will never repeat signs to satisfy our unbelief. I believe from the strongest evidence that we are living in that terrible time of shaking of the powers of the heavens, and truly men's hearts are failing them for fear. The cyclone is a modern word, our fathers were strangers to these wholesale, death-dealing, property-destroying electric storms. Are they not bad enough, or do we want them more general? Would we want one of them to visit our own town and destroy all but ourselves of our family to convince us that they were a fulfillment of our Lord's prediction? Perhaps a short history of the cyclone would not be out of place here. The first of which there is any authentic record was in Adams Co. Missouri, 1882. 500 people were killed and more than one million dollars worth of property destroyed. On Feb. 9, 1884, more than 800 were killed in Illinois, Kentucky, Mississippi, Georgia, Tennessee, Virginia, North and South Carolina, and the loss of property reached away into the millions. The most terrible storms that twisted Louisville, Kentucky, March 27, 1890, where the loss of life was seventy-six, with two hundred bleeding crippled and maimed, and the appalling loss of property reached two millions one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The most disastrous tornado of recent times in the United States was that which swept the South Carolina coast on Aug. 28, 1893. One thousand perished, and on Oct. 2nd of the same year when more than two thousand poor victims lost their lives. Have we forgotten St. Louis with its thousand dead and wounded, or can we forget the terrible scourge that struck Oakland and Lapeer Co., in our Michigan, in which a hundred dead and wounded were the result, and at this writing help is being sent to the wounded and homeless and discomfort is not alone in the terrible destruction. At Calcutta, India, Oct 15, 1864, sixty-four thousand people lost their live in a cyclone. In Haifong, China, Oct. 8, 1881 more than three hundred thousand perished and more than fifty millions of property was destroyed. No country is exempt from them, even Cuba with its mild climate had a cyclone in Sept., 1888, in which more than a thousand lives were lost. Will we still ask that these death-dealers become more frequent or more severe to satisfy our unbelief? Such is the helplessness of man in fault. No bridge is capable of withstanding its force no structure can stand before its mighty power. Truly men have good reasons for heart-failure. I have only mentioned a few of the many, but I trust enough to call attention to the times in which we are living. If the three signs given by our Lord are not fulfilled and being fulfilled I can see no reason for the looking for the near coming of Christ. It would forever close my mouth on this subject as perhaps hundreds of years might come and go before that long-looked for event could occur. Now if Bro. Hoyt is right, which I most surely believe he is, then let us lift up our heads and rejoice for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Written in love, and not for controversy, hoping to call attention to this all-important subject. In hope of the soon coming on Adorable Redeemer.

Conference Report.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska was held at the Meadow School House in Furnas, Co., commencing Friday, May 29th, as previously published.

Bro Amos Adams preached the opening sermon. The business meeting was held at Bro. Stephen Story's on Saturday afternoon, and the meeting was called to order by the President, Bro. M. D. Newell.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Evangelist Report read as follows:

Money received for quarter	$18.25
Expenses	$1.45
Amount less expenses	$13.80.
Number discourses	49.
Number baptized	9.

The interest at each point of labor for the quarter has been good and is still sufficient to warrant more labor at each place.

Secretary's Report for quarter was as follows:

Received in March	$22.25.
April	28.50.
May	8.00.
Total	$58.75.

Bro. Glenn's Report of labor from Feb. 1, 1896.

Number discourses	44.
Number immersed	13.
Number additions not immersed	3.

The votes of the different churches, as to where the Annual Conference should be held, were counted. Remarks. Decided that it should be held at St. Paul, Nebraska.

Verbal Reports were given of the churches at Fair Haven, St. Paul, and North Frontier. Bro. Adams also gave a brief report of the church at Blair. All are holding regular meetings, and striving to carry on the Master's Work.

Bro. Adams had just held a meeting in North Frontier. The interest was good, and two put on Christ by baptism.

Moved that the Annual Conference begin on Friday, Sept. 11, 1896, and continue for ten days. Motion seconded and carried.

Moved that the President proceed to appoint a Programme Committee for the conference and also committee to see about getting the grounds, putting up the tent and having all in readiness for the meeting. Motion seconded and carried.

Brother A. Adams, and Bent Gordon were appointed on the first committee, and Bro. Bartlett, Bro. Eddy, Bro. Williamson, and Bro. Robinson on the second. Moved that we adjourn to meet at the Annual Conference. Motion seconded and carried.

The Treasurer's report was not received till after the meeting closed.

It was as follows:

At beginning of quar. overdrawn	$ 8.41
Received, April, 25th,	$40.00
Amount not turned over,	29.25
April 26th, paid Eld. Adams	10.00
Not turned over by Eld. Adams,	29.25
Total Received	39.25
Total paid out	39.25
Amount overdrawn	8.41

On account of the rains of Saturday night and Sunday, the roads were bad and but few could get to the school house.

On Sunday evening however, there was meetings held at three different places, Bro. Price preached at the school house, Bro. Adamson at his house, and Bro. Glenn at Bro. B. P. Story's. It was then decided to continue the meeting two days longer.

Bro. Adams preached four sermons on Monday and one on Tuesday.

The house was crowded at each meeting, and the attention good. Many seemed interested and three received the truth and were baptized into the name of Jesus the Christ.

May they continue faithful to the end, and at last receive the prize is my prayer. Those present from other parts were Bro. M. D. Newell and wife and daughter Bessie, Clara Morgan, B. A. Shaw and wife Sister Brown, James Steadman, and Wm. Glenn from Moorefield; Bro. Welton, Bro. John Sellers, Sister Hammond, Bro. J. F. Tassel and wife, Wm. Stephens, and Bro. Whitney, from South Frontier, Sister Eddy and Sister Ben. Gordon from St. Paul; Bro and Sister Gunn from Tecumseh, Kansas; Bro. J. P. Glenn, and Bro. Scott from Fair Haven, Nebraska; and Bro. Carr from Iowa. This was a good meeting and will long be remembered by all who were present.

This report should have been sent in sooner, but I was busy and neglected to send it.

Your Sister in Christ,

RENA GORDON, Sec.

Obituary.

Editor Restitution:

I write you to let you know that Bro. Burdick departed this life March 17, 1896. He was 82 years old. He leaves a wife and one son, W. H. Burdick to mourn his loss. Bro. Burdick was kind and affectionate to his wife, she being almost an invalid for many years. He was honest and upright in all his dealings with his fellowmen. He was not one of those who had no hope, for he was a firm believer in the promises made to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the gospel of the kingdom of God to be set up here on the earth, the kingdom that Daniel speaks of in Dan. ii. 44. He had taken THE RESTITUTION for over forty years. He fell asleep in the faith of eternal life through Christ the Anointed with hope of realizing the same here on earth when the Lord comes to receive his faithful witnesses. May he who holds the keys of death soon come and open the graves where his beloved sleep, then we shall be satisfied when we awake with his likeness.

GARLAND ANDERSEN.

Question.

Editor Restitution:

Will you give an article or two in the paper on the "Destiny of the Wicked," and take up the passages that are supposed to teach eternal torment, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, and those shall go into everlasting punishment? Make it as thorough as you can.

J. E. HOLLARTH.

[Brother W. H. Wilson, will you please write for this Brother?—ED.]

Dear Restitution:

Will some of your able writers, Bro. Wilson or some one that has the ability, explain what is meant by the Keys of the kingdom of heaven? I understand it was Peter who was addressed, but what are the Keys? I take them to be the gospel, am I right? Also the meaning of the binding or loosing on earth or in heaven. If Peter forgave did God forgive? If otherwise with Peter was it otherwise with God? Has any one this power today?- As I have been asking the meaning and cannot tell, please answer and oblige an anxious brother praying for light. The passage I refer to is in Matt. xvi. 19; xviii. 18.

Wicked hands always readily and wicked tools.

We should take more care to keep our integrity, than how we shall vindicate it.

Poetry.

"All Things New."

"He that sat upon the throne said, I make all things new." Rev. xxi. 5.

There's shadow on earth's fairest flow'r,
Of human guilt and human tears;
She stoops her way through realms of night
That once sang with the spheres.
But see, the steel is bloodless leaves,
The heavenly record stands secure;
She wears a still deliverance
When God says "I make all things new."

The world is old with centuries,
But not to those who love and bend,
Those to her heart the sorrow loose
She looks so many days
And the souls mingle in the song,
Dear all upon it with the cry,
The whole creation groaneth—"Long
Lord, shall it be made new?"

At brightly on the new-born day
A thousand years in light to bless,
As when with the Creator's ray
Whose dwells unbroken rest,
O happy souls! O holy time
When wrong, rebellion, ceases all;
And all the bells of heaven chime
With melody and peace.

No place shall be in Paradise
For anything that maketh sin,
No evil curse the second birth,
There shall be no more curse,
Yet broken heart, O sorrow worn mourner,
The day is promised even for you,
For he that sits upon the throne
Says, "I make all things new."

We mourn the dead—but they shall wake!
The lost—but they shall be restored!
Earth's every human heart might break,
Were not that Sacred Word!
Pain's keenest sting, and heart's rejoice,
Strong God's love to promise though,
At sound of that prophetic voice,
"I will make all things new."

How long?—The ages answer, slowly,
As on the far shall roll a little
He that sits prays, "Thy kingdom come,
The new heaven and new earth!"
Earth moves—turning nearer that day,
When all the angel-hosts shall sing,
"Old things are passed away,
God hath made all things new."

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 5.

First Proposition:

Resolved, The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unconscious state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

The reader may remember that the affirmative requested the negative to name the lexicons he would accept as authority. The affirmative does not [illegible] that any answer the negative may make will destroy his theory. We will see.

The affirmative also asked the negative to write out the meanings of the words soul and spirit, that we might test them by the Word. This has not been done, but quoting one Scripture, where I quoted three close together, Elder Wilson reminds us, that in old version the margin reads "breath" so James meant "without the breath the body is dead." If Elder Wilson will now give an exhaustive list of the different meanings of the word "spirit" in the Bible I will nerve myself to deny that James meant the breath.

The affirmative would not object if the negative would boldly deny the statements made by the affirmative if they seem to be wrong. Where the affirmative claimed that one being in the image of God refers to our spiritual nature, for God is a spirit, and no one would contend that God is a huge man with legs, trunk and arms, the negative does not affirm that God is shaped like a man but his language would lead a careless reader to think that his theory leans that way, please explain. The text he quotes will show him that the image is mental for Christ is said to be the express image, while if the image were physical Christ would be more the image than John was. This proves that man has a spiritual nature. The word "person" is a faulty translation. "The character of his essence," or "the exact representation of his substance" has more literal translation while the thought is "the exact expression of himself." It words with "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." John xiv. What sense would there be in this if the likeness was physical? It could be said as well "He that hath seen an African savage hath seen God."

The bothersome fish with living souls can soon be landed if Elder Wilson will kindly give us the meanings of the word "soul" as he found it in the Bible. His reluctance betrays the weakness of the theory. Should he give it his theory is gone.

Would the Elder be willing to word his offer so as to say he would give $100 for each time I would find "immortal soul" or its equivalent? If he will do this and agree to allow a committee mutually appointed to decide whether I have done so, or not I will enter the lists. He could safely extend [illegible] "mortal soul" for "mortal flesh" or for a passage which asserts that the mind or spirit of man will not die. Elder Wilson could tell why "mortal" or "immortal" is not applied to the soul. I can try. As to death being called an enemy and yet being, to the Christian, a birth into eternal joy, may it not be that Jesus by his resurrection has abolished death's loss though He took with it's blessing life and immortality, so that he who dies in the Lord rests from his labor as with Christ, is in Paradise or the third heaven, so that to die is to be real gain? Death is yet our foe in a measure because it takes the young, the joyful ones, and fills the living with sorrow, but to the one taken it may be a birth into joy.

I would like to ask Elder Wilson what is to become of children four or five years of age, who die. Since they have not obeyed the Gospel how are they to secure immortality? Did Jesus so labor many years since? If so, is that not a case of a spirit dwelling in a body, if not how is he except in the grave, superior to other men? If the soul be dust and ash thinks, and the spirit is merely breath are you not teaching Pantheistic, etc., that there is but one substance in the universe?

With the exception of admitting the resurrection wherein does your teaching differ from that of the Sadducees?

Annihilation is unknown in nature. Not the least particle of matter, not the smallest force can be destroyed. Only the invisible has power. Matter is wholly inert. Spirit possesses power. Mental or spiritual force exists, it must persist. If physical force produced thought then the force would disappear in the mental works. Such is not the case. In the circuit of brain movement all the physical or nerve force is accounted for. If mental energy were only the highest form of physical energy, as it would be were it the product of matter, then, on the effect of death, these higher forces would be reduced or a force formed into lower forms for no physical force can be annihilated, and there would be of necessity a great influx of material energy from this source. But there is no such reappearance or addition of material energy from the event of death, and there can be no other conclusion than that the spiritual phenomena of man are the product of something other than the matter." Cressey: The Essential Man. p. 32.

I think. What is that "I"? Is it a real being? Elder Wilson may answer, the brain thinks. But the brain is not a unit, the "I" is. It is personal and abides, while the brain constantly changes. The brain covers—we will say—fifty square inches and weighs over three pounds. The mind, the "I" has no surface extension or weight. Listen to Prof. Ladd of Yale. "The mind is a real being in the highest sense in which any infinite being can be real. Indeed its claim to be considered real is more indisputable than the same claim as put forth for any material thing. It is unique. The reality of mind underlies and makes possible all knowledge of other real beings and all our assumptions as to the existence of such beings. To assume that matter is real while mind is not—when it is remembered that matter is said to be atoms—involves the wonderful paradox that the one being in whose active energizing all conceptions of all real being arise, feels justified in denying its own reality in the supposed favor of certain of its most remote and doubtful conceptions..... The assumption that the mind is a real being which can be acted upon by the brain and which can act on the body through the brain, is the only one compatible with all the facts of experience."

Physiological Psychology p. 967. John Stuart Mills says, "We may suppose that the same thoughts, emotions, volitions and even sensations which we have here, may persist or recommence somewhere else under other conditions." Does not Jesus endorse that idea when he calls his body a temple which the Jews will destroy by killing him while the "I" remains untouched? "I will raise it up," he says. John ii. 19. He represents himself as standing above the body, he calls the body "it." It was destroyed, he was not. If this does not make the "I" which is the person the real man distinct from the body and able to act when the body is destroyed it is difficult to see how language could convey the idea.

Jesus certainly intended that his disciples should understand it so. When he sent them out to preach, a duty which brought some of them to the sword, he bade them "fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. x. 28. How weak and puerile his words if they mean only that God can kill the body then in 2,000, 10,000 or 100,000 years afterwards raise it from the dust and kill it again. This is the Elder's theory. With him death or destruction means annihilation. therefore when Herod cut off James' head he was as tho' he had never been. According to that theory God could do no more than Herod, for there is nothing left. True God could raise him from the dead and cut off his head the second time, but that is clearly an insane supposition.

After slaying the apostle, Herod could not kill the soul. Herod could take the life of the body, no question about that, but was not able to kill the apostle's soul. Peter says fleshly lusts war against the soul. I Pet. ii. 11. Jesus said "My soul is exceeding sorrowful," Mark xiv. 34. The Psalmist says, "Bless the Lord, O my soul," all of which show that the soul of man differs from that of the fish and is the mind. Remember, that when a man is killed as surely he should not yet his soul may be killed by God, then and there only can you begin to understand that momentous question of our Lord. "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Matt. xvi. 26. Jesus teaches that the bodily life is not the soul he has in mind, for in the previous verse he declares that he who would save his life would lose it, while he who would lose his life for Jesus' sake should find it. That is the man who saved his earthly life by denying Christ, lost both body and soul in hell, while he who lost his bodily life by persecution saved his soul forever. Any interpretation which ignores or empties these Scriptures of their deep import ought to be suspicious to every true lover of Christ.

GEO. T. SMITH.

Reply No. 5.

O God, "thy testimonies are wonderful; therefore doth my soul keep them."

"Thy Word is true from the beginning."

"Forever O Lord, is thy Word settled in heaven."

"O how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day."

"How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea sweeter than honey to my mouth."

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."

"I hope in thy word."

When I read such beautiful passages from his Holy Book my heart involuntarily exclaims:

"Bless the Lord, O my soul!" "Thy Word is truth," and not a bundle of inconsistencies and self-contradictions like many voluminous authors.

I challenge skeptics both in and out of the church to test it. An assertion without a single proof that the Old Testament Scriptures, are a bundle of materialistic texts, which contradict themselves, and also the New, can be nothing else than attempt to destroy our reader's confidence in them, because it is utterly impossible to harmonize them with the proposition of the affirmative. I challenge an attempt to show a harmony with it. Of course this affirmative will not attempt it, because he has already placed his opinion upon the pages that they are contradictory. An admission I should hardly look for in one professing to be a Christian minister.

Eld. Smith intimates that there is a backwardness on the part of the negative to produce the original word in Hebrew and Greek for the word "soul." The burden of proof is on the affirmative, and it is my place to test the proofs. If he can find evidence in them, let him produce it, and I will examine them. If it was my duty to produce them he could have no reason to complain, because he can find them in the Christian Oracle of June 25, on the fourth column, both from the Hebrew and Greek language.

In the same paper, on the third column "living soul" (Hebrew nephesh chayyah.) is given. Please take your Bible and refer to the margin of Gen. i. 20, and in Gen. i. 30, you will find these words applied to "every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth," before man was made. Then refer to Gen. ii. 7, where man made of dust becomes a "living soul," and here we have the same nephesh chayyah applied to the living soul of the animal creation. Let every single reader take his or her Bible and look it up. Praise God I have nothing to conceal. I am after the truth and nothing but the truth.

He does not seem to like the idea that God is a person, but if he will refer to Heb. i. 3, he will find that he is discreetly called a person. Then look up the original of the passage in Young's Concordance, and you will find it is a literal person. Test it readers.

He also says: "He who dies in the Lord, rests from his labors, is with Christ."

Our readers would like to see some Bible passage to prove the assertion that the dead are "with Christ," when they die. Your assertion wont pass for proof with Bible people. I will give a plain Bible passage that will forever set at rest the thought that anyone can go to be "with Christ," this side of the resurrection. I am well aware of the fact that the affirmative has brandied the words which the Holy Ghost spoke through the prophets of old as contradictory, (see No. 1, for proof.) but I hardly think he would dare brand the words of the Son of God as contradictory. The words I am about to quote to prove that the dead cannot be "with Christ," this side of his coming again, are none other than the words of the Blessed Christ, who "spake as never man spake." Let all bow in reverence to them.

See John vii. 33, 34; viii. 21, 22; xiii. 33, 36. "Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: and as I said unto the Jews: whither I go ye cannot come; so now I say to you."

Let every single reader take his or her Bible and read carefully, and prayerfully the above passage of Scripture, and reverently believe his Holy Word. Human reasoning and philosophy appear quite insignificant when measured by his precious Word.

The affirmative still continues to cite the wisdom of the world, to prove that the mind survives the event of death. Though you may pile up the wisdom of the flesh, mountain high, it will amount to nothing, because it contradicts the wisdom which is from above. With those who have a reverence for the Holy Book, they will never brand it as contradictory, even if it does upset ideas they have previously entertained, but will submit to it as unto superior wisdom.

Now with regard to the mind surviving the shock of death, the Word of God distinctly settles that question, once for all. See Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

The affirmative quotes a few texts where the word "my soul" is found to show that the soul exists independent of the body. Among which he quotes Mark xiv. 34. "My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death." It is but fair to say that he omits the last two words from his quotation, "unto death."

Companion texts to the above are found in Isa. liii. 10, 12, "Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin." "He hath poured out his soul unto death."

I will now help the affirmative out by adding to his list of Scripture texts a few more showing where the word "my soul" occur, so that you can learn the nature of "my soul."

I Samuel xxxiv. 11, where David says to Saul, "Thou huntest my soul to take it." Was Saul trying to take David's immortal soul?

Job x. 1, "My soul is weary of life."

Job xxx. 15, "They pursue my soul as the wind."

Psa. xxx. 3, "Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave."

Psa. xxxv. 7, "They have digged for my soul."

Psa. lvii. 4, "My soul is among lions."

Psa. lxiii. 9, "That seek my soul to destroy it."

Isa. xxxviii. 17, "Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption."

Jer. xviii. 20, "They have digged a pit for my soul."

I will also add a few texts where the words "his soul" occurs.

Job xxxiii. 18, "He keepeth back his soul from the pit."

Ver. 22, "His soul draweth near unto the grave."

Psa. lxxxix. 48, "Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave."

Prov. vi. 30, "Men do not despise a thief if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry." Are we not told that "his soul" means something distinct from the body, does his body steal to satisfy his hungry soul?

Ver. 32, "He that doeth it destroyeth his own soul."

This will be sufficient for the present. I may add another list some other time. There is enough to keep the affirmative busy for some time.

His comment upon the words "I" and "i" referring to the creation of Christ were fully answered in Paper No. 1. Read it again.

I have not the space to answer his argument with regard to not being able to fill the seat of the issues. I will pay attention to that in the next paper. It is very easy to handle.

In the meantime I will give a few passages for the reader to consider, showing that the soul can be destroyed and therefore not indestructible.

Job vii. 15. "My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than life." Can an immortal soul be strangled to death?

Ezek. xiii. 19. "To slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live."

Psa. lxxviii. 50. "He spared not their soul from death."

Psa. xxxiii. 19. "To deliver their souls from death, and to keep them alive in famine."

Josh. x. 28. "He utterly destroyed them and all the souls that were therein."

Acts iii. 23. "Every soul that will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people."

Psa. xxxv. 17. "Rescue my soul from their destructions."

Eternal life is not a present possession, but a matter of hope and promise.

Titus i. 2. "In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot die promised."

A query.—Eld. Smith quotes authorities in No. 3, to show the effect of removing the frontal lobes of the brain in fish and frogs, and then remarks: "These experiments (on fish and frogs) prove that an external agent uses the brain. It is intelligent it directs the movements of the body (of the frog, etc.) which cannot move without the consent of the presiding being."

In the event of the death of the frog does the frog cease to think? What becomes of the presiding frog which directed the frog's movement in life?

W. H. WILSON.

Hell.

Dear Restitution:

As we hear so much about hell in the orthodox churches I thought I would write some on the subject.

Perhaps there has been no one question in the Bible that has had so many theories built upon it, as this. It has been represented to the people as a place of endless torment (where immortal souls go at death when they are not prepared to meet their Lord. People have been trying to serve God through fear, and that if they did not that he would torment them forever, and that he would find pleasure in it. This is not a God of love. He can fit them for that higher order of life which is in and through his Son. "He that hath the Son hath life, he that hath not the Son hath not life," no life of any kind. "The wages of sin is death." I understand death to be the negative of all life, whatever kind it may be.

We have two words to define, sheol and gehenna. 1st, sheol in the Hebrew and gehenna in the Greek being rendered three times the pit, in our common version, thirty-one times hell, and the grave thirty-one times. Any one can plainly see that this is not a place of torment. This is the hell that our Savior was in during his entombment. Acts ii. 27. "Thou will not leave my soul in hell, neither will thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption." Can any one call this a place of torment? This is the hell spoken of in Rev. xx. 14, "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire," we would not understand that one hell was cast into another, but we do not understand this to be death and the grave. This is the hell that the rich man was in, Luke xvi. 23, or the grave. The question may arise, how could he be tormented in the grave as we can not make a literal interpretation of this passage? For the reason that the rich man is represented as talking in hell. But how can this be thought to be immortal and disembodied souls when the presence of the body is so strongly implied by mention of the eyes, tongue and fingers? Then what does it teach? This is a beautiful parable. The beggar represents the Gentiles. They are carried into Abraham's bosom by baptism, Gal. iii. 27 to 29. The rich man being the Jews, living sumptuously, who would not recognize the Gentile. The gulf was not a gulf of space for the rich man and Lazarus were talking together, but a gulf of unbelief which had darkened their minds. The hell that Mark speaks of in Mark ix. 45, 46, 47, is the fire of gehenna. Compare Jer. xvii. 27. Gehenna is the Greek of what the Hebrews formerly called the "Valley of Hinnom," which lies southwest of Jerusalem, and the fire was kept burning for the purpose of burning the offalls in the Mosaic dispensation and what the fire did not burn the worm fed upon, and there is nothing in this to symbolize everlasting torment, but simply shows their utter destruction, which it is impossible to escape, or the second death. Compare with Psa. xxxvii. 10; Isa. xli. 12; Jer. x. 24; Psa. lviii. 8; Matt. xiii. 30, 40.

Submitted by a lover of truth, your brother in hope of eternal life.

Kind words are the bright flowers of earth's existence; use them, and especially around the fireside circle. They are jewels beyond price, and powerful to heal the wounded heart and make the weighed down spirit glad.

God accepts man's hearty desire, and the will for the deed, when they have not power to fulfill it.

The shows of religion however fair, will not be accepted without the substance of it.

G. A. R. At St. Paul. Special Rates via Pennsylvania Lines for National Encampment.

August 30th and 31st and September 1st are the dates upon which low rate round trip tickets to St Paul will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines, the short route through Chicago. Tickets will be good returning until September 15th, inclusive, and if deposited with the joint agent at St. Paul on or before September 15th, the return limit will be extended to include September 20th. The rates for this occasion will be exceptionally low via Pennsylvania Lines, the only system of railways over which trains run from Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Indiana to Chicago Union Station, the natural gateway from those States to the Northwest. Daily trains from Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Louisville make convenient connection at Chicago with St. Paul trains. Arrangements may be made by G. A. R. Posts or parties of friends to travel together on special cars that will go through from starting point to the Encampment without change, if the number justifies it. Information on the subject will be cheerfully furnished by representatives of the Pennsylvania Lines.—Sep. 1.

Many people regard the Bible as an old ruin. They think there may be some chambers in it which might be made habitable if it were worth the while, but they take it as a young heir takes his estate, who says: "I shall build me a modern house to live in, but I'll keep the old castle as a ruin; and so they have some scientific or literary house to live in, and look upon the Bible as a romantic ruin of the past.

All Rail Route to the Sea. To Atlantic City without Transfer via Pennsylvania Lines.

By the opening of the Delaware River Bridge the Pennsylvania Lines have become the only all rail route to Atlantic City and the seashore. Transfer of passengers and luggage at Philadelphia via Market Street Ferry and Camden is avoided, as seashore trains of Parlor Cars and Coaches depart from Broad Street Station, at which passengers from the west over the Pennsylvania Route arrive in that city. Through trains from Chicago, Indianapolis, Columbus, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and intermediate points on the Pennsylvania Lines make convenient connection with the seashore trains. Scriptural Questions Concerning the Covenants of Promise.

1. God promised to give Abraham the land of Canaan for an everlasting inheritance. (Gen. xiii, 17; xv 7). Did he ever possess it?

2. Concerning the land which God promised to Abraham, Stephen says (Acts vii. 5) "He gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot upon: and Paul also says (Heb. xi. 13) that he died in faith, not having received these promises, but having seen them afar off. Under the circumstances, how can Abraham possess the land except by a resurrection from the dead?

3. If the covenants of promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, had been fulfilled before Christ came, how was it that Mary, the mother of Jesus, and Zacharias, the father of John, should exult in prospect of their future accomplishment to Israel through the new born Christ? (Luke ii. 46).

4. If the place that Abraham was "after to receive for an inheritance" was in the sky, how was it that he took a journey thereto, saw it with his eyes, walked in the length and breadth of it, and sojourned therein with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him in the same promise? (Gen. xiii. 17; Heb. xi. 8, 9; Gen. xxiii.).

5. If the promised land can only be seen (this side of the grave) by the eye of faith, how was it that Moses ascended the hill of Pisgah to look at it? (Deut. xxxiv. 1).

6. If the promised land is not a commercial and not geographical, how was it that the Lord showed Moses all the land of Gilead unto Dan, and all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim and Manasseh, and all the land of Judah, unto the sea, and the south, and the plain of Jericho, and the city of palm trees unto Zoar, and then said, "This is the land." (Deut. xxxiv.)

7. If the good people are ferried across "death's cold flood" into the promised land, how was it that the Lord said to Moses, when he was about to die on the mount, "I have caused thee to see it with thine own eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither?" (Deut. xxxiv. 4).

8. If the promised possession of the land of Canaan to Abraham's seed referreth only to the multitudinous descendants after the flesh, how is it that Paul says (Gal. iii. 19), "He saith not to seeds as of many, but as of one—And to thy seed which is Christ?"

9. If the promise of the land unto Abraham's seed was infilled in the possession of it by the children of Israel under the law, why should Paul say (Gal. iii. 19) that the law "was added because of transgressions till the seed should come to whom the promise was made?"

10. If the promise made of God to the fathers of Israel had become old and obsolete, and gave place to something else when Christ came, why should the Apostle say that Jesus Christ became a minister of the circumcision, on account of the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers?" (Rom. xv. 8; Heb. xi. 10-15.

11. If the hope of this promise had been already fulfilled to the twelve tribes of Israel, how could Paul say "Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night hope to come?" (Acts xxvi. 7.)

12. If this same foolish hope was not Paul's hope, how could he truthfully say "For which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am hound with this chain" (Gen. xxvi. 7; xxviii. 20.

13. If what was promised to Abraham refers to something he was to receive at death, how could Micah say some thousand years after his decease "Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and his mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our father from the days of old?" (Micah vii. 20.)

14. If either Abraham, or his seed, the Christ, or his children by faith and adoption, have any of them entered into the promised patrimony, how is it that as yet they are only spoken of as "heirs" and "joint heirs with Christ?" Heb. xi. 9, Rom. viii. 17).

15. How could Abraham be as the Apostle says, "heir of the world," unless he be yet to become a lordly inheritor of the same? (Rom. iv. 13).

16. How can the promised land, or the land of Canaan, ever be any other place than that from which the Canaanites were ejected of old?—Our Rest.

How sad that multitudes of people should be so foolish as to barter the hope of immortal crowns in a world of sinless glory, for the penny toys of this poor land—put earth!

Out and In

God's grace brings out of old practices into new ones. Conversion, if it is genuine, makes a radical change of conduct. The profane lips stop swearing, and the tippling lips stop drinking. The careless sinner seeks the house of God, and the lover of pleasure finds a higher pleasure in trying to please Jesus. Old habits are sloughed off; there is a new hand at the helm, steering the life into new channels. This is the only religion worth the praying for—a religion that purges, cleanses, sweetens, and regulates the whole life. When stingy A begins to send lords of coal to the poor, and churlish B begs us to take his children on his hip and treat his poor relations kindly, when slippery C begins to practice honest dealings, and godless D sets up a family altar, there is pretty good evidence that God's grace is at work. They have come out of the old path. They have taken a new departure.

There is another coming out that is essential to all healthy and impressive piety. It is a coming out from the world into Christ's fold. The friendship of the world is enmity to God. No man can serve two masters. No man can remain in Egypt and yet enter Canaan. "Up, get thee out of this place!" said the Lord to Lot. And Jesus says: "Come out and be ye separate. Be ye not conformed to this world."

Never was there a time when distinct, clear, and decided emancipation from worldly-mindedness and sinful conformities were more demanded than now. The Bible draws sharp lines. On one side walks Christ. On the other goes "the world" on its thoughtless way toward destruction. No man can bestride the lines and walk with both. And, if we draw the frivolous, and selfish, and unconverted over to our side of the line, we must stand firmly by conscience and by Christ. It is not by yielding to the world that we can ever convert them. We must come out and stand separate, and then endeavor in loving earnestness to draw them over to Christ's side. Compromises are the devil's baits. The moment we quit the position of staunch conformity to Christ's commandments and begin to walk "one mile" with the world, it will soon compel us to "go with them twain." If we yield the "coat," they will soon rob us of "our cloak also." When Moses tried to get Hobab toward Canaan, he did not offer to stay with him. He said: "Come, go with us, and we will do thee good." We, too, must come out from the territory of sin if we would bring any souls into Christ.—Exp.

The first thing needful for a Christian is cleansing, not adorning. "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me," is the prayer of the penitent soul. And when this mighty work is wrought, and the sinner is washed and made "whiter than snow," then there will be time for adornment, and we may pray, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; and establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it."—Christian.

Half Rates to Omaha.

Via The North-Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y), August 15, 16, and 17, 1896—one fare for the round trip. On August 24 excursion tickets at very low rates will also be sold from Omaha to Denver and the famous Hot Springs of South Dakota. For full information apply to ticket agents of connecting lines or address W. A. Kniskern, G. P. & T. A., Chicago, Ill.—Aug. 8.

A recent report of the National Bible Society of Scotland shows that the number of copies of Scriptures distributed during the preceding year has been larger than that of any other year. One of the most striking facts in the report was the ingenuity of the colporters in carrying out their labors. One French agent is said to have started out on his holiday trip with a tricycle and sold 3,300 copies. Other agents in Austria and in Spain incurred danger of imprisonment and even loss of life.

Announcement.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Iowa will be held at Marshalltown, commencing Aug. 13 and continuing over Sunday Aug. 23. Brethren, begin to prepare to attend this meeting, come and let us see each other eye to eye, face to face, and feel the blessedness of clasping the hands of those of like precious faith, thus giving us a foretaste of the soon coming kingdom. We need your presence to cheer us, your counsel to guide us in the work. Are you not interested? We trust you are and hope that you will make an especial effort to attend. We advise to make this the last meeting we have ever held, come and help us to do so. Notice of rates will appear later.

O. J. ALLARD, Sec.

Restricted rates have been granted on all railroads of 1½ fare for round trip to those wishing to attend the Annual Conference of the Church of God to be held at Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 5 to 23 inclusive, on the following conditions. Tickets for going passage must be purchased Aug. 13, 14, 15, and each purchaser must secure a certificate from the agent of whom he purchases the ticket. Each purchaser will deposit his or her certificate with the secretary of the Conference on arrival, who will sign same. This will entitle the holder to ½ fare for the return trip. Each purchaser will be required to pay full fare for going passage. Now brethren, arrange to attend this meeting not later than Aug. 15. Come so as to be there on the first Sunday. Secure and procure a certificate when you purchase your ticket. Those coming over two different roads will secure certificate at each junction station. Where you purchase a ticket also get certificate for each ticket purchased. If you cannot possibly attend the meeting by Aug. 15, come later, but in all cases secure a certificate and we will do our best to have them honored.

Books and Tract List.

"THE SCRIPTURES OPENED."

Thoughts and Hints for Bible students, by Robert Ashcraft. This is a new work of 375 pages, containing a variety of lectures and short articles on important Bible subjects, exhibiting the revealed purpose of God concerning the earth and all its families, how we may become identified with those purposes, "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ" of all that God hath promised. It is believed the book will commend itself to the unprejudiced mind, and be useful leading to a more perfect understanding of and love for the Scriptures of truth. Numerous testimonials of a very satisfactory character concerning the merits of the book have been received from prominent brethren and others, and which we could not publish for lack of space. Sent by mail, postpaid, on the receipt of $1.00. Address this office.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. E. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and was suppressed. It was written by Brother Eugene Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5cts each or $3.00 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 160 excellent hymns, with music for writing the air on the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stutchman, and it appeared in a new paper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4 page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conard," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother David Howard, and printed in RESTITUTION, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the RESTITUTION of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Address, THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

A good conscience is to the soul what health is to the body; it preserves a constant ease and serenity within us, and more than countervails all the calamities and afflictions which can possibly befall us.

Scandal, to fly well, depends greatly on the length of the tail it has to carry.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, post office, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Poetry.

"He Careth for You."

My lot may be an humble one,
My daily life a round of care;
And yet this thought shall comfort give—
"The Lord Himself has placed me there."

'Tis he who chooses all my ways,
Who knows what sphere is best for me;
If trials come, or pain or ill,
He wisely orders it to be.

And shall I murmur or complain
If fancied wants are not supplied,
Or envy those who wealth attain,
Whose every wish is gratified?

Let me the rather oft recall
How many drink I've been spared,
How many snares I have known,
How ready I have always fared!

And lest on anxious care should rise,
And crave a fears my trust should shake,
This promise every doubt defies—
"I'll never leave thee nor forsake."

So may I boldly march along,
Content whatever may prevail,
And make this theme my daily song—
"His promises shall never fail!"

Hesaias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 49.

1. May ye have heard ye islands, and do ye attend ye nations; Through much time will it stand, saith the Lord. From my mother's womb hath he called my name:

2. And he hath set my mouth like a sharp sword, and beneath the shelter of his hand hath he hid me: Like a chosen arrow hath he placed me, and in his quiver hath he hid me;

3. And he hath said unto me, My bond-servant art thou, O Israel, and in thee shall I have been glorified:

4. And I have said, In vain have I toiled: For inutility and for naught have I given my strength; Therefore the judging of me is with the Lord, and my pain in the sight of my God.

5. And now in this wise saith the Lord, who moulded me from a womb as a bond-servant for himself to gather together Jakoob unto him, and Israel. I shall have been gathered together, and I shall have been glorified in the Lord and my God will be my strength,

6. And he hath said: It is a great thing for thee that thou hast been called my child, (servant born in the house) that thou mayest establish the tribes of Jakoob and return the dispersion of Israel. Lo, I have given thee for a covenant of a race, for a light of nations, that thou mayest be for salvation unto the earth's farthest limit;

7. In this wise saith the Lord who hath delivered thee, the God of Israel: May ye have sanctified the one who maketh little of his soul, the one who is being abominated by the nations, the bond-servants of the rulers: kings will see him and rulers will arise and worship him for the Lord's sake; because faithful is the Sacred One of Israel and I have chosen thee.

8. In this wise saith the Lord; In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I responded to thy cry; and I moulded thee and gave thee for a covenant of nations, to restore the earth and to inherit wasted inheritances;

9. Thee the one who saith unto those in bonds, Come forth, and unto those in the darkness be revealed. In all their ways will they have been fed, and in all their paths will be their pasturage;

10. They will not hunger nor will they thirst, nor will the hot wind smite them nor the sun; but the Merciful One will comfort them, and between fountains of waters will he lead them;

11. And I will dispose every mountain into a way and every path into a feeding-place for them.

12. Lo, these will come from afar these from the North and West and others from out a land of Persians.

13. Rejoice ye heavens and be glad, O earth; May the mountains have burst forth with rejoicing; because God hath been merciful to his laity, and the lowly of his laity hath he comforted.

14. But Sioon hath said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and the Lord hath ignored me.

15. Will a woman ignore her child or not show mercy to the progeny of her womb? But even if a woman should have ignored these, yet will not I ignore thee, hath the Lord said.

16. Low, upon my hands have I engraved thy walls and in thy sight art thou always;

17. And quickly wilt thou have been built up by those by whom thou hast been torn-down, and those who have laid thee waste will come forth from thee.

18. Lift up thine eyes round about thee and see them all; Lo, they have been gathered together and have come unto thee. As I live saith the Lord, thou wilt put them all on like a bridal undergarment, and thou wilt mantle thyself with them as doth a bride with her cosmos.

19. Because thy desolate places and the things that have gone to decay and fallen down will now be too small by reason of the people who inhabit them, and those who drink thee down will have been put far thee.

20. For thy sons will say in thine ears thy sons whom thou hast lost. The place is too narrow for me: Make for me a place that I may take up my abode:

21. And thou will say in thy heart, Who begot these for me? I forsooth was childless and a widow, and these, Who brought them up for me? Yea, I was forsaken and alone, and these of mine where were they?

22. In this wise saith the Lord, the Lord; Lo, I am lifting up my hand unto the nations, and unto the islands my concerted signal, and they will conduct thy sons in their bosom and thy daughters will they carry on their shoulders;

23. And kings will be thy foster-fathers and their female rulers thy nurses. Upon the face of the earth will they bow in homage before thee, and the dust of thy feet will they lick; and thou wilt comprehend that I am Lord, and that those who wait for me will not have been put to shame.

24. Will any one take spoils from a giant? And if any one take captive unjustly, will one have been saved?

25. Because in this wise saith the Lord, If any one shall take a giant captive, he will take spoils; moreover the one who taketh from a strong one will have been saved. And I am going to judge the trial, and I am going to deliver thy sons.

26. And those who have afflicted thee will eat their own flesh, and drink their own blood like new wine, and they will have been made drunken; and all flesh will have perceived that I am Lord, the One who hath delivered thee, and who intervened for Jacoob's strength.

CHAPTER 50.

1. In this wise saith the Lord, Of what sort was the bill of divorcement with which I sent your mother away? Or for what bonded-debt did I sell you? Lo, for your sins were ye sold and for your transgressions did I send your mother away.

2. Why is it that I came and there was no man? I called and there was no one to hearken? Is my hand not strong to rescue? Or am I not strong to deliver? Lo, with my reproof I shall dry up the sea and make rivers desert-places, and the fishes thereof will have been dried up because there is no water, and they will die with thirst.

3. I shall clothe the heavens with darkness for an undergarment and I shall make the outer-garment thereof sack-cloth as it were.

4. The Lord, the Lord is giving me a tongue for chastening that I may comprehend when it is befitting to speak a word; He hath placed me in the morning; He hath added unto me a little ear to hear;

5. And the chastening of the Lord, of the Lord openeth my ears, and I do not distrust nor gainsay.

6. My back I have given unto scourges, and my cheeks unto blows, (with the flat of the hand) and my face I have not turned away from the shame of spittings upon it,

7. And the Lord, the Lord hath become my respondent-helper; Therefore was I not confounded; but I set my face like a hard rock, and I knew that I should not be put to shame:

8. Because the one who hath justified me draweth nigh. Who is there who judgeth me? Let him withstand me straightway: Yea who is he who judgeth me? May he have drawn nigh unto me.

9. Lo, the Lord, the Lord will be my responsive-helper: Who will do me harm? Lo, ye all like an outer-garment will have waxed old and a moth will devour you.

10. Who is there among you who feareth the Lord? May he have hearkened unto the voice of his servant (one born in the household) ye who are going your way in darkness and for whom there is no light, may ye have trusted in the name of the Lord, and may ye have been stayed upon God.

11. Lo, ye are all burning with fire and making strong a flame; ye are going your way in the light of your fire and in the flame with which ye have flamed out. For my sake have these things occurred to you; in sorrow will ye have lain down to sleep.

COMMENT.

This 49th chapter alone contains the gist of the gospel and were all the rest of the Old Covenant Scriptures lost and blotted out, it would suffice to put God's imprimatur on the revelations of the New under the patronage of Jakoob and Israel the Child speaks and is spoken to and spoken of in terms so direct and unequivocal that it seems something marvelous that in the light of this chapter alone the Scribes and Pharisees of his day should not have recognized him and realized what they were doing in crucifying the "Lord of Life."

Read the 7th verse again with this thought in your mind. Then read the 8th verse and see if you can still think that the Christ was more than "the Son of God," and if he had "eternal pre-existence" "an existence co-extensive with the Father." Is it not here stated that God hath given him "for a covenant of a race, for a light of nations to be for salvation unto the earth's farthest limit?" Did he not "make little of himself?" Was he not "abominated by the nations, the bond-servants of the rulers" of his day? Why "will kings see him and rulers arise and worship him?" For his own sake or "for the Lord's sake" —and "because I have chosen thee?" Is it Jesous Christ that is addressed in the 8th verse or is it some other person? Does not God say by the mouth of the prophet "I moulded thee and gave thee for a covenant of nations to restore the earth and inherit wasted inheritances?"

Read the 20th and 21st verses again as they read in this version and see what you make out of them in the light of the New Covenant revelation. Read the 26th verse and determine in your own mind who the "thee" is therein addressed. Is it "the Christ" of Paul or some other person? I therefore repeat this chapter alone with all the rest of the "Old Testament" blotted out is enough to put God's "imprimatur" on all that Peter and Paul and James and John and Matthew and Luke claimed as true of Jesous the Christ. And this is one of the many chapters in this book that "the New Theology" tells us "Isaiah did not write"—that is "the Isaiah the son of Amos."

The 50th chapter is another portion of this book that has been turned down by the new school of scholastic critics. Read the 4th and the 5th verses and see what the prophet claims as the source of his inspiration. Then read elsewhere what is said of true prophecy, "The spirit of prophecy is the spirit of the Christ." Does not Christ himself seem to be speaking in the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th verses? Has the reader observed anything so far in our study of this book to lead him to think that another Isaiah than the one identified several times as "Hesaias the son of Amoos" is the mouth-piece of this book? I am free to confess I have not. There are remarks of style and phraseology pervading the whole book that alone would discredit any such claim.

The personality of this prophet Hesaias is even greater and more manifest than the book itself. Like Paul he impresses the reader as being "a chosen instrumentality" greater even than the work he was called to do, and it is the height of absurdity to suppose that some other unknown "chosen vessel" of God has been masquerading all these blessed ages of Christian life and light under his name as a pseudonym. Paul refers to him by name and quotes him as an authority even in some of these very chapters which have been credited by these modern critics to the other Isaiah. I for one do not believe that God does business in this way. To my mind it is the same sort of "dive-play" as Paul calls it, a dive-play of words that the "critics" of his day were playing with the Word of God. It is the same sort of scholasticism and interpretation as that which has made "Jehoiakim called Joiu" a mere mythical personage in spite of the fact that his genealogy is clearly given even in the name—middle of the Com. Ver.—he being fifth from Habraam in the line Hesaus (Esau) and a nephew of Mooses (Moses) by marriage as well as being so prominent a public personage as the second king of Edoom, the successor of Balak who hired Balaam to curse Israel. For evidence see 36th chap. Genesis, 2nd chap Exodus, Numbers 16th chap. Job's interview with Mooses in the wilderness, 1st chap. of 1st Chron.—kings of Edom.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Rev. xii. and xiii.

The above two chapters have been the subject of endless discussion. In order to a correct understanding of the symbols in said chapters, we must look to the writings of the Hebrew prophets, and pay strict attention to the chronology of the events shown to the writer. Our knowledge of the writings of the Hebrew prophets measures our ability to interpret the symbols of the Revelation. The man who has studied the book of the Revelation cannot fail to perceive that the book contains a number of chains of events, generally starting in the first century of the Christian era, and reaching down the stream of time to or beyond the return of Christ to this earth and in chapter xi. 15, we have the account of the sounding of the seventh angel, and the kingdoms of this world it is said, are become the kingdoms of our Lord; and of his Christ. And in verse 18, the time to judge the dead, and to give rewards to his servants, and to destroy them that corrupt the earth. Now I think it is plain to be seen that after this there will be no dragon to persecute the woman; no beast to come up out of the sea, and make war on the saints for 1260 years. Literal time in connection with symbols is like the legs of the lame, unequal. It would spoil the symetrical proportions of the vision, and would be out of harmony with all the examples given in the Word of God. For an instance I refer to Dan. iv. 24. The king was to be with the beasts, until seven times would pass over him, and Josephus says it was 7 years. Literal time in connection with individual man, but symbolic with a symbolic woman.

The first symbol is the heaven where the woman appeared, not the heaven where God is, but the ruling power of the earth. Dan. xxxii. 1, and Isa. i. 2. The, woman that appeared in the heaven is without exception as far as I know understood to be the Church of God, the espoused of Christ, and the prospective Bride. But at what time did she appear in the heaven. The chronology of the event is important to the understanding of the vision. At what time was she clothed with the sun and the moon put under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars? The answer is, in the first centuries of the gospel dispensation, when the types and shadows of the law met their fulfillment in Christ, and the gospel dispensation, and like the moon shown only with a borrowed light from the sun having risen, that is the gospel dispensation having come, the types and shadows like the moon disappear.

It could now be truly said, "The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth." I John ii. 8. Yes. The light of the glorious gospel of Christ. 2 Cor. iv. 4. The publishing of which gospel was the object to be attained by Christ in his patiently treading his twelve apostles. Hence, their appearance as twelve stars on the head of the symbolic woman. And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. Verse 2. The image was familiar to the Jewish prophets. See Isa. xxvi. 17-19, and Gal iv. 19. Where the Apostle Paul says, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you." The same image is used in Isa. lxvi. 7, but does not refer to the same woman, or at least not at the same time. The one in Isaiah is delivered before her pain came. But this one has travail and pain before delivery. The early church received the commission to preach the gospel to all the world, and in preaching the gospel, they preached Christ, as Paul says in Rom. viii. 10. If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin. Now Christ was in this woman and like Paul. She was in pain and travail to bring him forth to the world, or that he may be formed in those who listened to her teaching. So this symbolic woman brought forth the Christ in a spiritual sense. The very Christ that was to rule all nations with a rod of iron Psa. ii. 9. The same one that was taken up to God, and to his throne. As Herod tried to destroy Christ in his infancy, so did the dragon as soon as he was brought forth by this symbolic woman. Verse 3. The great red dragon having seven heads and ten horns. The seven heads and ten horns identify the dragon with Rome. Now if we can prove the chronology of the dragon, it will aid us materially in establishing the time of the woman in the heaven. Because the woman appears prior to the appearing of the dragon. In reference to the dragon, I will quote from the notes of Albert Barnes. The general interpretation, which refers this vision to Rome, may receive confirmation from the fact, that the dragon was at one time the Roman standard, as is represented by the subjoined engraving from Montfaucon. Ammianus Marcellinus (xvi. 10) thus describes this standard:—The dragon was covered with purple cloth, and fastened to a pike gilt and adorned with precious stones. It opened its wide throat, and the wind blew through it; and it hissed as if in a rage, with its tail floating in several folds through the air. The dragon was first used as an ensign near the close of the second century of the Christian Era, and it was not until the third century that its use had become common; and the reference here, according to this fact, would be to that period of the Roman power when this had become a common standard, and when the applicability of this image would be readily understood.....The eagle was the common Roman ensign in the time of the republic, and in the earlier periods of the empire, but in later periods the dragon became also a standard as common and as well known as the eagle. In the third century it had become almost as notorious as the eagle among the Roman ensigns, and is in the fourth century noted by Prudentius, Vegetius, Chrysostom, Ammianus. In the fifth by Claudian and others.

Editor Restitution:

I thought I would write you a few lines for I always wrote for my dear old mother, but she fell asleep in Jesus five weeks ago this morning. Oh, how thankful were her children and grandchildren for your kindness to her in sending THE RESTITUTION, that cheered her in her lonely years, for I know she enjoyed hearing her paper read as she always read it herself until the last, she was too sick. I always read the letters for her and when she would see letters from her old friends it did her so much good. The last one that cheered her up was from Bro. Lott Clover, who spoke so dearly of our dear old Father, P. Plummer. My mother lived with me, and I am so lonely. I am her youngest. I was never away from her but three months, but my prayers are that I may be as faithful as she was, and when I fall asleep I will be as ready to go as she was. I trust I will be able to take the paper as long as you have sent it to her, but I pray the Lord will come before that time and all the faithful ones get home home

Your Sister in Christ,
MRS CLORA BROWN.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed order for $1.50 for my paper an other year as I can't do without it. It is all the preacher we have here, that is on gospel preacher We have preaching once a month such as it is, but it don't fill the bill. I wish some of our preachers could come and give us a few sermons next fall or winter. I believe some good might be done here, but every one is poor so I could not offer anything to pay any one for coming. We are back in the timber about thirty miles north of Spokane, but easy reached by train on the Great Northern R. R. If any one thinks they can come they might drop me a line, and I will give them all the information I can. My address is West branch, Washington.

Yours for the truth.

HIRAM CORDELL.

Dear Restitution:

Brethren in the one hope and faith of the gospel, please find enclosed two dollars to pay on THE RESTITUTION, which has been due since February and give me credit for fifty cents on the next years subscription, for I want the paper if the Lord don't come to, cheer me on through this world of sorrow. For Moses tells us that the days of our years are three score and ten, and if by reason of strength they be four score, yet their strength is labor and sorrow and it is soon cut off and we fly away. I have lived out the allotted time and am alone in the one faith of the gospel in this vicinity. We have no preaching of the gospel here except it be through mistakes. There is an Advent Church at Bloomington Valley, Pa., which I attend. They have preaching every two weeks. But I get so hungry for the true bread of life, I almost faint by the way. There use to be John W. Niles who came occasionally and sounded the Word of truth but alas he has gone to the Sabbath keepers into the mire again, so I am alone. There is a Bro. Saterlee who lives about twelve miles from me. I see him and Bro. Jesse Ross about twenty-miles away at McKane, Pa. I see them occasionally. If we could have some good man come here and set the truth before the people, it seems as though there might be some good done in this vicinity. The Advents of B. V. are mass backs, gospel hardened, don't know as there could be an impression made on them. But there is a promise if we cast the bread on the waters it will return after many days. We have a church edifice here in Randolph which I think would be a good opening for the preaching of the good news of the kingdom. There are many here in this neighborhood who have never heard it. I had rather go into a place where they have never heard anything than to go into a Crisis' Advent community. I have been thinking of making an effort this fall to try to get some one to come here. I think that it would be a good opening here. The church belongs to the neighbors and is free to all respectable persons regardless of doctrine. Free Methodists are using it now every two weeks. they have just closed a log grove meeting. But in the meeting have not told any one what they must do to be saved. I think if some good preacher would tell the people what was necessary to be saved there might be some good done in the name of the Lord here. I pray God to send us some one who is sound in the Faith over to help us. If Bro. Hatch or Adams who are strangers to me could come some time this fall it might be a blessing to this community. I don't want any one unless they be a workman rightly dividing the Word of Truth. I have been thinking of writing Bro. Hatch, but have not done it yet. If you know of an opening of this kind please let me know, and it will oblige your Brother in the one faith and hope of the gospel.

Yours truly.

IRA R. HALL.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Life and Death.

"Does death mean life?
And is it true,
That when we die
We live? That when we nothing know,
And while we lie in earth's cold ground
A part called 'soul'
Is gone to endless bliss or woe?

No! death means death.
For sin all die
And from it, ground
Could never rise, had not the Lord
A gift bestowed
Through Christ His Son,
On all who hear
Believe, love and obey his Word

That gift is life—
Eternal life.
Oh that we all
When he shall come may wait to be
Of that great host
That Jesus bought
Through conquering death.
And with him live eternally."—L. C.

BISHOP HALL said that those who do not give till they die, show that they would not then, if they could keep it any longer.

YOUNG man, young woman, learn to say no! and mean it. It will be of more use to you than to be able to read Greek or Latin, or even to be an all-around scholar.

SAYS LYTTON: "Nothing is so contagious as enthusiasm: it is real allegory of the lute of Orpheus; it moves stones, it charms brutes. Enthusiasm is the genius of sincerity, and truth accomplishes little without it."

HORACE MANN said that just in proportion as a man becomes Christ-like, he passes out of the region of theorizing of system-building, and bickering service, into the region of beneficent activities. It is well to think well; it is divine to act well.

IT was Carlyle who said, "Cast forth thy act, thy word, into the ever-living, ever-working universe. It is a seed-grain, that cannot die unnoticed to-day, it will be found flourishing as a banyan grove,—perhaps, alas as a hemlock-forest after a thousand years."

"EVERY word of God is pure." Prov. xxx. 5.

"Search the Scriptures." John v. 39.

"If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." 1 Peter iv. 11.

"In doctrine showing uncorruptness." Titus ii. 7.

FAITH alone will not save in business any more than it will save a soul from death, and crown him with life. A man may believe that if he puts his money into a certain enterprise, he will realize a good interest, but will have to put the money into it. His faith will bring no interest.

WILLIAM PENN said: "But so it is, that man minds nothing less than what he should most mind; and the spirit to enquire into his own being, its origin, duty and end, choosing rather to dedicate his days to gratify the pride, avarice and luxury of his heart, as if he had been born for himself, or had given himself being, and so not subject to the reckoning of a superior power."

THE favor of God has been compared to an arrow which stands the firmer, the more weight is laid upon it; its sufficiency at least, will be the more evident the more closely we see the promise, "My grace is sufficient for thee." With the well ever full and overflowing, our vessels need never be empty. Whatever our needs may be we need not fear to draw too much, or hope too much.

STATISTICS show that crime, especially murder, is more prevalent in the United States than in any other country on the globe. In 1895 not more than one in 74 murderers were legally executed. The total number of executions being 132, and of lynching 171. This is a most unenviable distinction for the United States,—but it proves the fallacy of the claim that education would do what preaching of the popular gospel has failed to do. The educational claim has been nowhere so thoroughly tested, and found wanting. No one who has given heed to the sure Word expects any permanent change for the better till Jesus comes. Worse and worse is the thing written of the moral condition of the world in the time of the end. This is a finger post no one need to misread.

AN English photographer says he recently took a photograph of a child who appeared in good health, and had a clean skin. The negative showed the face to be thickly covered with an eruption. Three days afterward the child was thickly covered with spots due to prickly heat. The camera had seen and photographed the eruption three days before it was visible to the naked eye. It is said that another is recorded where a child showed spots on his portrait which were invisible on his face a fortnight previous to an attack of smallpox.

THE opening exercises of the centennial celebration in Cleveland were held at the Central Armory on Sunday July 19. The vast building was crowded to its utmost capacity. Religious aspects and influences were discussed by a Methodist minister, a Catholic priest, a Jewish rabbi; and an Episcopal bishop opened by prayer. The main feature or point of the addresses was, "religion." They did not seem to care much of what kind it was, so that it was religion, all their differences for the time being were kept in the background.

IT is said by those who ought to know, that when a person is lying down the heart beats about ten strokes less a minute, than when in the upright position. That means a saving of 600 strokes per hour, or about 5000 heart beats during the eight hours spent in bed. The heart pumps six ounces of blood with each beat. It therefore lifts 30,000 ounces less of blood in a night of eight hours spent in bed, than when in an upright position. The blood flows just so much more slowly through the veins when one is lying down, therefore it is extra coverings to supply the warmth usually furnished by circulation are needed.

READER, is it any wonder that God examines the gift of his kingdom to those who believe the promise of it? Would it not be strange for him to favor an everlasting kingdom of glory and peace and righteousness on earth upon the people who would not believe that he was to set up such a kingdom on earth, after swearing by his own existence to do it? Would it not be wonderfully strange for him to hand that kingdom over to people who all through life sighed to wing their flight to spheres they know nothing about,—whether or no it were a suitable place for them? Would it not seem almost ridiculous to think that God would place the government of his universal and everlasting kingdom in the hands of those who all through life schemed to evade God's law and live by their own? Would they be likely to teach others to be loyal to him? Say, Will you think over these questions, reader?

JESUS said to his disciples, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke ix. 22. Here is evidence that Jesus denied himself: did not do what he wished to do. Paul's words in the 15th of Romans are in harmony with this, "For even Christ pleased not himself." Our Lord's words in Luke also advertize us of the fact that self denial will have to be exercised daily: and that taking up the cross daily would only be following him. And it is evident from the 24th verse that it would be a matter of life or death, for them to follow him,—and the 25th verse intimates that their discipleship would materially affect their business prospects,—nothing was kept from them, and they had every opportunity to correctly count the cost of an espousal of his cause. The 26th verse shows how very unpopular his words would be, and that reproach would be one of the crosses they would have to take up; and warns them that he will be ashamed of them when he appears in glory, if they are ashamed of his words.

The Question Drawer.

In reply to M. D. S. we would say that no event in the life of a woman is so fraught with possibilities of joy or grief as the one of which you speak. A failure in that would be one of the worst possible failures,—and if a success, nothing else under heaven can so completely crown your life with joy. Taking it for granted that you know and will do the will of God as revealed to his children, and will marry only in the Lord; you will allow us to say, that it is very doubtful if the sun will always shine. Are you prepared for dark and cloudy days? Do you realize that this is a life matter? That nothing you may learn respecting him you love, except the knowledge that he has broken his marriage vows will give you the right to claim your freedom before God and the law? Incorruptibility, so often pleaded by worldlings, is not available for you. Three times a day, month after month, and year after year you will perhaps have to sit face to face at the same table, either in tenderest love, or in cool indifference, or in growing aversion. You will have time to learn every fault and weakness in his character—somethings, perhaps, may come to you as a startling revelation. Of course you see no fault in him now; but you may find some day that he is in some respects a poor, frail, erring man. At such times your peace of mind will largely depend upon your love. Do not think that your happiness is assured because he loves you. You may need love that "suffereth long and is kind," "seeketh not her own," and "never faileth." Yes; dear one, illusions will soon vanish, and you will soon learn with a throb of joy that you have found a partner so kind, and true and tender, or in a horror of darkness your hopes will be blighted forever. Make as sure as you can of the fact that your love is what he appears to be, and sincerely loves you for your own sake; and then make sure that you love him enough to carry you through the trials from peevishness, and unreasonableness, and selfishness and onward more serious points. If there be grave doubts about this, we advise you to halt where you are. If you believe you can meet these trials without feeling that your love costs too much, other things being equal, you can give him your heart, your hand, yourself.

For Our Children.

Mother's Boy.

Two little slippers, soft, worn,
Two little hands with rosebud palms,
Two bright blue eyes, in whose clear depths
The brook's own sunshine laughs and leaps;
Two little ears like pink-white shells;
A snowy chin where a dimple dwells;
A dainty nose; two peach-bloom cheeks;
A red-tipped mouth that soft words speaks;
A brow reflecting that within,
Untouched by sorrow, unmarked by sin;
A crown of curls whose tracories hold
The chestnut's warmth and the sunbeam's gold;
A rounded body; two rosy hands;
A voice like notes from cathedral hymns;
Two restless feet and a laugh of joy,
What is the total?—Mother's boy.

The Story of Israel Beyond the Sea. No. 55.

THE SOJOURN AT SINAI.

What a long vacation we have been having! It has given the grown people a little better chance to talk, while we have been resting, but we must get back to our lessons now, for we do not know how soon Jesus may come, and we want to learn all we can so that we may be ready for him. Our time is not thrown away studying these dear Old Testament stories, for Jesus is in them all, and without a clear understanding of them, we cannot understand him nor the place he fills in the plan of redemption.

I think we have a pretty good idea of how the court of the tabernacle was formed, we must now study out the Tabernacle itself, and learn how it is connected with the dear Savior, and our promised home in the new earth state. How shall we get the size of Tabernacle? Let us see; we will begin at the 15th v. of the 26th chapter of Exodus. "And thou shalt make boards for the Tabernacle of shittim wood standing up. Ten cubits shall be the length of a board." We must stand the boards upon their ends, and as they are ten cubits long, this will give us the height of the Tabernacle. If we want it in feet, we must multiply 25,025 (the number of Herschell's inches in a cubit) by 10 and divide by 12. What does that give us? 20¾ feet! What a high building! Most authors make the boards fifteen feet long. What great boards they were! We cannot help wondering how the workmen managed to split them out. They certainly had no saw-mills. The black acacia is thought to be the shittim tree of the Bible. It is a thorny tree, and looks much like our locust. Its wood is hard and fine-grained, and when polished is very beautiful. Mr. Randall, who wrote "The Handwriting of God in Egypt, Sinai and the Holy Land," says there are no acacias in the valleys near Sinai now, from which such great planks could be cut. But things must have been very different when the Israelites were camping there, from what they are now. The valleys were greener, the trees larger and finer.

Can you study out the length of the Tabernacle? How many boards were there on a side? 18 v. "Twenty boards on the south side, southward." 20 v. "On the north side, there shall be twenty boards." Well, as each board is a cubit and a half wide, we have 30 cubits. Turn this into feet in this way, 25,025 x 30 equals 750. 750 divided by 12 equals 62 and 5 twelfths. This is the length.

22 v. There are six boards at the west, and beside the corner boards. Counting these, there are eight boards, each of the boards, like those at the sides, are a cubit and a half wide, eight cubits and eight half cubits make twelve cubits, or twenty-five feet.

Mr. Milnam uses a cubit that measures 24 inches, and gives us 17½ feet for the width of the tabernacle and fifty-two and a half feet for its length. Mr. Smith uses the 18 inch cubit, so his measures are still shorter.

But how is it that most authors of the Bible get the Tabernacle but ten cubits broad. We do not know. Perhaps we shall find out by and by. It is hard for the wisest men to determine just how it was, on account of there being so many different cubits used by the Hebrews.

We think the sacred cubit the one most likely to have been used in sacred buildings, so we have taken it in preference to the other two.

We want to know how the boards of the tabernacle were put together. Each board had two sockets of silver on one edge; on the other edge were two tenons. Do you understand what sockets and tenons are? A socket is usually a hole cut out in a piece of timber for another piece to fit into. You know what a sock is,—the man's foot fits nicely into the sock. But instead of mortising a hole in the board for the tenon of the next board, the Israelite workmen set pieces of silver on the boards, shaped perhaps something like a shut-ended thimble. Into these thimbles the tenons dropped, just as the piece of timber drops into the mortised hole. To hold the boards more firmly in place, rings of gold were fastened to them, and bars of shittim wood overlaid with gold, were run through the rings. There were five bars to a side and five for the end. The middle bar had to be long enough to reach the whole length of a side, or 62 and 5 twelfths feet. It would take a full tree to make such a pole.

The fine linen curtains, embroidered with figures of cherubim, in bright colors of blue and purple and scarlet, looped to form the Tabernacle. They made the top, and the ceiling down within, like beautiful tapestry. There were ten of these curtains looped together in fives, by fastenings or hooks of gold. Their length was 28 cubits, or 58½ feet. The breadth was 4 cubits, or 8⅓ feet. Multiply the breadth by ten, the number of curtains, and you have forty cubits, or 83 and 5 twelfths feet. As the curtains were put on with the ends toward the sides of the building, they would reach over both at the front and the back, at least 10½ feet.

Above, to protect the beautiful building from the weather, was a cover of cloth made of goats hair; over this, one of ram's skins that had been colored just such a red as your child eyes love to look upon. And above all the coverings, still another of badger, or perhaps of seal-skins. The badger is not found in Bible lands. The Heb. word tachash, rendered badger means a color, either black or sky-blue, and not an animal. But the Arabic word "dlachash," or "tachash" denotes a dolphin, and may refer to a seal. So says Mr. Smith.

There were eleven of the woolen curtains. They were coupled together by fives and sixes, with fastenings of brass. The odd curtain was doubled at the eastern end of the Tabernacle, and half a curtain hung down at the western end. A cubit of length hung over each side. The curtains were thirty cubits long, or 62½ feet. This would leave us 57½ feet. If the Tabernacle was 25 feet in width, we shall have to account for 32½ feet of these curtains;—how can we do it? It is a new study to us, and we may get every thing wrong. Some one must tell us if we do. There must have been a ridge pole, though it is not spoken of in this chapter, nor in Ex. xxxvi. Mr. Smith says, "All tents have had a ridge, from the days of Moses, down to the present day."

The water would have run in, if the curtain had been stretched flat, and their length would necessarily have been much less.

A pretty vail hung on four pillars that were overlaid with gold, divided the Holy from the Most Holy Place. Another handsome hanging formed the door of the tent. It was fastened to five pillars.

AUNTIE WISE.

Fools hate wisdom, so wisdom seeks better company.

Holding the Rope

A ship, on her way to Australia, met with a terrible storm, and sprung aleak. As evils seldom come alone, a little while after another tempest tossed her. There happened to be a gentleman on board, of the most nervous temperament, whose garrulous tongue and important air were calculated to alarm all the passengers. When the storm came on, the captain, who knew what mischief may be done by a suspicious and talkative individual, managed to get near him with a view to rendering him quiet. The gentleman, addressing the captain in a tone of alarm, "What an awful storm! I am afraid we shall go to the bottom, for I fear the leak is very bad."

"Well," said the captain, "as you seem to know it, and perhaps the others do not, you had better not mention it to any one, lest you should frighten the passengers and disparit my men. Perhaps as it is a very bad case, you would lend us your valuable help, and then we may possibly get through it. Would you have the goodness to stand here and hold hard on this rope; pray do not leave it but pull as hard as you can till I tell you to let it go."

So our friend clenched his teeth, and put his foot firmly down, and kept on holding the rope with all his might, till he earnestly wished for a substitute.

The storm abated; the ship was safe, and our friend was released from his rope-holding. He expected a deputation would bring him the thanks of all the passengers; but they were evidently unconscious of his merits; for it is too often the case that we forget our greatest benefactors. Even the captain did not seem very grateful; so our hero ventured, in a roundabout style, to hint that such valuable service as his, having saved the vessel, ought to be rewarded at least with some few words of acknowledgement: when he was shocked to hear the captain say:

"What, sir; do you think you saved the vessel? Why, I gave you that rope to hold to keep you engaged, that you might not be in such a feverish state of alarm."

Some careful, troubled, anxious, officious souls may be able to see the moral and apply it.

Definition of an Immortal Soul.

In a volume of Gospel sermons, so called, published in New York, without the owner's name, is one sermon on the value of the soul. In defining the soul the writer says: "The soul, what is it? It is a simple substance, without form or parts. It has no outside, no inside, no length, no breadth; the body may be blown into a thousand parts, and the soul remain unhurt." Let him who can, give a better definition of nothing.—J. S. White, World's Crisis.

Two ancient steles have been found in a village near Nerab, not far from Aleppo, Syria, which is mentioned in the list of the conquests made in Syria by Thothmes III. Both of these steles bear inscriptions in old Phenician characters. The language is Aramaic but full of archaic forms, which will prove to be of the greatest interest for the history of the evolution of the Semitic languages. One inscription says, "This is the tomb of the priest Nasorkin, priest of Sahar-en-Nerab." Suhar means the moon, whose chief temple was at Haran. Other gods mentioned were Shamash (the sun), Nikal and Nusk. The other inscription has the name of Agbar, also priest of Sahar-en-Nerab, who states that having been righteous before his god his days were prolonged, so that he saw the fourth generation and lived over a hundred years. He adds that he had been laid in the grave with only a white cloth cloth, but no vases of copper and silver; and, therefore, no one should disturb his rest.

Report of Meeting.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I will write a few lines to tell you of the good meetings we have enjoyed here at St. Paul, Nebraska. Bro. Amos Adams came here on Friday, July 10th, and stayed eleven days. During that time he preached seventeen discourses, and baptized two into the name of Jesus the Christ. How we love to hear the truth preached in its purity, and to know that there are a few who are willing to accept it. Bro. Adams is an earnest worker in the Master's vineyard, and preaches the truth so clearly, that we do not see how any one can turn from it, and believe fables that are being taught in the world today. Let us be thankful that we have received the truth, and may we continue faithful to the end, and at last receive the prize.

Announcement.

The Eleventh Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at the City Park, in St. Paul, commencing, the Lord willing, on Friday September 11th; and will continue for ten days. We give one and all a cordial invitation to come and enjoy some blessed meetings with those of like precious faith. Come prepared to do all in your power to help make the meetings both pleasant and profitable. St. Paul is near the center of the State, being just twenty-two miles north of Grand Island, so that all will have an equal chance to attend. We would like for all who can to bring tents; but to those who cannot, we say, "Come any way and we will see that you are cared for in the best manner possible." There will be a boarding tent at the park so that the sisters need not spend their time in cooking, but can enjoy the meetings. Yet we would say, "Bring your provisions with you, if you wish. You can dispose of them to the committee appointed for buying provisions, who will credit you for them. This will go towards paying your board at the tent." Once more we ask you to come and tarry with us for a short time, and help us in the Master's work. Let us serve him while we may, that we may be ready to meet him when he comes in glory to set up his kingdom on the earth. Brethren and Sisters, this time is not far distant. Let us strive to be faithful; and when the time comes, may we one and all enter into the rest that is prepared for the people of God.

OMAHA PROGRAM.

7 A. M. Reading of Scripture and prayer.
7:30 A. M. Breakfast.
9 A. M. Bible Reading or Social Meeting.
10 A. M. Business on week days and Sunday School on Sunday.
12 M. Dinner.
2:30 P. M. Public Preaching.
6 P. M. Supper.
8 P. M. Public Preaching.

The intervening hours between 8 A. M. and 6 P. M. will be occupied in the Reading of Essays, in Prayer and Social meetings, or in some way that will be beneficial to all. Come and we are sure that you will feel well repaid for so doing.

Your Sister in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

We wish to say to the brethren of the Church of God, of Southern Kan., and throughout the State that a Conference will convene at Bitter Creek, Sumner Co., Kan., on Friday evening before the second Sunday in Sept., and continue over Sunday, and as much longer as the interest may demand. Brethren, this meeting is yours. Will you come to enjoy it? There will be some important business to attend too. Should any of you have a pet hobby please hitch him at the first outside post. We do not want to have any wild mustangs loose in the crowd of people. Come together for religious worship, let us have peace, let us have a meeting commendable to the people of God. Times are very hard; but the Lord is liable to come, even if times are hard, whether we have a dollar or not, let us get ready, all make an extra effort to try and be at this meeting. Bro. L. E. Conner has promised to be with us, if it is possible. We would like to have as many come as possibly can come to do so. You may think times are too hard, but this is a burden all must bear in order to share the joys derived from it. This meeting will be held at the Southeast corner of Sumner Co., one-half mile south of Bitter Creek post office, Geuda Springs 7 miles north is the nearest railroad station. Any coming by rail may address me at Geuda Springs, or Bro. J. M. Vickery, Arkansas City, telling us when to meet you and we will be pleased to wait on you. This may be the last gathering in this life, so then come. Come one, come all.

Golden Rule.

The blessed Golden Rule of our Savior, exemplified in every-day life, in thought, word and deed; removes all selfishness, all oppression, the spirit of caste, all hatred, variances, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, and causeth the earth to blossom as the rose. "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

"This is the sum of every part,
To love our God with all our heart:
That we should love our neighbor too,
And what we wish from him, should do.

'Tis short and sweet, and good and plain,
Easy to learn and to retain:
May grace divine our souls renew,
And 'twill be sweet to practice too."

Poetry.

Behold He Cometh.

The judgment herald's voice sublime
Proclaims aloud in every clime
Messiah's reign, and closing time.

Startled, the virgin bands awake;
And oil, and lamps, and vessels take,
And Babylon in haste forsake.

Time-serving, pleasing watchman cry
"Peace and safety are nigh.
And, brethren, pass the warning by.

All, since the fathers passed away,
Remains as at earth's natal day:
No change is coming,—so they say.

Though in death's cloudy lists enrolled,
The proud oppressor he once extolled,
Is poverty's heart-chord he sold.

Crimes, such as God on earth buried deep
Amidst the rock, and mould, and clay,
'Till wrong 'gainst heaven from heaven leap.

The dust-crowned sun,—the cosmic magnet,—
The rolling stars,—the ocean's motion,—
All cry "Time as such shall be no more!"

Fire,—earth's rule in heart's core,
The lay the times are chanting, clear,
The sacred fig-tree buds anew:

On eastern plains empires wane,
The Sacred Mountain "Crown claim:
Let Zion's saints hail Jesus' reign!

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 5.

First Proposition:

Resolved: The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

In studying a theory which is erroneous, it is instructive to note the causes which have led to this mistake. We conclude the theory of the negative to be erroneous because not a single reason has been offered in its defence.

We are commanded to give a reason for our hope, but Elder Wilson abandoned that ground without a struggle. All that God teaches through Nature, through the intellectual and moral nature of man, all the concurrent testimony of the best minds among all nations, he yields in order to accept the philosophy of materialism which has a slender and wavering influence among men of thought.

Whatever we accept because the Scriptures say so we accept on authority, but, by reason, therefore we are [illegible] saying that not a single reason has been given in support of the view held by our kind hearted opponent. From the vast volume of Nature we have read a few of the many proofs that man's soul or spirit is a real being, totally unlike the body and using the body as the instrument for reaching the physical world. We have gleaned a little from the Scriptures to corroborate the conclusions of reason, now as we come for fuller proof, it will be instructive to note the causes of error which, as by paths, have led our fathers away from the truth.

There seem to be three sources of error.

1. Definitions. Daniel Webster was asked how he obtained such clear ideas. He answered "By attending to definitions."

Ernesti is a standard authority on interpretation. He gives two requisites of a good interpreter.

(a). A right perception of the meaning of words

The difficulty with the negative lies here. When the affirmative asked for the names of dictionaries and commentaries accepted as authority by the negative the answer was destructive. For if he named the English, Greek and Hebrew lexicons and the commentary he uses, it would be easy to show that his authorities condemn his system. On the contrary if he said, what is true, that he does not go by the authorities, his case is worse shipwrecked. That ism in the minds of all not hopelessly wedded to the theory.

Truth is our most valuable requisition. It frees us from bondage to error and often from wrong practice. Truth like iron, must be dug and refined. On the anvil between opposing minds truth is forged. This is the discipline under which we are placed by a wise Creator. In the Lake Superior region you can pick up iron ore but it is worthless for practical use. Steel rails again are worth forty dollars a ton, while steel hair springs command four thousand a pound. Lexicons and commentaries are the final and costly result of centuries of earnest and conscientious research by towering intellects. It is a rebuke to intelligence and to God to suppose that this theory is true. First, to intelligence. It says that a hasty and superficial reading of the Scriptures by a few brethren without pretension of learning, is sufficient to pick up the truth which has eluded the deepest writers, and students of the Word.

Secondly, to God. He gave a revelation to men. A revelation is intended to be understood. What a rebuke to his wisdom if he gave a volume which is misunderstood in this regard, by four hundred million professing Christians, comprising the brightest minds, the most consecrated hearts, the tallest intellects of our race. Only a few have understood God and have the proper definition of such words as "soul" and "spirit." It is safe to say that the common-sense of good Christian people will shake at such assumptions.

It is the courage which truth takes upon men when we are sure that they are the only ones who have her that she hides from them. Not of opinionated, not the ones who cut themselves off from the intelligent majority of devout Bible students, but the humble who are always ready to cast aside error and advance in the knowledge of the Lord receive blessing from the truth which glorifies and exalts.

When the negative proposed to show that when man became a living soul, the proper meaning is a dying soul he expected to use an imperfect definition. The poverty of language in early times compelled the use of words in different senses. Elder Wilson can show that fish, beasts, men have souls that they die, by this he would prove that man became a dying soul. That is not deep enough. Is the soul of man the same in its origin and nature as that of the beast? Where the word soul is used of man does it not sometimes mean "person" so we read of a dead soul where the idea is that of a dead person. The deeper meaning of the Word will appear when we analyze man's nature.

2. Another error is exposed by the Apostle Paul. Writing of the Old Testament and the New he says (2 Cor. iii. 6) "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." It is by sticking close to the letter that most of the proof is made out for this theological dogma. We wish to fairly examine every passage of Scripture but we shall save the readers time if we can group together quite a number.

The book of Psalms is a book of poetry. What do you think of the ability of an interpreter of the Scriptures who takes the poetical flights and hyperbole of the poet king as literal as the ten commandments?

Longfellow in the arsenal of Springfield wrote a poem,

> "I hear the sound of war come in the distant ages. Suppose one to understand that literally and to marvel at the poet's wonderful ear sight. It would be no more strange than to take David's poems as literally true. David calls God a rock, a fortress, a buckler, a horn, represents him as living in a temple, breathing smoke, vomiting fire till the coals are kindled, lowering the heavens and riding upon a cherub. All this in a few verses of the 18th Psalm. Then in v. 42 David says of his enemies "I beat them small as dust before the wind." Any one who takes these expressions as literal takes the letter which killeth and misses the spirit which makes alive.

So prophecy often assumes poetical forms. When the affirmative shows that the Old Testament is contradictory both to itself and to the truth the negative will promptly escape the force of some declarations by putting them into that class. Here is one, the funeral sermon of a wicked man: "Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee, even for the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations. All they shall speak and say unto thee Art thou also become weak as we art thou become like unto us." Isa. xiv. 9, 15, the sermon continues to the 20th verse, it points out the different destiny of the body and of the spirit of the dead king, it represents them whom he had oppressed and slain as taunting him.

This description, in such minuteness, of the fate of body and soul meets all the texts quoted by the negative to show that man is unconscious. Those texts speak from the standpoint of the speaker, of the earth; and of course, so far as we can judge, earth, simply by ordinary observation, the dead know not anything, but in this memorable sermon the Holy Spirit, whose eye pierces all things, shows Isaiah the unseen world and the reception of the wicked king.

In the preceding chapter Isaiah had prophesied that Babylon should be destroyed and should never be inhabited, not even the Arabian would pitch his tent there, that prophecy is fulfilled to this day.

Elder Wilson may say that since the preceding verse contains a personification the trees rejoicing because they are not cut down therefore this funeral sermon is figurative, poetical, and means nothing. That is hardly satisfactory. Surely the prophet who could look forward 3000 years and see Babylon a ruin, is competent to tell us something of the fate of the soul or spirit after death. If Elder Wilson thinks he does not do so, he will tell us what he means by such language, and how the prophet, guided by the Holy Spirit, puts forth just the idea which is almost universally received as true by Bible students today.

GEO. T. SMITH.

REPLY No. 6.

Elder Smith says: "We conclude the theory of the negative to be erroneous because not a single reason has been offered in its defense."

Our readers know very well that the highest of reason have been given continuously from beginning to end, namely "Thus saith the Lord God," which the affirmative cannot give. Fleshly wisdom cannot give light with regard to the future of man beyond the dark confines of the grave. Were it not for the Divine Revelations, we would all be wandering in the mazes of heathen darkness.

Our readers are all well aware that the affirmative, have so far made but little use of the glorious light which radiates from the Sacred page and there is a good reason for it, namely, that it is positively impossible for him to prove the proposition from that source. I confidently and boldly challenge him to tackle the Holy Scriptures for proof. Study nature and you have an exhibition of death on every hand both to vegetable and animal life, and it offers no hope of release.

Says Dr. Spurzheim: "Nature has denied to man power to discover, as a matter of direct perception, either the beginning or end or essence of anything under the sun: they are interdicted regions."

Says Paul, Christ sent him to preach the Gospel, "not with the wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ be made of none effect." 1 Cor. i. 17.

We have also noticed how the negative have constantly raised the cry of materialism, as though that was something awful. Geo. Combe, on materialism: "The question is a vain and trivial one. Nothing can be more unphilosophical than the clamor about be more erroneous, than to suppose man is an immortal being on account of the substance of which he is made."—Syst. of Phren., pp 505-7.

"Immortality in the Sacred Writing, is never applied to the spirit of man. It is not the doctrine of Plato which the resurrection of Jesus proves. It is the immortality of the body of which his resurrection has proof and a pledge. This was never developed until he became the first-born from the dead."—Campbell, in Christian System. p 281, A. D. 1839.

"Seek for glory and honor, and incorruption, eternal life," Rom. ii. 7.

Why seek for that which you possess to have by nature?

"Nowhere is the immortality of the soul distinct from the body, taught: A notion which many erroneously have derived from heathen philosophers."—Com. Jamieson, Fausset and Brown.

"The dead know not anything." Eccl. iii. 19. "The Hebrew word nephesh, here (Gen. i. 20:30) rendered soul, includes all beings that have animal life; and hence it is applied to all beings that have animal life; and it is applied to animals of the sea and the land in Gen. i. 20, 21, 24, 30. The English word soul (like the German seele), originally had this extent of meaning 20, 30, in the margin of the common English version."—Conant. For American Bible Union.

"This mortal shall put on immortality," 1 Cor. xv. 42, 54.

"The heretics, despising the handiwork of God, and not admitting the salvation of their flesh, while they treat also the promise of God contemptuously, and pass beyond God altogether in the sentiments they form, affirm that immediately upon their death they shall pass above the heavens?"—Irenæus Against Heresies, Book v. ch. 31.

"No man hath ascended into heaven." John iii. 13.

Says Job: "Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job xix. 16.

Says Watson, a writer of note among the Methodists. "Some suppose consciousness is an essential attribute of spirit, and the soul is naturally immortal the former of which cannot be proved, while the latter is contradicted by the Bible, which make our immortality a gift dependent on the will of the giver."—Institutes v 2. pp 82, 83.

"The wages of sin is death: (Elder Smith's angel of light), but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi. 23.

Says Bishop Whately: "The word life and immortality are never applied to the condition of the wicked in the Scriptures."

"His breath (spirit) goeth forth he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlv. 4.

Says Dr. McCulloh, of Baltimore, a thorough Hebrew scholar: "There is no word in the Hebrew language that signifies either soul or spirit in the technical sense in which we use the terms as implying something distinct from the body."—V. 2. pp 466-8.

"God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man (formed of dust) became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7.

Says Elain (a Baptist minister) "Some I find even in our favored day of knowledge, yet lack the heathen notion, that our souls are apart of God, breathed into us. Of course, then he is divided and sinning, and suffering in every polluted child of Adam! yes, and he means to send a part of himself to eternal flames! We are told that which thinks remembers etc., cannot be matter, therefore man must have a soul, composed of some other substance. Suppose man has a separate part of soul, which is made of other substance, cannot God disorganize or destroy that created substance?" Death not Life p 35.

"They that forsake the Lord shall be consumed." "Let the sinners be consumed and let the wicked be no more." Psa. xxxvii. 19, 20; xlix. 14; Isa. i. 28; Psa. civ. 35.

Elder Smith keeps appealing to the worldly wise, "the bright minds," "tall intellects," etc., as though they were to be appealed to in preference to the Word of Truth. Read 1 Cor. i. 26-29, and you will find that God wipes out all that kind of foolishness with one stroke. He thus determined "that no flesh shall glory in his presence."

"For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called.

But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the [illegible] And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are:

That no flesh should glory in his presence." Psa. xxxvii.

Elder Smith has also quoted a lot of poetic figurative, and parabolic language from the Scriptures, as though that would detract from their use to teach the unconscious state of the dead. He is mistaken it adds to the force. See Mal. iv. 1, 3: "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

He uses the figure of stubble to represent the wicked and to show that they will be exterminated as completely as a tree would be, if it were burned up root and branch.

"For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume into smoke shall they consume away.

Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him but he could not be found.

But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off." Psa. xxxvii. 2, 10, 20, 36, 38.

Elder Smith says: "Study nature." Paul says the Bereans were more noble than those of Thessalonica, because they "searched the (Old Testament) Scriptures daily." He never exhorted them to "study nature." Again, we read: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." John xvii. 3. Please tell us how we can learn about "Jesus Christ" from nature, and also the message of life he brought.

The rich young man came to Jesus and said: "Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Luke x. 25. I can imagine hearing Elder Smith say to a young man who might come with a question: "It is a foolish question young man, you already have it."

Jesus says: "I give unto them eternal life." John x. 28. Why Lord, can you give them that which they already have?

"Whosoever believeth on him shall not perish but have eternal life." John iii. 17. Fail to believe and you perish." being deprived of "eternal life."

"Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life" John v. 11. No, Lord, they wont, they say they already have it.

"Every one that beholdeth the Son, and believeth on him should have eternal life." John vi. 40. They don't believe you, Lord. "Thou givest him authority over all flesh, that whosoever Thou hast given him, to them he should give eternal life." John xvii. 2. They don't recognize your "authority" to give "eternal life." Satan said, "Thou shalt not surely die." Mo 1 people believe that.

"The wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23.

"A fire goeth before Him, and burneth up his enemies round about." Ps lxxvii. 3. "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth and let the wicked be no more. They shall gnash with their teeth, and melt away. All the wicked will God destroy." Ps civ. 35, cxlv. 19, cxlv 20.

"The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," Rom. vi. 23.

News Items.

There is nothing new in Crete, beyond the contradictory and contradicted stories of outrages on both sides. But it is of no little importance that the British Government refuses to agree to a proposition to blockade the island, with a view to prevent the landing of expeditions from Greece. Of course such a blockade would be a great favor to the Turkish Government, and England is through with doing favors of that sort, preferring to leave them to Russia and her allies. There is no present prospect of the Cretan revolution coming to an end. Meanwhile the disturbances in Macedonia continue, and, indeed, grow worse. There is gossip that the young Czar is getting tired of supporting Turkey, and that his Greek, English and Danish relatives have consequently, ready to drop the advice of Lobanoff. The Czar contemplates a round of visits to the European capitals, Vienna, Copenhagen, Berlin, London, and, later, Paris. The Paris visit must be separated from the others, to avoid wounding French sensitiveness, which would not be pleased if it were only one and the last of a series of visits to the capitals of Europe. If it be true, as reported, that Servia, Bulgaria and Montenegro have formed a "federation," with a view to solving the Macedonian question, it is anything but favorable to the Porte. It means deliverance for the subjects of Turkey in Europe. This could hardly have been done without inspiration from Russia, that is, from Prince Lobanoff, who does not fear to take the initiative as much as did his predecessor, M. de Giers.—Independent.

London, Aug. 8.—[Copyrighted, 1896, by the New York Times.]—England has at last done something in the line of what English-speaking people have been hoping and praying for these fifteen months. It has withdrawn unreservedly from the shadowy concert of Europe and has refused to join others in either forcing the Cretans to submit to the Turk or blockading the island so as to prevent Greek sympathizers from landing arms and supplies for the rebels. This action is recognized as adding a good deal to history.

What its immediate effects will be it would be difficult for the moment to predict. Germany has been all along the master spirit in the combination for maintaining the Sultan's position, no matter at what expense of bloodguiltiness. Hence it is only reasonable now to find the German reptile press denouncing England and English treachery and greed at the very top of its lungs.

It is not surprising, either, to learn that the German Foreign Office is passing through a violent crisis and that Prince Hohenlohe is on the eve of a tumble, if he has not already fallen. There is, indeed, an effort on the part of German official journals to persuade Europe that English aid should be a matter of indifference and that Europe is quite able to do what it wishes without England. But this is received with suspicious silence where there are not sounds of dissent.

All these signs point to the conclusion which, I think, was first anticipated in these dispatches, that there has been a radical change in Russia's attitude. Prince Lobanoff remains in office, and stress is laid in an official dispatch today from St. Petersburgh on the fact that he will accompany the Czar on his forthcoming tour of the political capitals of Europe, but apparently the mastery is no longer in his hands, and, indeed, he may easily not last till September. No doubt it was a knowledge of this change which rendered England's nominally independent action possible. We get a token that it is comprehended in Paris as well, where the Figaro and other journals will have suddenly been seized with a great admiration for England's courage and disinterestedness. What the practical fruit of this altered situation will be it would still, as I said, be hard to guess.

Crete grows worse each week. Excited tales are coming by way of Athens of terrible massacres of Christians at Heraklion, or Candia, as it is more generally called. For the time being Candia, not Crete, with her 20,000 Moslem refugees are said to have died, is a center of news interest, but Canea may resume the place any day, and for that matter the whole island is ablaze.

There is less success in claiming attention for the Macedonian revolt, which appears to be considerably scattered in the skirmishing, but the Turk at least is holding his own. It is reported, however, that three tribes of Arnauts, or Bashi-Bazouks, have been armed by the Turks to guard the Thessalian frontier, and their operations are not unlikely to arouse general interest. There are also circumstantial reports of Turco-Bulgarian conflicts on the latter frontier.

The Sultan's treasury has been cleaned out absolutely by this year of disorder, and the need of money has become at last imperative at Constantinople if Turkey's interest obligations are not to be repudiated. This has led to rumors that England is thinking of advancing money to the Porte, either by the conversion of the Crimean loan or otherwise obtaining it in return for substantial guarantees of decent government in Crete. It is doubtful, however, whether matters have not gone much too far to make any such rose-water solution possible.

To add to the uncertainty it is said in Berlin, and apparently believed, that [illegible] favorable [illegible] tour, since he is really not fit physically or mentally to undergo a month of travel and incessant inspection by strange eyes.

In spite of denials it is generally believed that Prof. Mendel, the insanity specialist, has been summoned to St. Petersburg to attend the Czar, who is said to be in a state of extreme nervous excitement owing to the discovery of renewed Nihilist activity. The Czar is reported to be in hourly dread of his life, and hundreds of arrests have been made during the last fortnight at St. Petersburg, Warsaw, Kieff, and Moscow.

Since the London congress the feud between the Socialists and Anarchists of Germany has been intensely bitter, and there is now a complete split. The Marx Socialists deny the others the right to call themselves Socialists and to work with the party.

Terrific heat and severe storms have prevailed in many parts of Germany during the week. Thirty-five persons died of sunstroke at Konigsberg. In Saxon, Switzerland, a cloudburst and lightning have done great damage, and a Baltimore tourist named Eugene Bliss was killed by lightning during a mountain excursion from Spandau.—Chicago Tribune

Discussion.

There will be a public discussion by Elder J. Tomlinson of the Christian Church, and Elder M. L. Adams of the Church of God, at the Ray school house near Linden, Pittsburg County, Oklahoma, commencing Aug. 20, on the following question:

Resolved: That the kingdom of Jesus Christ was established on the first Pentecost after his resurrection. Elder Tomlinson affirms, Elder Adams denies.

Excursion to Omaha via Pennsylvania Lines.

August 17th and 18th excursion tickets to Omaha will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines, for meeting of Y. P. C. C. of the United Presbyterian Church; return coupons valid August 25th, inclusive.—Aug. 17.

"Holiness."

It is in the summer months that those who make the most display of holiness do chiefly thrive. Then they disport themselves under green trees and beside clear lakes. In undergrowns groves they gather and preach, and under monster tents they testify of the blessing which they have received. This, then, is the seasonable time for us to say a word about this doctrine of perfection, this higher life, this second blessing, this assured and sinless holiness.

We suppose the doctrine of "holiness," as held by those who conduct the "holiness meetings" to be about this: It is held and taught that by an act of faith in Christ it is possible to gain a complete victory over all temptations; so that they will be overcome without any effort, except that of an easy and happy trust, and so that the life will be completely consecrated to God and utterly free from sin. This, it is held, is not only possible, but is actually achieved by many who have attained the "higher life."

This is a captivating doctrine. Every Christian wants to be holy; or at least, he thinks that he wants to be. Tell him that he can be by an easy and simple act of faith; that what he imagined was to be a long struggle can be concluded with triumph for this side of Jordan; that the conflict is all unnecessary, and he will be very glad to believe it. We do not wonder that the prophets of this new gospel have so many disciples.

And the doctrine itself, on one side, does not look very unreasonable. Shut your eyes for a moment to the fact that the holiest men the world has ever seen have never gained this absolute holiness; that they have ever, whether psalmists, or prophets, or apostles, or martyrs, or reformers, confessed that they had not yet attained, but that they hoped to be like him when they should see him as he is; imagine that they, through some blindness or weakness of faith, had not the joy of the dispensation of these latter days, and it is not hard to believe that this blessing is attainable.

For so long as the obligation rests upon us to be faultlessly holy, the ability cannot be consistently denied. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," is a command which it cannot transgress to allow. God would do, and we could not feel under obligation to do what is impossible. We never commit a sin without knowing perfectly well that we might have avoided it. That we might be perfectly holy does not admit of reasonable question.

There can also be considerable Scripture brought to bear in favor of this theory. It is a popular belief that God will give us any blessing that we may ask for, if it is only good for us. This is not quite true; because God has other interests to consider besides ours, and he may be compelled to sacrifice our good to other people's good. But let that pass. It is further held that, while we cannot expect all material blessings to be granted that we may ask, because we may not be good judges whether they are really desirable for us, we may be sure that spiritual blessings are certainly good for us, and we may be absolutely sure that our prayers for them will be granted. If, then, we pray for an instant and easy victory over sin, we may be sure that God will grant it. Whatever we trust in Christ for in the line of spiritual favor he will not fail us. We may then trust him to do the work of sanctification for us once for all now, and be done with the trouble and conflict, and have the blessing of complete serenity and peace and holiness; for, has not Christ promised his disciples, and is it not all their hope in prayer, "all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive?"

This is very beautiful, very seductive. But granting that God will give us whatever we ask for that is good for us (that does not interfere with other people's good), is it at all certain that an instant and easy victory would be good for us? It is, doubtless, good for us that we should overcome, and, doubtless, "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even your faith;" but is it not a grave matter of doubt whether it is good for us that we should overcome by an instant and easy act, and that then we should be so freed from that temptation should lose its power, and that we should enter, by a sudden transition here on earth into the state of the redeemed above, having reached "the blessed necessity of obedience?" What the advocates of this modern doctrine teach is substantially this; not that we may overcome sin—that all believe; not that trust in God will help us overcome any sin—that we all believe; but that one act of trust now will put us into such a relation to Christ that subsequent temptations shall lose their power, and that we shall be holy because we shall have been put into such a state of peaceful rest in God that we shall be lifted above all spiritual storms and shall escape all the tossings of the waves.

Now, we insist that no man can be sure that it will be for his best good that he be not severely tempted. Easy sinlessness may not be for our best good. It may be better for us to have a long and hard struggle. We may be better off in the end if we have to fight to win the prize, even if we fall now and then, than if we are carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease. So long as a dram of well-doing is to be preferred before many times as much the terrible hindrance of evil-doing, so long as "God esteems the growth and completion of one virtuous person more than the restraint of ten vicious," we may doubt whether his wisdom will leave off all the Apollyons from us and give us nothing but puppets to fight against. The virtue which shall become master of the object, which overcomes even as Christ overcame, and which shall sit down with him thereafter on his throne, is not something fugitive and cloistered, unexercised and unbreathed. Its immortal garland is to be run for and without dust and heat."

But we are told that some have already gained the victory here below, have conquered all sin, are entirely holy, and live in constant joy and trust. They tell us so, and they testify in troops beside the still waters of summer lakes; and their holiness is in their Zions and their graves vouched by the healing of the sick. As if it were not after Peter and Judas and the Seventy had healed the sick and cast out devils that one betrayed and another denied his Lord, and all the disciples forsook him and fled. We have the testimony of not a few men that "Though all men forsake Thee, yet will not I." Some good, and some bad, testify that holiness is achievable here, because they have achieved it.

Perhaps some of them have. We will not deny it. We hope they are as holy as they think they are. We can easily believe that they are rejoicing as persons a little that kind of river, for that is attainable here by an earnest Christian that is not morbid or hypochondriacal; and though it is harder to believe, after the experience of David and Peter and Paul and so many other worthies, that they have so prematurely conquered the world, the flesh and the devil, yet we will not absolutely deny it. We only feel very confident that if they have, they will not boast much about it; that they will speak of it as reluctantly as Paul did of his special visions; and that they will guard very carefully against the terrible error of bringing down the lofty standard of holiness to the measure of their life, instead of measuring their life by that perfect standard which few if any men have attained.—Independent.

Excursion to Cleveland, O. Centennial Celebration, August 11th and September 9th via Pennsylvania Lines.

One fare for the round trip excursion tickets to Cleveland, Ohio, will be sold Tuesday, August 11th, and Wednesday, September 9th, via Pennsylvania Lines for the Centennial Celebration. Return trip must be made through to original starting point within four days, including date of sale. The arrangements for the Centennial Celebration at Cleveland have been elaborately prepared; the features are varied, and typical of a century's growth of Ohio's thriving and most populous city on the shore of Lake Erie.—Sept. 9.

God keeps time in performing his promises; we should do so in obeying his precepts.

Announcement.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Iowa will be held at Marshalltown, commencing Aug. 13 and continuing over Sunday Aug. 23. Brethren, begin to prepare to attend this meeting, come and let us see each other eye to eye, face to face, and feel the blessedness of clasping the hands of those of like precious faith, thus giving us a foretaste of the soon coming kingdom. We need your presence to cheer us, your counsel to guide us in the work. Are you not interested? We trust you are and hope that you will make an special effort to attend. We desire to make this the best meeting we have ever held, come and help us to do so. Notice of rates will appear later.

O. J. Allard, Sec.

Reduced rates have been granted on all railroads of 1½ fare for round trip to those wishing to attend the Annual Conference of the Church of God to be held at Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 3 to 23 inclusive, on the following conditions. Tickets for going passage must be purchased Aug. 13, 14 15, and each purchaser must secure a certificate from the agent of whom he purchases the ticket. Each purchaser will deposit his or her certificate with the secretary of the Conference on arrival, who will sign same. This will entitle the holder to ½ fare for the return trip. Each purchaser will be required to pay full fare for going passage. Now brethren, arrange to attend this meeting not later than Aug. 15. Come so as to be there on the first Sunday. Be sure and procure a certificate when you purchase your ticket. Those coming over two different roads will secure certificates at each junction station. Where you purchase a ticket also get certificate for each ticket purchased. If you cannot possibly attend the meeting by Aug. 15, come later, but in all cases secure a certificate and we will do our best to have them honored.

O. J. Allard, Sec.

We received the following from Bro. Allard:—Please add to rate notice that will be pitched at same location as last year on North 3rd street. Street cars from depot by the tent every 15 minutes, fare 5 cents.

O. J. Allard, Sec.

C. A. R. At St. Paul. Special Rates via Pennsylvania Lines for Annual Encampment.

August 30th and 31st and September 1st are the dates upon which low rate round trip tickets to St Paul will short route through Chicago. Tickets will be good returning until September 15th, inclusive, and if deposited with the joint agent at St. Paul on or before September 15th, the return limit will be extended to include September 30th. The rates for this occasion will be exceptionally low via Pennsylvania Lines, the only system of railways over which trains run from Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Indiana to Chicago Union Station, the natural gateway from those States to the Northwest. Daily trains from Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Louisville make convenient connection at Chicago with St. Paul trains. Arrangements may be made by G. A. R. Posts or parties of friends to travel together on special cars that will go through from starting point to the Encampment without change, if the number justifies it. Information on the subject will be cheerfully furnished by representatives of the Pennsylvania Lines.—Sep. 1.

Every temptation to draw us from duty, should quicken us the more in the discharge of it.

Excursion to Cleveland via Pennsylvania Lines.

August 22d, 23d and 24th excursion tickets to Cleveland will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines, for meeting of Knights of Pythias. Uniform Rank; return coupons valid August 31st, inclusive.—Aug. 24.

Some cross or other is frequently appointed to be an alloy to great enjoyments.

Excursion Rates to the Knights of Pythias Encampment at Cleveland are on sale via the Nickel Plate Road Aug. 23rd to 30th. Ask agents.—Aug. 30.

One good action will make a greater figure in God's Book than twenty great ones.

Books and Tract List.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

FUTURE PROBATION.

Is that awaiting any of the unrighteous? A 168-page pamphlet by Wm. Glenn Mansfield. This work was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid for ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for any who are interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send ten cents to this office for a copy.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal" containing 160 excellent hymns, with gamut for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley James. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cent each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Comst" a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in Restitution, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the Restitution of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Poetry.

"Who Shall Abide in the Lord's Tabernacle?" Psa. xlii.

He that walketh uprightly, and righteousness doeth,
Speaketh truth in his heart,—
Lord, may I ever, then too, do my part?
Thy commandments obey;
Keep to thy perfect way.

He that doeth to his neighbor, as he would have done,
Sweareth not to his hurt;
That cannot be undone
Who condemneth the vile,
But honors have won.

Who honor the good, for they that are good
Do honor their Lord.
They who love and abide, in the heavenly road
Shall surely abide
In the hill of the Lord.

MRS. L. B. BOYER.

Communicated.

Hesaias (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 51.

1. May ye have hearkened unto me, ye who are pursuing after the right and seeking after the Lord: ye have looked into the unyielding rock which [illegible], and into the pit of the [illegible] have dug.

2. Hearkened unto Habraham [illegible] Sarra who suffered for you: Because he [illegible] him, and blessed [illegible] him and multiplied [illegible]

3. [illegible] comfort thee, O [illegible] all her [illegible] make her [illegible] ware, and [illegible] it were a [illegible] with high [illegible] and in [illegible] islands will [illegible] will they [illegible] eyes unto the heavens, and look down into the earth [illegible] heavens have been [illegible] smoke, and the earth [illegible] old like an outer-garment, [illegible] those who inhabit it will die [illegible] and those, but my instrumental-salvation will be forever, and my righteousness shall not have off.

7. May ye have hearkened unto me, ye who know judicial-procedure, ye laity in whose heart my law is; Fear not the reproach of men, and yield not to their belittling.

8. For as an outer-garment will have been eaten by time, and as wool will have been eaten by a moth, will they be; but my righteousness will be forever, and my instrumental-salvation will be for generations of generations.

9. Awake, awake O Hieromsalem, and put on the strength of thy arm: Awake as in a day of authority as did a generation of an animate-sign.

10. Art thou not she who drieth up a sea, water, a fulness of an abyss? She who made the depths of the sea a passage-way for those who were being delivered.

11. And redeemed? For by the Lord will they be returned, and they will come into Sioom with rejoicing and eternal gladness: For upon their Head will be praise, and rejoicing will lay hold of them; woe hath run away and sorrow and sighing. I am:

12. I am he who comforteth thee; Comprehend who thou art, who hast been afraid of a mortal man and of a son of man, who have withered away like grass:

13. And who hast ignored the One who created thee, who created the heavens and founded the earth; and hast always all the days feared the face of the anger of the One who was afflicting thee; For in the way he counselled to take thee away, where is the anger of the One who was bringing thee tribulation?

14. For when thou art being saved he will not stand nor tarry;

15. Because I am thy God who stirreth up the sea and causeth its waves to echo: the Lord of Sabaoth is my name.

16. I shall put my words into thy mouth, and under the shadow of my hand shall I shelter thee, with which hand I stood the heavens and founded the earth: and Sioon will say, My Laity art thou (Hieromsalem mount)

17. Awake, awake; Arise O Hieromsalem, Thou who art drinking from out the hand of the Lord the goblet of his anger; For the goblet of the suffering, the drinking-cup in Persian words of the anger thou hast been drinking and thou hast emptied it out.

18. And there was no one to comfort thee from all thy offspring which thou hadst brought forth, and there was no one to intervene for thy hand, not even from all thy sons whom thou hadst exalted.

19. These two things confront thee; Who will have sorrowed along with thee? Smiting and ruin, famine and sword; Who will comfort thee?

20. Thy sons that have been taken from thee, who sleep at the terminus of every way out like a half-boiled beet, full of the anger of the Lord, undone through the Lord God.

21. Therefore hearken, thou humbled one and drunken not from wine.

22. In this wise saith the Lord who judgeth his laity. Lo, I have taken from out thy hand the cup of the smiting, the drinking-cup of my anger, and thou shalt never again drink it:

23. And I am going to give it into the hands of those who have wronged thee, and of those who have humbled thee, who said to thy soul, And I may [illegible] by thee; and thou hast [illegible] middle level with the earth [illegible] who were going their

Chapter 52.

1. Awake, awake O Sioon, put on [illegible] (with indergarment) thy strength, O Sioon, and do thou put on thy glory, O Hieromsalem, O Sacred City; Never again will an uncircumcised and an unclean person have passed through thee.

2. Shake off the dust as I arise. Sit down, O Hieromsalem, put off the bond from thy neck thou captive daughter of Sioon.

3. Because thus saith the Lord, For no value received were ye sold, and not with money will ye have been redeemed.

4. In this wise saith the Lord: My laity went down into Aigyptos formerly to sojourn there, and they were led away in among Assurioi with violence.

5. And now why are ye here? Thus saith the Lord: Wonder and obala, that my laity were taken for no value received. Thus saith the Lord, It is because of you that my name is constantly being blasphemed among the nations.

6. Therefore my laity will comprehend my name in that day, that I am he who is talking, I am come.

7. Like an hour upon the mountains, like the feet of those who announce a report of peace as good tidings, like one who announceth good tidings of good things, because I am going to cause thy salvation to be heard, I who say, O Sioon, God will become thy king.

8. Because the voice of those who watch to guard thee hath been lifted up, and with voice at the same time will they have rejoiced; because they will see eyes to eyes, when the Lord shall show mercy to Sioon.

9. May the waste-places of Hieromsalem burst forth with rejoicing, because the Lord hath been merciful to her and hath delivered Hieromsalem.

10. And the Lord will uncover his sacred arm in the sight of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth will see the salvation that is from our God.

11. Stand away, stand away; May ye have come out therefrom and touch not the unclean thing; May ye have come out from the midst of her; May ye have come out from the midst of her; May ye have separated yourselves, ye who carry the vessels of the Lord.

12. Because not with tumult will ye come out nor in flight will ye go, your way; For the Lord will go his way before you, and the God of Israel who gathereth you together.

13. Lo, my child (born in the house) will understand, and he will have been exalted and exceedingly glorified.

14. In the way many will be astounded at thee, even so with thy outward appearance be without glory from men, and thy glory from sons of men.

15. In this wise will many nations wonder at him, and Kings will stop their mouth; because they will see to whom it hath not been announced concerning him; and they will understand who have not been heard.

Chapter 53.

1. O Lord, who hath put faith in our report? And to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

2. We have announced him to be a little child as it were in his sight, a root as it were a thirsty earth: He hath no outward-show nor glory: And we have seen (vision of faith meant) him and he had no outward-show nor beauty,

3. But his outward appearance was without honor and a failure in the estimations of the sons of men: he being a man in affliction and knowing how to bear weakness; Because his (the Lord's) face was averted he was dishonored and not accounted.

4. This one carrieth our sins and suffereth woe (birth-pangs) for us, and we have accounted him to be in pain and affliction and misfortune.

5. He though was moulded because of our sins, and became weak because of our transgressions: Chastening for our peace was upon him: with his stripe have we been healed.

6. We all like sheep have been led astray: Man in his way hath been led astray: And the Lord gave him up unto our sins:

7. And he because of the evil done him opened not his mouth: Like a sheep was he led to slaughter, and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, even so he opened not his mouth.

8. In his humiliation his legal-trial was taken away: Of his generation who will discourse? Because his life was taken from off the earth: By reason of the transgressions of my laity was he led away to death.

9. And I shall give the wicked as the price of his burial and the rich as the price of his death; because he did not do transgression nor was there deceit in his mouth.

10. And the Lord purposeth to purify him in the affliction: If ye give for sin, O our soul, he will see a long-lived seed: And the Lord purposeth to take him away from the pain of his soul, (natural life, of course).

11. To show him light and mould him in understanding, to justify a just one who serveth many well as a bond-servant, and he will bear up (or carry away as did the scape-goat) their sins.

12. Therefore he will inherit many and divide spoils with the strong; for the reason that his soul was given up to death and he was accounted among the transgressors, and bore up (or carried away) the sins of many, and was given up because of their transgressions:

Comment.

Read these three chapters the 51st, 52nd and 53rd connectedly as given here and see if there is any lack of continuity of thought or any evidence of more than one authorship. The 51st is reproof to God's people for supposing or imagining that they could be justified on account of works of law under a covenant of faith made with their father Habraam, instead of looking to God's grace in faith as Habraam their father did and have it accounted to them as righteousness as he did, they were posing into "the solid rock" of works and "the pit of the well that they had dug." In asking through Mouses their mediator for a law of works or formal acts of justification which they were unable to fulfill, and which God had told them they never would be able to fulfill to the letter, and which he in his wisdom and mercy only designed when he gave it to be "a child-leader" to lead them to Christ, who was to be a medium of a covenant of life, an application moreover of the covenant of faith made with Habraam. The burden therefore of this chapter is in order to teaching to lead the truth and "to look up to the larger hope of the gospel of the coming Christ.

The 52nd chapter opens with an awakening cry to Sioon and an exhortation to arise and put on her strength [illegible] to stand forth into the liberty into which she had been called—into the liberty namely of the gospel of grace and out from the bondage of works in which she had already been so long serving. The 13th verse introduces the Christ as "the child" born in the household of faith, "born under law" because the household had been led away into bondage not through their own volition but through the overmastering power of law and he being a child of faith is "in faith" to lead them out of this bondage; in a word he is God's instrumentality to do this, if they remain steadfast to their faith in God and this way of his appointment. The chapter closes with a divine warning which if they had heeded, "they would not have crucified the Lord of life"—this warning being that they were not to be looking for such an instrumentality as the world would naturally expect, not a great human king or conqueror, but a humbly-born child, and "without glory" or such "outward-show in the estimation of men" as the world would naturally associate with such a personage. He was to be a king it is true, but not such a king as the world would recognize as a king.

The 53rd chapter enlarges upon this thought with which the 52nd closes, and gives us what now in the light of the later gospel seems to the Christian Church such a wonderful revelation and marvelously clear and accurate picture of the Christ as he actually was when he did come.

The reader and the theological thinker will no doubt see how important the variations of translation as conquered with the C. V. or R. V. and how radically they affect commonly accepted views of the atonement. In fact if this be the true text of this 53rd chapter, of which I myself have no doubt, it relegates to the rats and owls most of the theology and biblical exegesis both Catholic and Protestant so-called hitherto built upon it. It makes clear the disputed fact that God gave him up to our sins, not for them,—that "his chastening" was "for our peace, not of our peace"—that "with his stripe have we been healed" not are we healed from time to time as the exigency may arise. It is a finished work just as Paul and Peter and the rest argue. Then it was "his soul" that Christ gave and that God accepted as the redemptive-price under law—just this and nothing more nor less, and this would be the allotment of natural life that he under God got from Adam his "offering" was a spiritual offering, but "the sacrifice" was the "body prepared for him" and the life that animated it. Then his "weakness" was because of our sins and transgressions—the over-mastering weakness of his congenital humanity, not his own personal weakness. If he conquer he must conquer "in spirit" not "in flesh."

The last clause of the 6th verse (R. V.) reads "And the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." The same reads in the Greek text. "And the Lord gave him up to (or unto) our sins." This teaches plainly that without the special intervention of God by his divine power the tragedy of Calvary was a logical sequence of human sin, and we also know from other teaching in the Scripture that the Christ might have had myriads of angels to intervene for him if he had asked for them, and that "God gave him up" only when and because he gave himself up or was willing to be given up. What was the inducement? "The joy that lay before him" was it not? It was the sacrifice of the lower to the higher enlargement was it not? It was for this "he endured the pain and suffered the shame." All this made clear in this chapter even. It is very evident apostle would say, a certain remote

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisite of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

tion of the truth of the promises of God, entertained on assured expectation, a confident anticipation of receiving the things hoped for and founded their life's structure upon it. The true Christian faith is included not only the intellectual assent to the truths of the gospel but the consent of the will and the co-responsalence of the life to what this truth involves." We find therefore "faith and works" inseparately joined in the Holy Scriptures, so much so that James declares that—"faith without works is dead being alone." Faith therefore differs from mere belief in this, that faith controls the acts while belief may be only an intellectual assent founded upon the proofs presented. Mere belief does not affect the heart, the will, or the life. As is shown by the fact that many are compelled to believe in a God who gave him not a moments consideration. We are assured that with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, but with the mouth confession is made unto salvation;" but we know that none but the righteous will be saved, hence the belief which results in righteousness must be followed by the public confession of that belief before it can work out the salvation of the believer. Hence it is not a conviction of the truth as shall stir the affections of the heart and captivate and subdue the will, bringing into subjection to Christ all our members and giving not done coloring but entire distinction to our lives. So that we are to live, we certainly will live, lives of faith. All our hopes and ambitions, as far as possible, our occupations, in a word our whole lives are to be shaped, fashioned, directed, controlled by our faith. As we live, move and have our being in the air and when cut off from it soon die so, spiritually we live in an atmosphere of faith and when we escape from it we become spiritually dead, "twice dead, plucked up by the roots." This life of faith has God for its object. The Christian Spiritually as truly as the natural man literally "lives, moves, has his being in God."

Life has been scientifically defined to be a correspondence with environments; i. e. with all of our surroundings, in a word with all else beside ourselves. Hence to be out of correspondence i. e. out of touch with any thing is to be dead to that thing. To be dead to sin is to be out of sympathy or love, out of harmony, out of practice, out of touch or correspondence with sin. To be alive to anything is to be in sympathy, harmony, correspondence or touch with that thing. Hence the Christian is dead to the world but alive unto God, dead to sin, alive to Christ.

A man may be partly dead, partly alive alive to something, dead to others and the greater and more perfect his correspondence the more perfect his life. The nearer and more perfect is our touch with God the more thoroughly alive we are, the more perfect the more exultent is our life of faith. But to be alive at all to God we must have faith. As one cannot live at all without air so a Christian cannot live at all without faith. It is faith which brings him into any degree of correspondence with God and the greater his faith the more numerous the points of touch or correspondence with God. It is plainly the privilege—(is it not the duty?) of every Christian to be in perfect correspondence with God so that he thinks God's thoughts, is moved and controlled by the same sentiments, feelings or principles and his acts are not only like, they are God's deeds, God's works; he does perfectly the will of our Father in heaven. He is a co-worker with God: God and his children are true yoke-fellows. They have the same plans and work together for their accomplishment. It is true this sublime oneness only existed in its perfection in Christ: because he alone of all the race was in perfect correspondence with God. Hence he alone did perfectly the will of Our Father, he alone could receive the spirit "without measure," and he alone could command the elements of nature and work wonders without limit. Yet when his prayer for the unity of his church with God and himself is realized in fact, they too will find Almighty power at their disposal. Yet subject to the will of God, as but one will will control all. Until that hour when a resurrection will perfect all his chosen ones, they are to strive after this sublime unity until they become perfect men and women in Christ Jesus, "working out their own salvation with fear and trembling, knowing that it is God that worketh in them both to will and to do of his own good pleasure."

Faith.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." (Marginal reading, ground or confidence.)—Common Version.

"Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for the proving of things not seen."—Revised Version.

"Now faith is assurance of things hoped for, conviction of things not seen."—American Bible Union.

But faith is a basis of things hoped for, a conviction of things unseen."—Bagster.

The original word, translated variously as above "substance," "assurance," "basis," etc., is Hupostasis and is derived by Greenfield from Hupistanai, to place under, which in turn is composed of Hupo-under and Istemi-to stand. His definition is as follows: "Something placed under: a basis, foundation Metonomy, a certain persuasion, firm or implicit confidence, constancy, Heb. iii. 14: confidence, i. e. assured expectation confident anticipation. 2 Cor. ix. 4, 11, 17; Heb. xi. 1: Hypostasis, substance, essence, being, something of which we can say it is: opposed to Phantasy, mere appearance." Heb. i. 3.

From this definition, which also agrees with Groves, and, as I remember, with Siddell and Scott, (although I do not have the latter volume at hand) the literal idea conveyed by the word Hupostasis is that of a foundation for a superstructure; that on which something can be built. It is the "rock" as contrasted with the "Sand" of our Savior's parable. In this famous definition of the apostle we have the practical side of faith presented which he proceeds to illustrate by the rest of the chapter giving us a long list of holy men and women whose lives were based on founded upon faith. All these, having the Write! Write!

We request our friends to favor us with some brief and practical articles on the Christian life. Long articles that have been discussed again and again do not meet with that welcome that something having a bearing on personal preparedness for the coming of the Holy and Just One would receive. This is as good a time as any for friends to communicate with each other through our columns. Have you anything on your mind that you think you can tell some one else that will be an encouragement to them? Have you some favorite passage of Scripture that has brought comfort to you? Why not tell others, perhaps it will help them. Just think of it! If each subscriber would send in one little exposition of Scripture; one little report of the work in his neighborhood; one little exhortation, what a grand, good paper we would have, and we are sure every word of it would be read.

Write, all who can upon subjects calculated to instruct, or edify, or comfort our hungry readers. Have in view some good to be accomplished, and let us try and improve ourselves and each other, and show to those outside that we have a hope, that we are not ashamed of; and that we are striving for the kingdom, with the full determination of winning it. Do not throw the paper down when you read this, and say:—"I can't write any thing." You don't know, perhaps your little mite is just what some poor, lonesome soul is waiting for. Perhaps your joys could be shared with another; and so on; we don't always know. How we would like to hear from each one in a short article. We want to hear from all at once. Write, friends, write.

"Your Heavenly Father Knoweth."

We copy the following verses from "Glad Tidings," for the benefit of every brother and sister, and we hope each will appropriate them. The sentiment is excellent.

"My Father knoweth who trust in him,
Though the trust be weak, and the hope bedim,
Enough that we ever try to trust,
For he remembers we are but dust.

My Father knoweth what things I need,
Why should I to fears and to doubts give heed?
When the Word of a King is pledged to me
He will give whatever my need may be!

And where I dwell doth my Father know,
In the wealthy home, or the cottage low;
Lonely, perchance, or where dear ones lie,—
'Tis the place that he hath appointed for me.

Home after home hath been broken up
Since first I tasted life's bitter cup;
Where will those tired cyclids close?
I cannot tell—but my Father knows.

I cannot tell, when the light unfolds,
What the day that is coming holds;
But my Father knows—and his word to me
Is "As thy day so thy strength shall be."

Before my Father the balances lie
That hold my day and my day's supply.
And if I begin without taking my story,
What marvel I faint ere its hours are o'er.

He knoweth my sorrows—and if they press
With the double burden of loneliness,
I have but to lean upon him, and know
I never was helped and comforted so.

He knoweth my days, be they short or long,
Compassed with sorrows, or glad with song.
The time is set for whate'er befall,
Then resurrection joy, at the Master's call.

To those who have enquired we will say that we do not know as to whether the "Smith-Wilson Discussion," will be printed in tract form.

Through an oversight on our part the number of last week's Discussion was not changed. It should have read No. 6, instead of No. 5.

THE spirit in Zephaniah says, "Seek righteousness,—seek meekness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger."

A SISTER in Florida sends us a nice list of trial subscribers, with the promise that she will try to get more. Now is the time to work for the spreading of the truth. Sow the seed now, reap the harvest by-and-by.

THE things of the flesh are like poisoned molasses to the fly. They are enticing and pleasant for a time, but pangs, corruption and death are in them, and will lay hands on their backs at last.

CARLYLE says: "Everyone does, or ought to, feel unhappy till he finds out what to do. Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness. He has a work, a life purpose; he has found it, and will follow it."

NOT only is the understanding of the Word of the kingdom necessary to salvation, but also the complete submission of the person to it. Such exceedingly high and pure morality is arrayed against the natural mind, —consequently it must be slain, and the dead man buried, and a new-born take his place. If the babe be strong and healthy, it will be hungry and thirsty, and so drink in the milk of the Word, and grow thereby.

PAUL was bound with a chain because he cherished the Hope of Israel. Take the Hope of Israel away from the Gospel, and the result would be that there would be no gospel. The Gospel is glad tidings of a coming Millennial Kingdom under the administration of Jesus of Nazareth, the king of the Jews. It is this Gospel which Paul says is the power of God unto salvation to every one who believes it. Take away this Hope of Israel and you destroy the only power able to rescue men from death, and the only means whereby they will be blessed and glorified.

IN ascending the Alps the traveller passes through different regions of vegetation. First, the vine, then the fruit trees, then forest trees; higher up stunted pines,—higher again dwarf trees and mosses; at last, the regions of perpetual snow. But far up, almost on the very top of the mountain, a tiny, sweet flower peeps through the snow. It is said to have often drawn tears from the eyes of the manliest traveller. It blooms away there, cheerfully, sweetly. And thus we may in mind pass on through regions of knowledge, emotion and will, and on the summit, despite the cold atmosphere of moral depravity and continual alienation, if we are children of God, the flower of faith, true faith, ever blooms and cheers.

SOME think they believe in God, who do not believe in Jesus Christ. This is a great mistake. No one can come to God in his own name. So, though the Jews and Turks think they believe in God, they in no wise do. They believe in the existence of God, of course, but no reasonable and honest person, on reflection would claim that just belief in his existence is what is implied by faith in God. If a person claims to be believers in Confucius he is understood to have embraced the system of ethics, politics and religion which Confucius formulated and advocated, and not that he believes such a person once lived. The same is true of Buddha and Brahma, and Mahomet, and Joe Smith and Ellen White. We all believe in these persons in one sense—that they all were once, or are now, but we do not all believe their various teachings. It is precisely the same with God. We only believe in him when we accept his revealed truth and practice his divine precepts as set forth by prophets and apostles, and above all by his Son, Jesus the Anointed, the centre of his redemptive scheme.

By the Word, (Logos) of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth," Ps. xxxiii. 6. This is a Hebrew parallelism; the "Word" and the "breath," or spirit being equivalents. "By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked serpent, Job xxvi. 13. The spirit is not only the means by which God has created all things, but, is also the sustaining power of all things. "Thou hidest thy face they are troubled; thou takest away their breath they die, and return to their dust. Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created; and thou renewest the face of the earth," Ps. civ. 29, 30. "If God set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again into dust," Job. xxxiv. 14, 15. In view of these exceedingly plain declarations, it seems strange that people should pervert the words of Solomon when he refers to the withdrawal of this sustaining power of the Creator. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return to God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 7, when the dust-formed spirit-energized man is no longer able "to retain the Spirit" he dies, and returns to the dust, while it returns to the vast ocean of spirit which emanates from that Great Being with whom is the fountain of life, and in whom we live and move, and have our being." Acts xvii. 28. Oh, how true it is that out of God are all things."

Jesus is Coming.

To set up his kingdom, reader. At present he is selecting men to reign,—to command with him. Only those who have something of spiritual manhood, will be fit for the position he has vacant—not those who are merely able to take part in endless controversies on knotty points. It is not those who will reign with him, but those who have used the Word of God TO LEARN THE WILL OF GOD; those who have done the will of God,—who have been in the world but not of it.—who have manifested the breadth and sympathy of Christ,—who have been ready to forgive,—who have been sincere, real, clean in mind and manners; those who have been spiritually minded; those who have been dwelling places for God,—those who learned obedience by the things which they have suffered,—those who have lived in fellowship with their brethren, the Bride, and the Bridegroom. These are they, who, having learned obedience, will, along with Jesus, command obedience.

Let us then henceforth be no more children tossed to and fro, carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive, but, speaking the truth in love, grow up into him in all things, who is the Head, even Christ. Amen.

Egyptian Tombs—Their Testimony.

The first volume of the published records of the Archæological Society of Egypt has just appeared; it is entitled Beni Hasan, and gives a careful description of the remarkable tombs on the side of a hill on the eastern edge of the Nile Valley, about half way between the towns of Minyeh and Rieh. These tombs contain on their walls a number of pictures and inscriptions, all of which have been faithfully copied. The age of these tombs in general is about that of the twelfth dynasty, about 2500 years before Christ. So we have a picture book published at that date, or a little earlier than that of the patriarchs,—one which Abraham and Joseph might have read, and one which in all probability Moses was acquainted with. It is said that one of the first things about these inscriptions noticed is the curious delight in rank and title which seems to belong to men of every age. Ameni was the Governor of a province and a high official of the court of Usertasen I. and had fourteen civil, one military, and fifteen religious titles. He was "Master of the art of Making writing speak" "Superintendent of the two pools of sport," "Overseer of horns, hoofs, feathers, and minerals," and "Superintendent of all things which heaven gives and earth produces," and also held a post called "Great in the palaces," and pictured by a hand distributing coin," and he also held a military charge of the troops of his district. The west wall of this man's tomb is covered with profoundly interesting pictures, illustrating the arts of peace. Men are seen working at the manufacture of shoes, bows, chairs boxes, etc. Here are goldsmiths with blow-pipes at fires, carpenters, potters, at their wheels, and men spinning flax —some weighing articles in scales. Then there are agricultural laborers reaping and threshing, and plowing and working at the wine or olive presses, with a scribe setting recording what is done. Then come illustrations of fishing and fowling. Further on is the department of Lady Hotept, the wife of Ameni. Here is packing in jars and baking cakes; here is a procession of women carrying articles of the toilet and musicians with harps and sistrums. These are the engagements of the home. Another wall gives out-of-door pursuits wild beasts chased with bows and arrows, acrobats in queer attitudes. On the East wall there is the record of a struggle between two wrestlers representing 60 different positions, then there is a vigorous picture of an attack upon some fortified places. The description of Character is most vivid and interesting, among them were these; "I never wronged the daughter of a poor man. I never oppressed a widow. I never hindered a herdsman. I never took men from their superintendent. There was not a pauper near me. In my time there was no one hungry. When famine came I rose and cultivated the fields of my province to the boundary both North and South. I enabled its inhabitants to live by making provision. In great rises of the Nile, bringing prosperity, I did not exact arrears of rent." Whether this be true or not we cannot tell, but it is as grand as remarkable, and it is pleasant to know what a noble career was considered to be so long ago. It has been objected to the 20th chapter of Job that the portrayal of life there is too far developed for the patriarchal age. The opinions of skeptical critics concerning the evolution of civilized life will have to be refuted. God has chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty. Amen. They have been often confounded of late.

The Gospel of the Kingdom. A Reply to "The Christian Oracle." No. 22.

My dear Sir:—You charge me with saying on p. 4 of my discourse, that Enoch, Noah and others of their age, knew as much of the gospel as we do. You must be mistaken, for I never said it there or elsewhere; but bear with me. I do think they knew more of it than you do. You admit that the promise of Christ to Adam was gospel: that being so, then certainly he could have been justified by faith in it.

Again you say, "If the gospel is made up of promises only, the facts concerning the coming, death, burial and resurrection of Christ are not gospel." To this I reply that there was a time when there were no gospel facts. All rested solely upon the veracity of Jehovah. But now, some of the promises have been fulfilled, and therefore CONVERTED INTO FACTS.

And in the end every promise will have become a fact. You say you have read my discourse "carefully," and hence should have known from pages 8, 9, 11 and others that I teach the fact of the gospel as well as the promises. How can you make it appear that I omit them? Did you speak of this because I showed from Luke ix. 6 that the disciples preached the gospel while ignorant of the impending death of Christ? That fact proves that God had promised a kingdom, and they knew of it and believed in it, but as yet did not understand the God-appointed means of inheriting it: but when the promises concerning the Great offering became facts, they both understood and preached them.

Your last remark on Gal. iii. 8, "This was the gospel to Abraham that Paul refers to, viz:—the justification of the sinner. And the Scripture seeing before—[seeing what?] that God would give the land of Canaan to Abraham or to the Christian? No, no; but that God would justify the heathens or Gentiles, through faith] preached before [preached what?] the gospel, saying, In thee shall all the nations be blessed." Paul very carefully, and purposely as that has nothing whatever to do with the gospel of Christ. Yea, he never refers to it in his whole letter to the Galatians. Paul here distinctly and emphatically (as if he knew what some teachers would say) that the justification of the sinner was foreseen by the Scriptures, and preached the good news to Abraham, saying; 'In thee shall all nations be blessed.' I challenge you, Mr. Joblin, or any other person, to prove that Paul referred to Canaan in any shape or all. What was the gospel that Paul recognized here? Nothing to do with land. Paul says in the justification of sinners was the gospel, because he says the Scriptures foreseeing THIS preached the gospel to Abraham."

Let us see my dear sir, if this be so: "The Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying [saying what, Paul? That God would justify sinners? Is that what was preached? Let Paul answer for himself:] "Saying, In thee (Abraham) shall all nations be blessed." I leave it to yourself, if the God-idea here expressed in words be not this? That God having determined at some future time to justify the Gentiles through faith, preached or announced the good news to Abraham that ALL NATIONS were to be blessed in him? All nations could not be blessed in him unless justified i. e., pardoned, this was the means to the desired end. We know by the later oracles of God, that justification is not the end itself. God does not justify men and then abandon them. He has a blessing in store for them,—justification makes them eligible to whatever that may be. You claim that the justification of the sinner is the blessing, instead of the state necessary in order to be blessed. You ask me to believe that Abraham was required to believe that God would in future ages justify the heathen through faith; in order to be justified himself. "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," was the gospel. It was the Spirit in Paul thousands of years after that tells us that this announcement grew out of God's foresight in reference to the justification of the heathen or Gentiles through faith."

And so you challenge me to show that Paul referred to Canaan in any shape at all. I accept this challenge and if I succeed the building you occupy will tumble to the ground. If this no-land-stone were removed from its foundation it must fall. Well, God promised Abraham that "all the families of the earth should be blessed in him, without telling him how, or in what way he would bless them, see Gen. xii. 3.

JEHOVAH'S PURPOSE

is further disclosed by another promise, viz: that he would give HIM and his SEED, the land of Canaan forever, see Gen. xiii. 14, 15. Still another promise to the same effect is found in Gen. xv. 18, the boundaries of the land being given. It must be marked, that there are no conditions attached to these promises like those made to the multitudinous seed of Abraham. They are absolute to him, and his seed (singular) forever. You claim that these promises of the land were actually fulfilled to Abraham;—that he inherited it in fulfillment of the promises. But is this so? Will it stand the test of the Spirit's word? Let Stephen answer: "And he [God] gave him, [Abraham] none inheritance in it: no; not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him, for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child."

ACCORDING TO HIS WORD,

God promised it, but did not give it; and the reason is obvious;—a mortal man could not inherit a land forever. Abraham was not disobedient,—and God was not slack concerning his promise. He never intended to bestow it upon him while he was a perishing mortal, as I shall presently prove by the testimony of Paul, Heb. xi. 8, 9. "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise." I pause here to ask you, what need would Abraham have had of faith in order to live in the land of promise if he had actually

COME INTO POSSESSION OF IT?

The very living there as a stranger was the test of his faith in the promise of FUTURE POSSESSION, and so it reads: "By FAITH he sojourned." What does that mean? Why it means that he had a TEMPORARY RESIDENCE there. If he had really owned it in fee simple could it have been said of him that "By faith he sojourned, or had a temporary residence in it? There is no use in waiting for the answer to that question, in view of what follows: "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, [not land of possession] as in a strange country, [inheritance] dwelling in tabernacles [no house over his head] with Isaac and Jacob, the HEIRS [partakers] with him of the same promise." "By faith he sojourned there; he was not obliged to. He was under the necessity of faith. God told him to go there, and he did; and after he was there, God promised him and his seed the land forever. And he through faith in that promise lived there as a stranger in

A STRANGE COUNTRY.

If, then, his faith had failed him, he certainly would have gone back home —for Paul says, "If they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned," v. 15, but now they desire a heavenly country, wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he has prepared for them a city. "Remember it was the land of promise they were in; it was

THE LAND OF PROMISE

they would not leave, and go back to the country they came from; it was the land of promise they sojourned in by faith; and we would not give much for the honesty or intelligence of one who would deny that that land of promise was the land they desired when it should be made a heavenly country. I say this because it tells us in the 8th verse, positively, that it, the place he was called to, and went to, was the place which they should AFTER receive for an inheritance, not in his then present life time. So we have divine assurance that when the land of promise becomes

THE LAND OF POSSESSION,

It will be a heavenly country. Amen. But I promised proof that God never intended to fulfill his promise of Reflections From Memory's Mirror.

These lines were composed in memory of the yearly meeting held at Oxford, Kansas, in August, 1891.

Gently now the southern breezes
Whisper round me this lazy day
Bringing many a cherished memory
Of the loved ones far away

Once we took the friends so oft[illegible]
Brothers, sisters, [illegible]
And them gladly will I welcome,
Back our hearts and home to cheer.

Now I see them wending their
Radiant with the heavenly youth,
As they [illegible] to the

O how well do I remember
Those whose voices [illegible]
Praises to their Lord and Savior,
And the glorious Eden home.

Now our hearts are [illegible]
When those dear ones [illegible]
We led out into the water
And the [illegible]

What a picture, so [illegible]
Standing in the rippling waves,
Humble children and disciples,
Owning His great power to save.

'Neath the golden rays of sunset,
Hushed the gloom, the cares, the strife,
Hear the tides sweetly chanting
Out the "Cleansing Stream of Life."

You who this have all forsaken,
To obey the Master's voice,
Answer quickly all his summons
Toil, and in thy toil rejoice.

Hoping for the King of glory,
In majestic power to reign;
And he'll crown your efforts worthy,
The eternal life to gain.

When within the pearly portals
Of the Eden City bright,
We will gladly greet each other,

[illegible]erisms, they do not con-
[illegible]'s full truth. The writers wrote as they saw things, it was not in harmony with God's main purpose to reveal such partial statements.

They contain a truth, a truth to be remembered even now, teaching man the brevity of life, the complete annihilation of his plans by death, and the impossibility of repentance in the grave, but to take them as expressive of God's complete teaching is to do injustice to the author of Revelation.

Let us note how these authors make assertions which contradict the truth. Elder Wilson quotes concerning earthly rulers "they are dead, they shall not live, they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them and made all their memory to perish," Isa. xxvi. 14. The reader will notice that "their memory is to perish" means that men will forget them. "The memory of the just is blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot." Prov. x. 7. Also in Eccl. ix. 5 quoted below.

The prophet's saying contradicts the truth of the resurrection, "all in the graves shall come forth," John v. 28, 29. He says, "They shall not rise." Again: "For the living know that they shall die but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten." Eccl. ix. 5. Jesus said "Great is your reward in heaven." Heb. xi. tells us of the Old Testament saints that they desired a better country than this earth, even a heavenly, and Peter assures us that the inheritance is reserved in heaven for the faithful.

These will do for samples sufficient to show that any man who puts his faith on the Old Testament teaching is the victim of misplaced confidence. He will be ever learning and never able to come to the truth.

We will show that the Old Testament is not consistent with itself. The last text quoted says of the dead "the memory of them is forgotten," but Ps. cxii. 6 tells us "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." Elder Wilson has shown that the word soul is used for a person and that a person can die. Is it not true a person must die? If the Bible were to limit the meaning of the word soul to fishes, birds, beasts and the bodily life of man we would expect the word "mortal" to be found with it, but such is not the case. It is also evident that one expression of undoubted meaning contradicted any conflicting, could show that the Old Testament is inconsistent. Upon Ezekiel 18th chapter such an instance is "All souls are mine, the soul that sinneth it shall die." The first death is intended for evil [illegible] the second [illegible] Heaven the [illegible] and can be [illegible] verse 4. The chapter is de[illegible] verse 9 that the righteous [illegible] shall not die "he shall [illegible] alive." He does not say [illegible] the grave, he may die [illegible] everything [illegible] Job [illegible] 7, God [illegible] the sky, surely [illegible] the shall not die. Acts 2:8. More to [illegible]

GEO. P. SMITH.

[illegible]

In the [illegible] Elder Smith suggests that the proper place to discover the Word of God is [illegible] the Bible's own [illegible] Old and New Testaments. As I [illegible] to [illegible] for [illegible] to handle the Scriptures quoted against his side of the proposition I [illegible] and [illegible] them. Therefore I will [illegible] Bible [illegible] to dispose of them by [illegible] Bible [illegible] in full. That kind of processing results in confusion, the readers know very well what it indicates.

Brother quotes a number of passages from the Old Testament to show how they contradict each other. But surely is not the case. Had he understood the Bible use of the Hebrew adjective olam, as applied to some of those passages, a beautiful consistency and harmony would be seen to pervade them all.

The Hebrew nephesh, and psuche (Greek) from which we have the word soul, is also sometimes rendered life. The Hebrew adjective olam (everlasting) is never placed before the world nephesh (soul). The words soul and life as derived from nephesh is applicable to the entire animal creation including man.

But the Hebrew adjective olam (everlasting) is placed in connection with the Hebrew word chai (life) and refers to the everlasting life given the blessed and holy at the resurrection of the dead, but is never applied to nephesh.

In the New Testament, the corresponding word psuche, is never used [illegible] a positive negative, is [illegible] to the Hebrew adjective olam (everlasting), as is also the Greek word zoe (life) with the Hebrew chai (life). Now the word is zoe aionios (life everlasting) is never attached to psuche, which represents the soul life of the animal creation. The words zoe and psuche are not used as interchangeable words. Should Elder Smith comprehend these things his self-contradictions would all vanish.

I will now quote a few instances where our blessed Lord Jesus endorsed the entire Old Testament, and surely we should not presume to be wiser than our Master. When assailed by the tempter, three times he silenced him by quotations from Deuteronomy and Exodus.

He says: "If they hear not Moses and the prophets neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." The Lord here endorses all the books of Moses and all the prophets and considers their evidence better than even a resurrection from the dead.

Says Jesus: "Search the (Old Testament) Scriptures. * * * They are they which testify of me."

"Had ye believed Moses ye would have believed me."

The testimonies of Jesus endorsing the Old Testament are abundant, but limited space forbids me quoting them. I will add one more in which he places his endorsement on the entire Old Testament. See Luke xxiv. 44. That all things written in the Law of Moses and in the prophets, and in the Psalms concerning me must be filled—"All things that are written therein" means everything to which it refers.

If the Old Testament says, "the soul that sinneth, it shall die," it must die. If it says "their thoughts perish," they will perish, because Jesus says "all things that are written therein," must be fulfilled, both concerning him and everything else. See John x. 35: The (Old Testament) Scripture cannot be broken." "Cannot be broken" means that whatever the Scripture says will receive an accurate accomplishment.

The New Testament is in perfect accord with the Old Testament with regard to the unconscious state of the dead. See the following samples.

First—Souls can die. Acts iii. 23: "Every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people."

"Every soul" takes a wide sweep.

Rev. xvi. 3: "Every living soul died in the sea." That takes in every living soul, and shows that "living souls" can die.

James v. 20: "Shall save a soul from death." A soul cannot be saved "from death," unless it was capable of death.

Matt. xvi. 26: "Lose his own soul."

Acts ii. 31: "His soul was not left in hell" hades—grave.

Matt. xxvi. 38: "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death."

Souls cannot eat. Luke xii. 19: "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry."

Merchants can buy souls. See Rev. xviii. 12-13. "No man buyeth their merchandise any more: * * * wheat and beasts, and sheep and horses, and chariots, and slaves and souls of men."

Rom. ix. 22: "Vessels of wrath fitted to destruction."

Phil. iii. 19: "Whose end (telos) is destruction."

2 Thess. i. 9: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction."

1 Tim. vi. 5: "Foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction."

2 Peter ii. 12: "These as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed shall utterly perish in their own corruption."

2 Peter iii. 7: "Reserved against the day of judgment and destruction of ungodly men." "Wrest the (Old Testament) Scriptures to their own destruction."

See Titus i. 2: "In hope of eternal life which God that cannot lie (but Satan can) promised before the world began."

See Gal. vi. 8: "He that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."

See Rom. ii. 6: "Who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor and immortality, eternal life." Why seek for it, does not Satan say, "Thou shalt not surely die?"

See Rom. vi. 23: "The wages of sin is death (an angel of eternity we are told); but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

See John x. 28: "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish."

See John iii. 16: "God so loved the world," that he gave his only begotten Son "that whosoever believeth" in him [illegible] life." These New Testament texts tell the same stories as the Old and show the nature of the soul, the end of the ungodly, and that eternal life is conditional.

Question.

Dear Restitution:

Could you tell me any thing about the church at Philadelphia, Asia Minor, that is spoken of in Rev. iii 10? Is it still in existence and their mode of worship? Do you know of any missionary that is there? Please [illegible] the discussion on Resurrection or by letter. That is a grand and glorious promise to them if I read and understand it aright.

Yours in Christ.

Prof. Dr. E. Nestle, the well-known Syriac and Biblical scholar of Ulm, reports in the Munich Allgemeine Zeitung, No. 123, the discovery of a portion of the oldest Polyglot Bible in existence, namely of the Hexapla of Origen. The find was made in a Greek palimpsest in Milan. The finder is the priest Giovanni Mercenti, who since 1893 has been engaged in investigating the Symmachus translation, one of the parts of the Hexapla. With some lacunæ, the find gives us the Hexapla text of eleven psalms. The first column, containing the Hebrew in Hebrew letters, is wanting; but, what is more important, the second, namely the Hebrew text in Greek transliteration, is here given; in the third column, departing from the descriptions of the Hexapla hitherto known from the Church Fathers, we find the Symmachus version, the Aquila, then the Septuagint, the Theodotion, the Vulgate. With reference to the value of the find, Dr. Nestle, among other things, notes that the manuscript can show us, in a much better manner than was possible heretofore, how the Alexandrian and Palestinian Jews at the time Origen pronounced and transcribed the Hebrew.

Military Christians.

The Christian church has all varieties of men. In it we find poets, who are carried away by the lofty descriptions of Isaiah. We have also logicians, who glory in Paul and read his brave words with supreme delight. Others are held by the sweet spirit and simple story of the beloved John. Another class, with varied temperament, build on Peter, and claim to use his keys in unlocking the door of salvation to sinners. Men with vivid imaginations become enraptured by the visions of Daniel and John, and fly away, by the aid of prophetic scenes, to the grand reunion of heaven and earth.

But there is still another class of Christians, who take a military type, and read with perfect zest the wars and victories of Israel. They live in camp, they have on the armor, use the sword, contend for the faith. They lift the battle-axe and cry "no quarter." If they sing, it is the good old hymn, "I have fought my way through." Indeed they are soldiers of the cross, and their whole life is a warfare. That the church needs these brave knights of the cross, is plain, but there is a proper time for battle. Men should not fight. Because they are the warriors, Cain, therefore, they must fight their friends as well as their enemies; neither should they turn a prayer meeting into a military drill. Our militancy brethren must remember that the martial trumpet is to be laid by and that swords are, some day, to be beaten into plow shares. The Bible proclaims peace on earth and good will to men. There is a point where hostilities cease and peace reigns in blessedness. Another very important point is, that the foes are not always without, they are also within. One poet has said:

"Beat of all the foes we meet,
None so apt to meet our feet,
None so [illegible] to sin,
Like the foes we have within."

This interior battle-field is the most hazardous. Here the enemy gains his greatest victories, and here is where lies our greatest danger.

In contending for the faith, we must not forget that doubtings, temptations, trials, and pride, may be sweeping us away from our steadfastness in Christ. We believe in war on all enemies of truth, we believe in war upon every passion and vicious habit in our own bosoms; but let us not destroy, in zeal for war, the lambs of the fold, or discourage the weary pedestrian on his way back to the Father's house. Ever remember the Master's axiom: "I send you forth as sheep among wolves. Be ye therefore as wise as serpents, but as harmless as doves." With prayerful adherence to these blessed words, we shall gain the final victory and rest with Christ.

The Little Mayweed.

I am naught but a little Mayweed
By the dusty road I grow;
And the people who pass o'erlook me,
I am so small and low.

But God in his might and glory,
High up in the heaven so blue,
He sees the little Mayweed,
And gives it both sun and dew.

So child, whom the dear Lord's wisdom
Has placed in a humble rut—
Toiling in common raiment,
Overlooked in your weary lot,

Grieve not, though men pass by you!
God sees and knows your load,
As he sees the little Mayweed
That grows by the dusty road.

The Story of Israel Beyond the Sea. No. 56.

THE SOJOURN AT SINAI.

I think in this lesson, we were to connect the Tabernacle, with our dear Savior and with our coming kingdom home. Do you think we can do it? Turn to the ix. chapter of Hebrews, and read it carefully. What a precious chapter it is! You will all rejoice while you are reading it.

It describes the Tabernacle, the candlestick, the table, the sanctuary, and after the second veil the Holiest of all which had the golden censer, and ark of the covenant, wherein was the pot of manna. Aaron's rod, and the tables of the covenant. And over it the Cherubims of glory.

But we cannot stop to look at these, just now, though a review always helps us to remember better what we learn. We must hurry on lest we be beguiled into talking of Egypt, and the wonderful miracles that were witnessed by Aaron's rod. The rod was kept that it might be a perpetual memorial of what God had wrought in delivering his people, and the pot of manna was laid up for the same reason.

You remember the covenant that God made with his people:—that it was written in a book, and sprinkled with blood? Well, the way to worship God under that covenant, was pointed out. The Tabernacle was built, that the whole nation might come to him, as little children would come to a father. A great many ceremonies that you do not yet understand, were connected with the worship. The priests went always into the first room to do their part in the service, but it to the other room, no one could go except the high priest, and he, only once a year. He must go with the blood and must sprinkle it before the mercy seat. Blood offered, shows that life has been offered. It was sin that took away life. So life must be offered to take away sin. Ex. xxx. 14, 15.

Heb. ix. 7, 22. The blood of bullocks and of goats, was used under the covenant, given at Sinai. There was nothing in the blood, in and of itself, to take away sin. Heb. x. 4, and yet it sanctified, or made the nucleus, pure, Heb. ix. 13. The Israelite knew that through this blood there was forgiveness for him. And he need not wait for the great day of Atonement, to be forgiven. Every morning and every evening a little lamb was offered, on the altar. Night and day the lamb was always there. It was as near to being one lamb, as God could make such a thing to be. It was a continual burnt offering. Ex. xxix. 42. The people could [illegible] for the altar of burnt-offering [illegible] in the Court. And they could feel [illegible] they looked upon it. "We are forgiven for the sake of the lamb."

And this lamb, was a type of Jesus. And when the high-priest went into the second room alone, to make an offering for himself and for the errors of his people, it was a figure or picture of this same Jesus. He it was who was to come, and who was to enter once into the Holy Place, not by the blood of calves and of goats, but by his own blood, having obtained) eternal redemption for us. To him, the Israelites were looking. They knew that he was the one through whom alone they could hope to be saved. He has gone into the Holiest place of all, into the presence of God to act as our Great High Priest. This place is heaven itself.

No one else can go into that mysterious, far away room. So deeply curtained from mortal sight. We hear people talk about going to heaven when they die. We hear them singing "I want to be where Jesus is," but it would be death to enter there, just as it would have been death for any one to go into the second room of the Tabernacle when the High Priest was offering the blood, or at any other time. None but the priests might enter any part of the Tabernacle. So we may not dream of having heaven for our future home. But the Tabernacle was only a tent. It could not last. It might picture the eternal things, but it must pass away to give place for these. So the wonderful church with its gold-covered boards, and costly curtains is a picture, not only of heaven, but of the heavenly home that is be ours by and by. When the High Priest, had finished his work before the mercy seat, he came out and blessed the waiting people.

Our Savior Priest, will come out of heaven by and by, to bless all who are looking and waiting for him, and then "The Tabernacle of God will be with men and he will dwell with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

AUNTIE WISE.

The Lost Marbles.

Andrew, or "Andie," as he was called, sat down to dinner. While he was eating, the tears rolled down his cheeks. He tried to stop them, but came they would.

"What troubles you Andie?" asked his father. The little fellow tried to swallow his trouble, whatever it was. "Can you not tell us, my son?" asked his father kindly.

"I've lost my all, sir," said Andie, trying to put on a brave face; "that's all.

"How is that, Andie?" asked his father.

"This morning I went out, sir," said Andie, "with twenty-one marbles, and five were the handsomest you ever saw, and I've lost them all. I played with Bill Taylor, and he won every single one.

"You can bear that Andie."

"Oh yes, sir, but—" he stopped.

"Never mind, you can win them all back again," said James; "yes, and get Bill's too."

"I know it," said Andie, the boys all say I can get Bill's some day: but then Bill won't have any, and I know just how he'll feel."

"That is gambling," said his father. "You don't think much of gambling," do you, Andie?"

"No, sir, I don't," answered Andie.

"In lawful trade, Andie," said his father, "a man parts with his property, his potatoes, his cloth, his iron, or whatever he has to sell, and receives in return its value in money; or a man buys something, a farm, a house, an engine, or whatever he wants, and gets for his money his money's worth. You see that, Andie."

"Yes, sir," said Andie.

"In gambling," continued his father, "you agree to part with your property without receiving anything of equal value in return, which is a foolish and sinful wasting of what you have; or you take another man's property without giving him anything for it, which every honorable mind must see to be ungenerous and mean."

"I think as much," said Andie. "I should not enjoy what I got that way, I know I should not. I don't want Bill Taylor's marbles unless I give something for them."

"Gambling then, you see, Andie, is bad in principle, and worse in practice, and I hope you will never countenance it even in play."

"I never shall, sir," said the little fellow.

In all your recreations, boys, choose those which will give a cheerful exercise to both mind and body, and leave no sting behing.—Child's Paper.

G. A. R. At St. Paul. Special Rates via Pennsylvania Lines for National Encampment.

August 30th and 31st and September 1st are the dates upon which low rate round trip tickets to St Paul will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines, the short route through Chicago. Tickets will be good returning until September 15th, inclusive, and if deposited with the joint agent at St. Paul on or before September 15th, the return limit will be extended to include September 30th. The rates for this occasion will be exceptionally low via Pennsylvania Lines, the only system of railways over which trains run from Wes[illegible] Pennsylvania, West Virginia [illegible] and Indiana to Chicago Union Station, the natural gateway from those States to the Northwest. Daily trains from Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Louisville make convenient connection at Chicago with St. Paul trains. Arrangements may be made by G. A. R. Posts or parties of friends to travel together on special cars that will go through from starting point to the Encampment without change, if the number justifies it. Information on the subject will be cheerfully furnished by representatives of the Pennsylvania Lines.—Sep. 1.

Announcement.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the State of Indiana, will convene at Argos, Indiana, on Friday at 2 P. M., Sept. 18, 1896. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of truth to meet with us and enjoy at least one more reunion of those of like precious faith. We are admonished to be watchful, the signs thicken, events of momentous importance tell us plainly the hour of his coming is near. Be ye therefore ready.

J. F. WAGONER, Pres.
A. C. ROBERTS Sec.

The Eleventh Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at the City Park, in St. Paul, commencing, the Lord willing, on Friday September 11th: and will continue for ten days. We give one and all a cordial invitation to come and enjoy some blessed meetings with those of like precious faith. Come prepared to do all in your power to help make the meetings both pleasant and profitable. St. Paul is near the center of the State, being just twenty-five miles north of Grand Island, so that all will have an equal chance to attend. We would like for all who can to bring tents; but to those who cannot, we say, "Come any way and we will see that you are cared for in the best manner possible." There will be a boarding tent at the park so that the sisters need not spend their time in cooking, but can enjoy the meetings. Yet we would say, "Bring your provisions with you, if you wish. You can dispose of them to the committee appointed for buying provisions, who will credit you for them. This will go towards paying your board at the tent." Once more we ask you to come and tarry with us for a short time, and help us in the Master's work. Let us serve him while we may, that we may be ready to meet him when he comes in glory to set up his kingdom on the earth. Brothers and Sisters, this time is not far distant. Let us strive to be faithful; and when the time comes, may we one and all enter into the rest that is prepared for the people of God.

DAILY PROGRAM.

7 A. M. Reading of Scripture and prayer.
7:30 A. M. Breakfast.
9 A. M. Bible Reading or Social Meeting.
10 A. M. Business on week days and Sunday School on Sunday.
12 M. Dinner.
2:30 P. M. Public Preaching.
6 P. M. Supper.
8 P. M. Public Preaching.

The intervening hours between 8 A. M. and 6 P. M. will be occupied in the Reading of Essays, in Prayer and Social meetings, or in some way that will be beneficial to all. Come and we are sure that you will feel well repaid for so doing.

Your Sister in Christ.
RENA M. COMMON, Sec.

Dear Restitution:

We wish to say to the brethren of the Church of God, of Southern Kan., and throughout the State that a Conference will convene at Bitter Creek, Sumner Co., Kan., on Friday evening before the second Sunday in Sept., and continue over Sunday, and as much longer as the interest may demand. Brethren, this meeting is yours. Will you come to enjoy it? There will be some important business to attend to. Should any of you have a pet hobby please hitch him at the first outside post. We do not want to have any wild mustangs loose in the crowd of people. Come together for religious worship, let us have peace, let us have a meeting commendable to the people of God. Times are very hard; but the Lord is liable to come, even if times are hard, whether we have a dollar or not, let us get ready, all make an extra effort to try and be at this meeting. Bro. L. E. Connor has promised to be with us, if it is possible. We would like to have as many come as possibly can come to do so. You may think times are too hard, but this is a burden all must bear in order to share the joys derived from it. This meeting will be held at the Southeast corner of Sumner Co., one-half mile south of Bitter Creek post office, Cauda Springs 7 miles north is the nearest railroad station. Any coming by rail may address me at Cauda Springs, or Bro. J. M. Vickery, Arkansas City, telling us when to meet you and we will be pleased to wait on you. This may be the last gathering in this life, so then come. Come one, come all.

I. S. MILLER, Pres.
DELLA MILLER, Asst. Sec.

The Y. P. C. U. of U. S. Convention will be held at Omaha, and the Nickel Plate Road will offer excursion tickets for sale Aug. 16th to 24th.—Aug. 23.

Books and Tract List.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

FUTURE PROBATION.

Is that awaiting any of the unrighteous? A 164-p. pamphlet by Wm. Glean Mourrieff. This work was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid for ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for any who are interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send ten cents to this office for a copy.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 400 excellent hymns, with gamut for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth: 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stetzenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conant," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in Restitution, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Addie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the Restitution of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Poetry.

Rejoice.

Rejoice then weary one,
Thy toil will soon be o'er;
A little while and thou will stand,
Upon bright Canaan's shore.
Thy Lord will come, O! do not fear,
The signs proclaim his coming near.

Does poverty press hard?
Or trouble throng thee round?
Does sickness waste thy frame?
Thy friends sleep in the ground?
Thy Lord will come, O! do not fear,
The signs proclaim his coming near.

O! look beyond this life,
Thine eye keep on the prize;
And pray O Savior come,
Till in the radiant skies
Thy Lord shall come; O! do not fear,
The signs proclaim his coming near.

Selected.

Crosses.

"He that taketh not his cross and followeth after me is not worthy of me." Matt. x. 38.

"Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Mark viii. 34.

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." Luke ix. 23.

"And whosoever does not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Luke xiv. 27.

The above quotations from the Evangelists taken together, give a complete epitome of a Christian's course of duty, in order to be an approved disciple of Christ. He must deny himself, and take up his cross daily and bear it and follow Jesus in order to gain the commendation of the Master, "well done good and faithful servant."

"He that overcometh," says Jesus, "will I give to eat of the hidden manna" —"shall have a white stone and a new name engraved thereon"—"shall eat of the tree of Life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God"—"shall have power over the nations, even as I have received of my Father"—"shall not have his name blotted out of the Lamb's book of Life"—"shall be a pillar in the temple of God"—"shall sit with me on my throne even as I have overcome and sit with my Father on his throne." All these things to him who shall overcome—not to him who does not go at all into the service of God, neither to him who makes a start in the course and then falls back, but to him who presses onward, not turned aside by every wind of doctrine, nor discouraged by every wave of opposition, or overwhelmed by his easily besetting sins. The crosses of the Christian are to be taken up by him voluntarily, for neither God nor Jesus compels the obedience of men and women. It is a matter of their own free will whether they will accept the invitation and travel in the narrow path that leads to life, or go down the broad road to death and forgetfulness.

There is a picture on exhibition, illustrative of the four texts at the head of this article, and a most eloquent sermon does it preach. In the center foreground, stands an angelic figure, supporting a cross, while lying at her feet are a large number of crosses of all sizes. Leading up from the shadow at the right, past the full light of the center, and then off to the left until lost in darkness, is a broad beaten avenue, along which immediately in front and to the left, are several couples of persons who are passing and have passed by the angelic presence, who have not stopped to take up any of the crosses that lay beside their path. Some are still in the sunshine, some are just passing out into the deepening twilight, and some are nearly obscured by the thick gloomy pall that enshrouds the end of their way. Leading off to the background of the landscape, is a narrow, winding, rugged path, that takes its devious way over mountains and rocks and gulfs, but constantly ascending, until it terminates in a broad plateau under the full blaze of a shining crown in the blue sky over all. Along this rugged pathway, are men, women, and children passing singly, each one bearing on his or her shoulder a cross —some bending under the heavy weight, others with firm elastic tread, steadily pushing on up the steep, with their eyes fixed on the shining crown. Immediately in front of the angel stands two men: one grasping a heavy cross and lifting it with both hands to his shoulders, with knitted brow and compressed lips the very picture of determination, which says he has counted the cost, and accepts the situation. The other with one hand stretched out and the other clenched into his hair, stands undecided whether to take up the cross that lies at his feet and toil up the narrow tortuous path to the plains above, or go on in the broad and easy road that he has just turned aside from. Still another man has been so startled at discovering the rugged dimensions of his cross, that he has attempted to get out of the way of it with such alacrity, that he has stepped out of the broad road, and is only held back by his companion who looks wistfully at the crosses, and holds up one hand towards the crown. One old man with long skirt and broad brim has found his cross too heavy, and has laid it down and is sawing off one end of it; but while endeavoring to lighten his load, has been left far behind by those who set out with him. It is a vivid exposition of the subject.

The cross is to be taken up daily, not once in a while whenever we feel particularly strong and zealous, but every day of our lives, it is to be so taken up and borne steadily on as a part of our daily life. The Diagloft has it "bear his own cross." This is still more emphatic. Each must bear his own cross—no one can bear it for him. In the olden days of chivalry, the knights had armor bearers who bore the heavy plated dress and defense of their masters when they were not engaged in conflict; but the Christian has no such assistant: neither if he had, could he lay aside the armor with which he is panoplied, nor trust it or his cross to another; for the enemy who is opposed to him is vigilant and untiring, and seeks every advantage to win the day, and armor and cross must alike be borne by the Christian pilgrim, at all times, and under all circumstances, for there is "no discharge in this war." Some artist has painted a picture of a rosy cross which a woman is stooping down to pick up. If is neither a natural or reasonable conception. No cross while borne as such, bears roses, but thorns. The companion to this picture shows the same woman being crowned by Jesus with a crown of roses, which is true to the idea of cross and crown.

The crosses Christians are called on to bear are not all alike, but as diverse as their natures. The cross I ought to bear daily, may be a far different one from that which my brother is bearing so bravely and uncomplainingly. They are not something that is laid upon us externally by our Savior as a burden, but are such as grow out of our different dispositions, and become crosses as we deny ourselves and guard against our easily besetting sins. Let me be plain spoken and bring the matter home to ourselves, and see if the brethren of the one faith are bearing their crosses daily—or whether we take them up only to be laid down again as they begin to grow heavy and painful to carry. It won't do to throw them down at every piece of rugged road we find, if we do, we shall never see them change into crowns. If we are never tempted in a given direction, we cannot appreciate the struggles of him who is striving against temptation in that direction.

It is an easy matter for us when everything is prosperous and pleasant, to feel that we are all right, and are discharging our duty to our brethren and our God, to the best of our ability; that we have no particular desire to go away from him or his people. We are very amiable and sociable, when life is rose-tinted and is apparently a success in all its particulars, and we are well pleased with every body, ourselves included. Our blessings we are willing to acknowledge have all come from the Father, and we feel we are truly thankful for his mercy and loving kindness. But when the sunshine of prosperity is overcast with the clouds of adversity, how is it? Do we murmur at our lot? Do we repine at our position? Or do we rather in humble resignation say the Lord gave and has taken away, blessed be his holy name? Do we remember then that all things come from him, and that however bad our condition may be, we still have life, and still have time to secure to ourselves those riches laid up in heaven that will not take to themselves wings and fly away; and that God is still a loving Father, full of mercy and goodness towards them that fear him? If we do thus meekly bow (to his decrees shall I not say?) then we are bearing this cross but adversity has laid in our pathway and which we have taken up.

Again: When a brother or sister is in the way of prosperity, blessed with a full basket and store, and has the power and will bestow favors, it is an easy matter and very human to think and say what a charming disposition he has, and how noble and generous he is, and what a pleasure it is to do him a favor or kindness. Then it is an easy matter to do good unto him and speak well of him. His opinions are then received with deference and his ipse dixit is final. But on the contrary let the storms of adversity come upon him and heat him down—let his ability to bestow favors pass away, and how natural it is for man to forget the little kindnesses, the cheering words; the hearty God-speed that he so much needs, and for which, none but those who have felt it, know how sarcastically he yearns; and with lifted eyebrows, and nods, and shrugs show more plainly than words can express, what their thoughts are. How easily then it is to say unkind things of such an one, and magnify his faults to others. In his prosperous days his faults were overlooked or excused, now they are exaggerated and most severely condemned. He furnishes food for little gossips, and his failings are commented on with feelings nearly akin to satisfaction. Are we brethren like the world in this matter? If so we ought to take the cross of reform in this particular, and do unto others as we would that they should do unto us under similar circumstances. None but those who have passed through this furnace of affliction, know how like an oasis in a Sahara, refreshing to the weary and thirsty traveler, is the friendship and brotherly confidence of here and there a true Christian in the heartless world at such a time. May God give unto such in their present life his choicest blessings, for their kindness, confidence and sympathy. There is no need of such a prayer for their future life, for unto them it will be said in tones of unutterable love, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the the least of these."

There is another cross that all of us need to take up daily, and bear steadily up the rugged steep until victory shall be gained, and that is to cure our propensity for showing up each others rough points.

We all have them, some more, and some less, and they are all visible to others, if not to ourselves. Now it ought to be just as easy for us to find each others good points as the rough ones, for we must be very wretched indeed if we have not some good ones, although they may not be so prominent as the rough ones. The rough points under proper treatment, will become smooth, and appear uniform with the general surface of our character; but the trouble is, we do not usually give them that kind of treatment, and they get no better by our handling. The operative workman uses judgment in polishing off the rough points of his blocks of stone, and by chipping here and there they become perfect and beautiful ashlars fitted to adorn as well as support the edifice into which they are builded. We ought to find more pleasure in discussing the fair side of our brethren than the dark side. It is better to cast the mantle of charity over their failings, than to be continually probing the hateful sores, and so keeping them a perpetual theme for our conversation. Let the past suffice for we have been verily guilty in this thing. We ought to do something to eradicate these unsightly blemishes upon the otherwise fair character of our brother, rather than roll them over like a sweet morsel under our tongues. It is a delicate matter for one to remind another of his faults, but if it is done pleasantly and in spirit of brotherly love, and we do not receive the proof in the spirit in which it is given, knowing it is intended for our good, then we have laid upon us yet another cross, and that is to learn to receive admonishing from our brethren with meekness and thankfulness. We need not make these faults the gossip of a clique or text for a sermon. They need not be conned over and discussed in his absence, and he only made cognizant of the matter by some tale-bearer, who either wilfully or ignorantly reports half the discussion wrong. Let us remember if we can find no good trait to discuss in our brother's character, that "though speech is silvern, silence is golden." I am satisfied that this cross will rest heavily upon us, but we shall have no Cyrenian to bear it for us, we must each bear it for himself and herself as best we may, and pray God to give us the victory.

Another cross we all ought to bear every day and hour of our lives, and which I am persuaded is the most rugged of all we are called on to bear, is to keep in subjection our most easily besetting sin, selfishness. We are all apt to think more highly of ourselves than we ought, and that makes us tenacious of our rights and privileges. We should have of course our just rights, but we ought to be, as Christians, extremely careful in our anxiety to receive and maintain them, that we are not encroaching upon the domain of another's rights. The law of reciprocity is so nicely framed, that the line of demarkation between our own and another's rights is sometimes very fine, and we may only see our side of it, and forget that it has two sides, only one of which belongs to us. It is quite easy for us sometimes to call for justice and fairness when they incline our way, and yet be very obtuse and selfish when they turn the balance against us. Let us endeavor to deal fairly with all, even though it may seem to be against our present advantage. Our selfishness should not blind us or make us greedy to have the last word, or best position, or the most ample apology for fancied or real wrong suffered—nor yet make us insist on the last penny in settlement of controversy; but we ought to scan well our conduct, and see if we have rendered to our brother the just and full measure of his rights, or we exact from him the last item of ours. Although it is enjoined upon us to forgive our brother though he trespass against us seventy times seven, yet I imagine he will not be held guiltless for needing such leniency.

Selfishness makes us do things that are a disgrace to our Christian character, and reflect discredit on the cause we profess to love. It postpones to the day of approval by the Master, and unless we make haste and rid ourselves of the incubus we shall never have said unto us, "you have been faithful over a few things I will make thee ruler over many," but instead, we shall be wrecked and cast away. All our fair speeches and teachings will avail us nothing in the day of accounts if above all "Selfishness" is written. For every good deed we have done will find its impulse rooted therein—every act of assistance rendered—every favor bestowed will have been prompted by selfish motives. If we have anything about us that is in the way of our perfection, that hinders us in our progress towards the realization of our hopes—that tends to make the cross of Christ and the attainment of the kingdom anything short of the first and foremost duty and mainspring of our daily life, we ought to deny ourselves of it, or of any pleasure or hope of present advantage enjoyed or anticipated therefrom, and bear the cross however painful and unpleasant it may be, steadily forward. On such a cross, depend upon it, there will be no roses, for when it bears roses in lieu of thorns, it will no longer be a cross, but will have been changed to a crown. It will no longer be strife and turmoil, but victory and peace.

Jesus says "be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."—P.

The Bell in the Sea.

It is said that off the coast of Wales a large bell has been placed in the sea to warn vessels against too near an approach to the shoals above which it swings. It is so arranged that at every motion of the waves, however slight, it sends forth its admonishing sound. The inhabitants of a town that lies along the shore, more than a mile distant, may not hear it amid the din of business; or if they hear, they may not heed it, because accustomed to its unceasing tones, as the ticking or striking of a clock in our room is after awhile totally unnoticed. But whether forgotten or remembered the bell is pealing out its signals of danger or its softer notes, day after day, and night after night, and hour after hour.

Sometimes when the gale has rushed across the bosom of the Atlantic it rings a wild and rapid alarm: sometimes it almost seems to shriek amid the sullen moanings of the storm; sometimes at the touch of the rippling breeze it tells of gladness, like the chime of marriage bells; and sometimes as the wind is sinking into a great calm its melody steals over the water like sweetest music. Merchant vessels may speed along the track of trade; tempest-tossed mariners may struggle to gain the port; pleasure parties may sail around it with laugh and shout; funeral barges may pass it with the remains of the dead; but its voice is never silent, and to all it conveys a lesson if they have ears to hear.

No one can fail to perceive in this an appropriate symbol of the "Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Peter i. 23. Although too often unheard or unheeded, it is sounding its solemn warnings and its tenderest entreaties each succeeding moment. Many regard it as the disturber of their peace, but without it man would be inevitably stranded and wrecked upon the dark shores of a hopeless eternity. Its most terrific denunciations of the wrath of God against sin are after all but the alarum of the bell in the sea, when struck by the breaking billows; and the sinner, admonished in love, should lift his heart in adoring gratitude to him who is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Peter iii. 7. If a bell ringing above the shallow water had told of peril, when the Schiller was groping its way in gloom to be broken in pieces, its friendly voice would not have been despised by the passengers as the disturber of their peace.

"The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." Isa. lvii. 20. But when Jesus arises in his grace and might, and says "Peace, be still," to all this uproar, how like "dulcet symphonies" come the assurances and the promises of the Word to the believer! From that moment, if faith is in exercise, notes of silvery sweetness are always floating across the waters to delight the child of God. They are heard every morning as he renews his voyage; every evening as he lies down to slumber, a day's sail nearer home; in every hour of perplexity; in every night of sorrow; in every time of trial; animating, comforting, directing, sustaining him, and ringing out more and more clearly as he approaches "the shining shore." May the Lord lead his people to listen to the Word, constantly to the Word, until they recognize in it his own voice, and yield to his will an unquestioning and happy obedience in all things! "Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound." Psa. lxxxix.—The Truth.

For a Christian man it is not possible to walk across so much as a rood of the natural earth, with mind unagitated and rightly poised, without receiving strength and hope from some stone, flower, leaf or sound, nor without a sense of a dew falling upon him out of the sky.—Ruskin.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this lead the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion to the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, possessions of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Christ and the Resurrection.

Who is this amazing figure of purity, of wisdom, of dignity, of calm and balanced courage, that amid the rank growths of contemporary unwisdom and superstition stands up in such immeasurable superiority above his generation,—nay, not above his generation only, but above all generations? Who is this that, in the incredibly short space of three years, regenerated and redeemed a rapidly dying out and corrupting race? Who is this that—not for a throne, or a war horse, or from some literary pedestal of honor—but from a gibbet, has ruled over eighteen centuries, has transformed a world denying under Roman Cæsarism into the fresh youth and vigorous life that characterizes modern Christendom, and has even forced from the lips of the most advanced critics and philosophers of our own day such confessions as these, almost identical with the language of Mr. John Stuart Mill?

"The teaching of Jesus carried morality to the sublimest point attained, or even attainable, by humanity. The influence of his spiritual religion has been rendered doubly great by the unparalled purity and elevation of his own character. Surpassing in his sublime simplicity and earnestness the moral grandeur of Chakyamouni, and putting to the blush the sometimes sullied, though generally admirable teaching of Socrates and Plato, and the whole round of Greek philosophers. He presented the rare spectacle of a life, so far as we can estimate it, uniformly noble and consistent with his own lofty principles, so that the imitation of Christ has become almost the finale word in the preaching of his religion, and must continue to be one of the most powerful elements of its permanence."

Such acknowledgments appear to us to concede almost all that we could desire; and we feel strongly inclined to ask pardon of our author for every hard word we have said of him. After all, "Thou, O Galilean, hast conquered!" If this much can be said, if this absolutely amazing moral and historical miracle can be honestly allowed we feel the most entire confidence that a little farther reflection will not permit our author to stop where he now is. Jesus of Nazareth is, assuredly, either a great deal more or a great deal less than the words just quoted claim for him. His pretensions were clear. He did not aim merely to found a new moral philosophy, or to add one new link to the ever-lengthening chain of ethical speculation. He claimed to found a religion—a thing which alone can bring the highest morals home to the poor, to the slaves, to the vast unexecuted and unvivified masses of mankind.

Now the beauty and power of Christ's example having been fully conceded, it only remains to point out that one thing, and one alone has given authority to his teaching and has transformed it from a "philosophy" into a "religion," seizing with a divine force upon the imagination mankind. And that one thing is his resurrection from the dead. If that be not true, Christianity at once shrivels up into a disputable system of ethics. But if it be true, then Christianity lays its hand upon us and thrills us, as though it were with the hand of God. All other miracles may then be freely canvassed. Gospels may then be keenly criticised. Old Testament authorship may be thoroughly sifted; various readings and other literary phenomena learnedly descanted upon; history cleared of legends and falsehood: church mechanisms reformed and improved.

All these things, to one who has accepted Christ's resurrection, are as welcome and as free as air. For the key to the whole battle field has been mastered, the clue to the vast labyrinth of human problems has been gained, the question of questions has been answered the mystery of mysteries has been solved.—Edinburgh Review on Supernatural Religion.

He Comes Again.

"He comes again!" So angels said,
To those who watched the Lord depart;
And like a gladdening anthem sped
The message through each drooping heart.

"He comes again!" What words but these
Can yet avail to cheer our gloom?
He comes! before him darkness flees,
And light breaks forth e'en from the tomb.

"He comes again!" Nay, doubt it not.
Though weary seem thy hope's delay;
These waiting hours will be forgot
In presence of eternal day.

"He comes again!" Oh, by this hour
To steer through wildest storms of night.
To mark, seems this heavenly gleam,
Till morn arise and all grow bright!"

DR. TRISTRAM calls Palestine "the garden of Eden run wild. Every traveller is struck with the immense profusion, variety and brilliancy of the flowers."

MEN are perishing for lack of knowledge. There is a power that can save them, and you may use it, readers if you yourself have tried it. O go to work on men and women.

IF we have learned to subject ourselves willingly to the law of Christ, we shall be eminently fitted to teach others that spirit in the age to come, and may with the utmost confidence wait for the coming of the Master.

CHALMERS said, "As things stand at present our creeds and confessions have become effete, and the Bible is a dead letter; and that orthodoxy, which was at one time the glory, by withering into the inert and lifeless, is now the shame and reproach of all our churches."

CHRIST-LIKE men and women, says Pulsford, in their common every day routine, and in all their passive and silent state, like the leaves of fragrant plants, breath out into the air of the world healings and comfortings, which no one thinks of attributing to them.

SOME one has said, "It is a great deal better to live a holy life than to talk about it. We are told to let our light shine, and if it does we won't need to tell anybody it does. The light will be its own witness. Light houses don't ring bells and fire cannon to call attention to their shining—they just shine."

WHAT is the essential faith of so-called Christians in this year of our Lord 1896? We understand it to be this, in substance: To believe without evidence the doctrine of the Trinity in unity; the immortality of the soul; the substitutionary death of the Second person of the Trinity, to appease the wrath of the first person, in order to to save immortal souls from eternal torments, and to save them in heaven at death. If any one of the great religious Bodies does not consider some such faith as that necessary in order to enjoy its fellowship, we do not know it. And if there be one grain of divine truth in this essential belief we do not know it. Certain are we that God's Book says nothing about Trinity, or immortal souls, or substitution, or the second person of the Trinity, nor appeasing the wrath of God, nor saving immortal souls from eternal torments, to heaven. Solemnly, are those who do not build upon one truth of God, children of God? If so, on what principle?

A Lecture.—Vain Worship.

It is to be presumed that every person in this house believes in the worship of God, in theory if not in practice. And to such, the matter of acceptable worship should be as interesting as important. And what could be more important. It cannot be successfully disputed that man is a morally and religiously organized creature; and as such must worship something. And, in the nature of things he is gradually assimilated to the object he worships. This is proven by the character of the people corresponding with their conception of a God; notably the worshipers at the shrines Backus and Venus. From this point of view the importance of knowing how to offer acceptable worship to the One Living and true God is seen to be very great. We cannot become Godlike unless we know enough of him to know how to please him, and to come into communion with him. I have selected words recorded in Matt. xv. 9 and Mark vii. 7, as a foundation for remarks this evening. The Pharisees and Scribes came to Jesus and asked him why his disciples did not walk according to the traditions of the elders, and wash their hands before eating? He answered and said unto them, "Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, "This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Howbeit

IN VAIN DO THEY WORSHIP ME,

teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, for laying aside the commandments of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups and many other such like things ye do. And he said unto them, full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own traditions. Then he called the multitude and said unto them "Hear and understand: Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man." Being then told by his disciples that the Pharisees were offended after they had heard this saying, he answered and said, "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, SHALL BE ROOTED UP.

Let them alone,—they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." What a powerful sermon on the vast importance of the truth.—You see that man has nothing whatever to do with the conditions of salvation, or with intercourse with God. God will tolerate no interference with his prerogative. God is the offended One, man the offender. Rebels have no right to make terms of reconciliation—especially when they have taken up arms against an infinitely great, good, wise and beneficent Ruler. To lay aside the conditions offered by God, and attempt to bring about a peace to suit themselves is just to aggravate their rebellion. It shows there is no repentance, no compunction, and that they would return on no account but for the stress of circumstances; they lack the ability to subvert the government of God; but their will remains unchanged. Listen to the Great and Infallible Teacher. He says when told that the Pharisees were offended because he denounced those who reject the commandments of God and hold the traditions of men. "Every plant which my Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up. Let them alone." [Do not hearken to them.] They be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind," —what is the result? Does the Lord say they have been taught those things from their youth up, and are

VERY SINCERE AND ZEALOUS,

and endeavor to please God in that way, and will finally be accepted, together with their deluded followers, because of their devotion to what they think is right? Is this what he says? No, indeed. He says, "If the blind lead the blind both shall fall into the ditch. This is the disastrous end awaiting the leaders, and the led. Remember, this is Jesus speaking. He who spake as never man spake,—He whose love constrained the apostles to love him; he whose love induced him to lay down his life in behalf of others, and knowing what we do of him we are obliged to conclude that these stern appearing words were spoken in love. Knowing the fearful doom of these blind leaders and their victims, his love compelled him to speak and let the worst be known, and although he did not expect to influence his late audience for good, his great loving heart wanted his words to sound all down through the ages of the

ABSENCE OF THE NOBLEMAN

in the far country where he has to be invested with royal authority to take the kingdom. Yes; thank God his words have reached us. We have heard the disastrous end to be reached by the blind and their leaders,—and blind as we were, we have taken the warning, and anointed our eyes with divine eye-salve so that we can see and avoid the ditch. Dear hearers, we are dealing with solemn verities along here, and I feel the awful responsibilities of one who assumes to be the mouthpiece for God and Christ and truth; and I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people that I may be able to give the trumpet a certain sound, and not fail to declare the whole counsel of God,—and that God in his infinite mercy may set his seal to his own truth to-night. And now, can I reach one of the good feeling, and broad-gauge travellers who is deluding himself with the idea that sincerity will save him, no matter what he believes. I believe this to be a towering delusion—and I want to whisper a solemn warning words to him. Oh, hear his solemn words "Every Plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." Let them alone. They be blind leaders of the blind." I understand this to mean that they must not listen or hearken to them. Let them alone: they will lead you and then by a figure borrowed from nature, these traditions, or teachings, or commandments of men and all the truths of God are compared to plants—plants planted in the minds and hearts of people and says, "EVERY plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." Every one of them. As light has no fellowship with darkness,—as oil and water will not mix, so the commandments of men will not blend with the commandments of God. And in the case before us we see that the Pharisees knew that. They knew there was no affinity between the commandments of men and those of God,—one or the other must be set aside: they had to decide between the two, and did decide. They decided against God's commands, and for man's. As Jesus said, they laid aside the commandments of God! Just think of it! Think of the amount of wicked presumption bottled up in that act! Laying aside the commandment of God! Laying it aside as something beneath them,—something they had decided was a useless thing—something they could supply the place of themselves, that was

ANOTHER OF SATAN'S MASTERPIECES,

TO THE DITCH OF DEATH:

FAR SUPERIOR, IN THEIR ESTIMATION,

to the commandment of God;—something that was far less distasteful to them, and that would at the same time answer every purpose such as washing of hands,—the washing of pots and cups and brazen vessels and beds and many other such like things that had no purifying effect upon their hearts and lives. The word of Jesus for it, all these plants so carefully cultivated by themselves, shall be rooted up. Jesus says so. They will afford them no shelter or protection after rooted up. He told them it was not what enters man's mouth that defiles him, but what comes out of the mouth from the heart, or mind proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witnesses, blasphemies."....but "it did not defile a man to eat with unwashen hands." Think of men deliberately deciding upon this conduct of their own,—undertaking to decide what defiled a man

WITHOUT CONSULTING GOD

about it, and then trying to palm themselves off upon God and their fellow men, as God-fearing people, when they only drew near to him with their mouths when in heart they were far away from him. Is it any wonder Jesus called them hypocrites? Is it any wonder that they were offended, when, having read them through and through he exposed them before the very people whose praise they sought? Here I would call attention to the fact that God is proven to be the same unchangeable being after some seven hundred years had passed. The Scripture endorsed from Isaiah and quoted against the Pharisees was written at least 750 years before. And God's displeasure against those whose fear toward God is taught by the precepts of men is shown in the next verse,—he says he will do a marvelous work, for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid,—woe to them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, who seeth us? And who knoweth us? Surely your shall be esteemed as the potter's clay; for shall the work say of him that made it, He made it not? Or, shall the thing framed say of him that framed it, he had no understanding? This illustrates the words of Jesus in text. To lay aside God's plans and purposes and adopt their own, is to practically assume to know better than he, and tell him that he had no understanding when he mapped out the way for man to walk in. Please do not forget it,—traditions of men cannot be held in company with the commandment of God. Jesus' word for it, to keep the traditions of men is to reject the commandments of God; the commandment of God gives place to, and is laid aside for tradition. This should prepare us for what follows. "But teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Does this awful result come right home to us all? Do we realize the tremendous force of this divine statement? Can we make it real to us by entering into the spirit of these words? If we do, does it not fill our hearts with anguish when we see myriads upon myriads of people holding to the traditions of men, and yet worshiping God? Think they are approved of him? Think God is their Father,—think Jesus is their Elder Brother,—think they are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ to all the honor, majesty and power of his everlasting kingdom? Of course the sects of the Scribes and Pharisees have passed away with their peculiar tenets; but other traditions equally destructive, force existed all along the coast of time. God's thoughts have never been pleasing to man, nor man's to God. Man,—yes, the man who knows that by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin,—knows right well that death has passed upon all men, for that all have sinned, will still, in the face of these facts, oppose his will to God's even in the matter of his redemption. Death—doomed as he knows he is, he yet will not have about the conditions of reconciliation—and has the presumption to think that like the Pharisees of old that he can lay aside the commandment of God with impunity and hold to tradition, just as if God had never made known his law in the case, nor had any claim upon his fealty! The most astounding fact in the case is, that such people stoutly affirm that they are chil dren of God; and to venture to show them that they are not, in all affection, is to do so at the expense of their friendship.

TURNING OF THINGS UPSIDE DOWN

IN VAIN DO THEY WORSHIP ME,

As I have intimated, they do not believe in and trust upon the washing of hands, or cups and pots and brazen vessels and couches and many other things; they do lay aside the commandment of God but instead of believing something else, or imposing a new ritual upon themselves, they by tens of thousands have come to the conclusion that it makes no difference what they believe, or what they do if they keep within what are called the BOUNDS OF CHARITY.

To meet with otherwise intelligent and amiable people who are being driven along on the wave of this popular delusion is one of the trials of my life. Nothing scarcely, seems so sad. They say, they will come out all right if they are sincere. Without troubling themselves about what, or what not to believe—sincerity is everything. But sincere in what? Oh, how I wish I could induce all such to answer to themselves honestly this question, —"Sincerity in what?" Could they say they sincerely believed in God and in Jesus Christ whom he sent? This is a very short creed,—and if they believe that, of course they believe what Jesus said to the Pharisees, "In vain do they worship me teaching for doctrines (teaching) the commandments of men." They certainly do not believe in Jesus if they do not believe what he says. And now let me tenderly say to you, you will have love to harmonize these words of Jesus with that other article of your faith. Did you not say just now that it mattered not what one believed? Where did you pick up that item of faith? Did you find it in the Book of God? If not, then where? If God is not its author, who is? Did you get it from the great crowd who say the same thing whenever we corner them up by demanding for their assertions? Or, was it evolved from your own brain? I know you did not get it out of the Book of God, —in all that blessed volume you can find nothing that even hints that sincerity will save, apart from faith and obedience.

A THUS SAITH THE LORD

Report of Meeting held at Santa Ana, Cal.

A series of tent meetings was began July 30th as per announcement and held over two Sundays with fair attendance and good interest. Bro. Johnll'coox of Tempe, Arizona, preached concerning the promises made to the fathers. A kingdom on earth and a restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began. We trust that our labor was not in vain but that good results may follow. The brethren in this State are scattered very much and hard to get together. The few that were at this meeting rejoiced to be associated with those of like precious faith, and were encouraged to push on and endeavor to create a fund to bear the expense of an Evangelist in holding these meetings. A proposition was introduced that each member pay into the Treasurer such amount as he or she could afford, every three months, beginning Aug. 1, 1896. Some suggested one dollar, some more and some less, and it was left to conception of each one. A corresponding Secretary and Treasurer is necessary in this work and W. O. Stelly was chosen to act as both. Now brethren let us hear from you all and turn in your mite and we will soon be able to leave more of these meetings, we need them to revive us in the work and proclaim the glad tidings to a dying world. We will endeavor in this work to make the meetings as central as possible, and as often as the fund will permit. When paying in your money I will report as often as may be deemed necessary. We extend an invitation to all Restitutionbrethren to co-operate with us and we trust that all lovers of the truth will help us get a start in this work on the Pacific Coast.

Brethren present at the meeting were Bro. and Sister Lamphere, of Los Angeles Cal. Bro. and Sister Sperry, of South River Side Cal. Bro. and Sister Brewer, of Santa Ana Cal. Bro. and Sister Hatch, of Santa Ana, Cal. Bro. Chris Arnold of Florence, Cal Bro. Lock, of Tustin, Cal. Myself and father, of Pomona, Cal. Pray for us brethren that our work may steadily progress. Yours in the hope of the Kingdom.

W. O. STELLY.

Dear Restitution:

In your paper two weeks ago we saw a notice of a tent-meeting to be held at Santa Ana. We were glad, we had never been to a meeting of that kind and we made preparation to attend. Every thing seemed favorable to our going and Friday evening found us at the tent—strangers in the flesh to every one. Never seeing any of them before. But we had only been there a few minutes until we found we were all members of the same family. Our business was such then we could only stay until Monday but we had a love-feast indeed and we came away leaving many dear friends. Bro. Foote from Arizona, presided, and preached a pure gospel, and I am sure much good will be wit from it. For God has said "My Word shall not return to me void," etc. The few brethren and sisters in the faith were quickened and blessed with the preaching and meeting and hearing one and others testimony. I hope we may have many more like meetings in Southern Cal. Very Respectfully Yours.

Obituary.

CORA A. TICHENOR was born in Plymouth, Ind., November 15th 1879. Died at her home in Argos, August 18th 1896: aged 16 years 9 months and 3 days.

Cora was the oldest and only surviving child of William A. Tichenor and Nancy J. Tichenor. Her father preceded her to the sleep of death and her mother remains to mourn her loss.

She was taken away by that dread disease, consumption, patiently suffering nine months of illness. She fully realized for some time that her disease was incurable and often expressed her readiness to meet death, saying that it would be a relief, as she would then be at rest. Her only anxiety was for her mother, and friends with whom she dreaded to part.

Cora with six of her Sunday-school mates were immersed, and taken into the Church of God, at Argos, September 29, 1895, by Bro. B. F. Woodward. Thus she confessed to the world her faith in, and desire to obey, her Savior, having confidence in his power to raise her up at the last day, and reward her with the faithful. A large and sympathetic audience listened to words of comfort based on the words "these all died in faith" or in other words rested in full confidence in the promises of God.

To die in the faith necessitates having lived in the faith. The blessings continued in the promise were seen afar off in point of time, but brought near by the magnifying power of the truth. A liberal display of beautiful floral offerings attested the high esteem in which Sister Cora was held by her many young friends both in and out of the church.

J. F. WAGONER.

Editor Restitution:

I write to let you know that our Sister, and my only daughter Lydia B. Self, departed this life July 27, 1896, of stomach trouble and consumption. She was a great sufferer but bore it with patience. She leaves a husband and two children and many friends to mourn her loss. She much desired to live to raise her two children, left out of five. Three having gone before her. She expressed no fear of death having several years ago put her trust in the coming Savior, and by obedience to his command and living a consistent Christian life. She was looking for him from heaven to change our vile bodies to be fashioned like unto his glorious body and with them that are his be given a place in his everlasting Kingdom. We mourn not for her as one not having hope. For we hope to meet her in the kingdom of God where we will part no more. She was laid away to rest in the Reynolds cemetery five miles West of Buffalo, Dallas Co., Mo., there to await the coming of our Savior.

Poetry.

"I Am Blind, and Yet I See."

The following lines were written in memory of Martin Funkhouser Miley, who died April, 15, 1896, aged eighty years. His eyesight became impaired at the age of twenty-six, and for more than thirty years he was entirely blind.

These many years no light has crossed these orbs!
Only shadows walk in my pathway!
No radiant sun now gives me light,
No lovely flowers now greet
For me, so pure and bright,
That I may gather aught but their perfume.

Did I not say, mid their perfume?
Aye, in shade I see the gentle hand of him
Who doeth all things well;
And, though my eyes are blind,
I see the deep, blue sky above me swell,
As well the sparkling streams,
That flow so gently at my feet.
The blossoms of the field are mine,
Then, be not hazy, or cloudy,
Or many gradations of violet be,
Or rose, or yet of a softer pink,
For these, in spring, and summer greet my mind;
And prove my heavenly Father wondrous kind.

And then in autumn when I warm,
By with the precious life-giving sun;
O! see but, yet hence, to see
An orchard, laden rich for me.
Again, I see the hand of God in this;
That he has blessed the blind with rich, rich store
Of gifts untold, has he prodded them;
That all may have a precious part,
If only, they behold God's power and love,
In all His gifts—so old.

While I am blind—
Yet, darkness enwraps night and day!
Yet unto me he gave
The precious gift of sight, and speech and memory!
By these I have my friends to know;
To know my home and country;
To know the dear old home
Where I first did see the precious light!
To learn the fields and woodlands were so bright—
Even though, for me there is no light!
Now, what I am charmed the most to know, is
That in the blest eternity
Even blind eyes, then can see:
Can see the King in Beauty,
Yea, can see them here set to do his will,
And those long since born of God,
Who, then, through trials deep—
Even, through fiery furnaces, went unscathed,
And in from each hath spent the night unharmed:
Because the Lord is His
Who saves, they keep.
He who can save from lion's jaws,
And from the furnace heat,
Can surely make my eyes to see?
With this food hope my heart doth beat,
While here within this vale of tears.
By Faith, the way I see
The promises of beauty bright.
That lead me on, near unto thy side;
By faith and not by sight.
But on the morn when Christ will call,
I, then, will walk by sight.

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 8.

First Proposition:

Resolved: The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

When we deduce a conclusion from facts, that is reason; when we quote experts, that is authority. It may be human or divine. Once the negative tried reason. Reply One: "Mind is regulated and governed according to the size and quality of the brain, etc. We answered by giving the chemical analysis of the brain, showing that an elephant ought to be wiser than man and by ample quotations from experts. The testimony of Draper, Fiske, Tyndall, Huxley and Spencer is all the stronger because these men are unbelievers, with a decided prejudice which would lead them to deny this Scriptural teaching if they could. The facts of nature compel their assent. They oppose the materialist who teaches the ridiculous fallacy that matter can think, and they do it in the interests of truth gleaned from the works of God. How does the negative meet this strong testimony? By reason? No. Nature is not a Materialist, God is not a Sadducee. He takes a portion of Paul's reasoning where the apostle shows that the philosophers could not by mere meditation know God nor the way of salvation, and then applies it to experiments on the brain. The Bible was not given to test everything. In the eighth century Pope Zachary called a council to expel Virgilius, an Irish mathematician because he believed that the world is round "against God and his own soul."

Zachary had the same style of reasoning as the negative. The arguments of Virgilius could not be met but they were against the Pope's interpretation of certain O. T. Scriptures.

The negative invokes human wisdom. He calls up the ancient shade of Combe (died 1858) who was a phrenologist. He, as well as Gall and Spurzeim, adverates of the discarded system of phrenology, was an opponent of Christianity. Why are such good for him, but bad for me?

Then in meeting the conclusive argument of Jesus (John ii. 19, 22) he resorts to human wisdom. Jesus told the Jews that they would kill him, which would be to destroy his body. "I will raise it up." He raises the body. Evidently he was living and active while the body was dead and powerless. This one unequivocal declaration ought to solve the question as to the spirit's separate existence after death. How does the negative meet it? By rubbing on ointment. That is human wisdom. It is a potent medicine. Seriously, an illustration is not argument. There is no analogy between James rubbing his body while alive and Jesus raising his dead body.

So with "I, if I be lifted up." Jesus was alive when he was lifted upon the cross, body and spirit were not yet separated. When he came to die he said, "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit." "The body without the spirit is dead." But the spirit lived, and raised up the dead body. So Jesus deposes. Will the negative tell what "I" and "it" are in "I will raise it up?" If not the proposition stands proved.

An unwillingness to name even an English dictionary, which the negative will accept as authority, leaves us at sea as to definitions. No lexicographer will agree with him. Take a sample: "I give unto them eternal life." Why Lord can you give them that which they already have?" Existence is not life. Physical life is not spiritual life. The New Testament teaches that those who live in sin are dead. "He that believeth on me hath passed from death unto life." The proposition affirms that the spirit exists in a conscious state after death but whether that existence shall be death or life, depends on deeds done in the body. This lack of clear definition makes this system so confusing in its misunderstanding of Scripture. In it, death is annihilation and there is only one kind, i. e. physical. In the Bible there are at least three deaths possible to man and not one is annihilation. Again, Satan said, "Thou shalt not surely die." Most people believe not." God said, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." I believe God. I do not think death waited five minutes, certainly not nine hundred and thirty years. But does Elder Wilson believe that?

Since the Scripture must ultimately settle the question it may be asked why reason from nature? A snake may charm a bird. If a stick be passed slowly between the bird and the snake, the charm is broken and the frightened bird, almost captive, flies away.

One may fix his eyes on a certain class of texts till he thinks that they tell the whole truth. They may tell a half truth, which being put for the entire truth may teach falsehood, an argument from nature may break the charm.

E. g: The Universalists used to reason that Moses in giving the law right from God, in minuteness, gave a holy and just law. Being the first given it was to have pre-eminence. When a portion of the New Testament was brought to bear on their system which they could not answer they would turn back to Moses and since Moses never said a word about eternal punishment it could not be the meaning in the New Testament.

Now some good men have a theory which atheists believe and Sadducees held that the soul dies without the body. Their strong-hold is some poetical expressions and half truths in the Old Testament. When the New is quoted the eyes, glued on some Old Testament text accepted literally, cannot see the force of a higher revelation. There is a hope that by calling attention to the marvelous revelation through nature, the spell may be broken.

All the affirmative needs is a candid examination of facts and Scripture in order to convince any one that this modern form of Sadduceeism is not only materialistic, but by teaching that there is but one substance it is pantheistic, it limits God, is severely condemned by the Scriptures, has no real immortality, and its prevalence among men would be a public misfortune.

Consciense is a fact. Materialism cannot account for it. The thorough going, atheistic materialist denies human responsibility. Why not? If the brain produces thought, man has no more control over the motions of the brain than over the motions of his liver. But if the body and soul are the same, there can be no antagonism. Interests would be identical. If the brain, by moving, produces thought, it is impossible for it to plan its own destruction. The wild ass does not seek pain. The monkey never courts death. The elephant, with a larger brain than man, of the same constituent elements never covets material wisdom.

Socrates was condemned to drink poison, his friends planned for his escape, but he refused. He said that if he had consulted his body no doubt he would have fled but his good demon compelled him to stay and to drink the hemlock.

The Scriptures endorse this view. 1 Cor. xiii. 3, "Though I give my body to be burned." The "I" is superior to the body, owns it, can force it into the fire, from which the body, brain and all shrinks in terror. Is it not evident that the soul or spirit is of an entirely different nature from the body, that it acknowledges an unseen and higher law than the body, that the body is of the earth and earthy in all its desires and tendencies while the spirit is of God and must battle against the body as in the case of Socrates.

Paul agrees with Socrates in this regard. The 7th chapter of Romans is occupied with a vivid description of this terrible conflict. Every true man feels it. It is evident that since man is body, soul and spirit, any one may be spoken of as the man. "His sons buried him" that is only his body. Joseph asked Pilate for the body of Jesus, not for Jesus. His spirit was in Paradise. "To the spirits" wrote John. (1 John iv. 1) because many false prophets are gone out into the world." Here, and in the next verse, men are called "spirits" though yet in the body.

When the spiritual athlete writes "I buffet my body and bring it into bondage," (1 Cor. ix. 27) the "I" is the intelligent, willing feeling spirit, it owns the body and forces it into bondage to the responsible spirit. There could be no such conflict if the body was all. There would be harmony in our nature as there is in that of the ox or the eagle, conscience would be unknown. So strongly can trusted are the soul and body that Peter says that fleshly lusts war against the soul.

There is no sin in any physical act in itself. Whether it be sinful or not, depends not on the body, which is merely a tool and cannot sin, but on the mind. The body is incapable of thought, therefore cannot do wrong or right. The mind or soul determines that, and the body is not responsible. It would be if the brain thinks. We are to be judged according to the things done in the body (2 Cor. v. 10) or through the body. We do these things not the body, we are to be judged, not the body, we and our bodies are not identical.

The soul after death is either nowhere or everywhere or else it is somewhere. If nowhere, what is it that God can do to the soul which man cannot, if everywhere how can God cast it into hell? If somewhere then where, Oh! where is my friend's theory? Don't you think that reason ought to break the charm which a superficial reading of the Scriptures has cast over some minds?

GEO. T. SMITH.

REPLY NO. 8.

Our readers will observe, that Eld. Smith is still playing the same tune on an instrument of three strings, viz: "reason," "mind," and "materialism." So far, I have not paid very much attention to them considering the wisdom that is from above, to be superior, but for those who are too wise to be taught by God's Holy Book I will briefly appeal to reason.

Speaking of his favorite witnesses, Huxley, Spencer, and Tyndall, the affirmative says, their testimony "is all the stronger because these men are unbelievers with a decided prejudice which would lead them to deny this Scriptural teaching if they could..... They oppose the materialist who teaches the ridiculous fallacy that matter can think."

In law a prejudiced witness is considered of little value. His evidence is biased, and is absolutely unsafe, and the judge so instructs the jury. A witness with a "decided prejudice," is absolutely unreliable in anything.

Now, with regard to the "ridiculous fallacy that matter can think."

"All we know of life is through the various forms of matter in which it is manifested; and to say that life and consciousness in man exist independent of matter, is as preposterous and as presumptuous as to say the properties, uses, and value of gold exists independent of the material thing called gold. Through matter alone comes the knowledge we have of the thing called gravitation; and he would not be considered a sane man who would say that gravitation existed independent of matter."

The soul or spirit is said to be immaterial, that is, not material, or matter, its substance; cannot be seen, felt, or organized and is as clear a definition of the word nothing as we can arrive at.

"And since common sense must admit that nothing weighs nothing—that is nothing does not possess weight—it ought also to admit that nothing does not possess life.

Wherever there is weight, there must be something to preponderate. So where there is life, there must be a material something, for an immateriality (which is nothing), cannot live, any more than a nothing can preponderate. When we say a certain body weighs so much, we can make the body one thing, and its weight another; the weight being one of its properties, cannot exist, without the body: so when we say that the soul lives, we make the soul one thing, and its life another: the life being one of its properties, cannot be manifested without the soul.

"What is life, gravitation, thought, [illegible] motion, caloric, chemical affinity, cohesive attraction, independent of matter? Nothing.

We gain a knowledge of them only through the varied forms of matter; and to talk of a man, or an ox, independent of matter, or an immaterial soul or spirit, in the sense of an inner man, is as great an inverse paragon as an immaterial horse.

When any form is destroyed, no primal attribute is annihilated, but changed because the matter composing the form is not annihilated, but changed. For instance, a ton of anthracite coal has anthracite properties, but when it is burned up it is not anthracite; nor has it anthracite properties; but it still exists in other forms of matter; and still has the attributes of other forms. So a living man possesses living attributes, soul or spirit, and consciousness, but when he is burned up, his soul, spirit, and consciousness, do not exist, because the living man does not. But we are told that his life, spirit, or consciousness do not burn up. Very true; neither do the anthracite properties of the coal burn up when the coal burns, but those properties do not exist after the coal is burned. But we must not understand that when a man dies, life as a principle is extinct. Other men men still live; but the dead man lives not, his life only is extinct; and this is the very thing that is called death, the extinction of life in the form possessing it. As we have no means of detecting a principle except through some form of matter, we have no means of knowing that a man lives without a material body. As well might we say that a severe pain existed where there is no material form through which it is manifested, as to say that consciousness exists where there is no material form to manifest it.

"An alkali possesses certain properties, a result of a union of elementary things. For instance, potash is composed of potassium, (a metal) and oxygen. These in combination possess alkaline properties; but separate them, and their alkaline properties are destroyed; for neither the metal nor the oxygen alone possess them. But reunite them and the alkaline property is restored. The operation is called analysis and synthesis; the former decomposes and destroys the alkali; and the latter recomposes and restores the same.

"This has a close resemblance to death and resurrection. There is one great chemist who can analyze a man and reduce him to dust as he was and destroy his thoughts and consciousness then synthesize his dust and he becomes again a living man. With thoughts and consciousness restored. [illegible] When potash is decomposed a [illegible]mist would betray an ignorance of [illegible]art if he should say the alkali still [illegible]sted; and so does the theologian who says the soul exists when the man is decomposed.

"But says one, potash and men are very different things. True and yet they are in common with other things just alike. They both owe their properties to their combination of parts. So when a man dies his consciousness ceases until the dead man lives again. This must be admitted until it is demonstrated that the consciousness of man lives without body or parts. So dead men must be dead until the resurrection; and if there be no resurrection, we may "eat and drink for to-morrow we may die."

Eld. Smith has made several more allusions to the words "I" and "it." "I" the spirit and "it" the body. As he does not yet see the foolishness of that kind of reasoning, I will give him another sample to think about. I cut the following from a Chicago daily paper:

"Chicago has a Faust who wants to sell his body to Mephistopheles or a medical institution for $60. He called on the Rev. Duncan C. Milner of Armour Institute, yesterday, made a point blank offer of sale, and felt aggrieved when the clergyman would not buy.

The minister was sitting in his private office when the stranger came in and said abruptly.

"I want to sell my body. I understand you make a business of buying cadavers on the future delivery plan."

Eld. Smith says: "The I is the intelligent willing spirit, owns the body and forces it into bondage to the responsible spirit."

Well, if the I is the spirit, and "owns the body," I suppose it has the right to sell its body "on the future delivery plan." With Eld. Smith's interpretation, the last paragraph of the extract may be read as follows: "I (the spirit) want to sell my body. I (the spirit) understand you make a business of buying cadavers on the future delivery plan." What could the spirit do with the $60, if it had succeeded in selling the cadaver?"

Eld. Smith says his infidel witnesses "oppose the materialist who teaches the ridiculous fallacy that matter can think."

"Matter cannot think. Is there a man on earth who would have the audacity to affirm that. Almighty God cannot make living matter evolve thought? Look through a microscope and watch the myriads of animalcules in a drop of water, each of these monads has its appropriate organs, possesses power of motion and enjoys an independent vitality. Watch them, and you see will, and desire, and anger, and affection; and yet I suppose each of them is held, wisely, to be a unity; no need is seen, by competent judges, for a thinking spirit to act, by their vile organizations. Here is matter—a very speck itself, invisible to the naked eye—endowed with forces of thought, and volition, and passion, which though limited in their compass, are indisputable and astonishing realities. What the Almighty can effect on a lowly platform, cannot he accomplish on a grander one? "In general, however: there is no special necessity avowed for a thought-producing soul-bearing of the popular stamp, till we come to man. The monads, the monkeys, the lambs and the lion can shift very well without it, but man must have this inexplicable endowment, yea, he a soul without organization, an airy nothing, now incarnate, and soon to be discharged into the bounds of space. According to immaterialists, brain and nervous matter, can produce animalcule thought, and lion-thought, and elephant-thought; but is incompetent to evolve man-thought."

Eld. Smith has constantly urged a study of nature on the life question. What has nature to say with regard to an unending, immaterial soul? Can we realize that life can be manifested through something that has no material of any kind in its make up, has no substance, nothing real, something that is visionary, etherial, has not even the reality of a gaseous nature? Can have neither weight, shape, size, organism, and cannot occupy space? The theological description of an immortal soul, is an excellent definition of the word nothing.

In the study of nature we find no manifestation of real life, except through a real material organism. Study man, study the creation, study vegetable life, and in every case life is manifested through a real material organism. Life shows itself only through organism. There can be no immaterial organization. That which is immaterial, is not actual substance, you cannot construct an organism having form size and shape out of that which is not substance, has no real tangible, literal existence, except in the visionary fancy of a disorded vision.

Let me quote from another believer in an immaterial life:

"The damned shall be packed like brick in a kiln, and be so bound that they cannot move a limb, nor even the eye-lid; and while thus fixed, the Almighty shall blow the fires of hell through them forever."—Isaac Ambrose.

How can that which is not a literal substance be packed solid like brick in a kiln. Can immaterial limbs and eye-lids be bound so tight that they cannot be moved?" Please reason about this Elder Smith. And moreover can you love a God who would so pack helpless creatures, and "blow the fires of hell through them forever?"

Another immaterialist believes in immaterial souls being packed like brick in a kiln and tortured:

"The wicked shall be crowded together like bricks in a fiery furnace. What woes and lamentations shall be uttered when devils and reprobates and all the damned crew shall be driven into hell never to return! Down they go howling, shrieking, and gnashing their teeth. What wailing, weeping, roaring, yelling. Filling both heaven, earth and hell!"—Ebenezer Erskine.

Please explain how that which is immaterial, is no substance and does not occupy space, can be packed solid?

This horrible pit of suffering is the natural and legitimate outgrowth of the doctrine that the soul is immortal by nature. How much more reasonable and humane it would be to take the words of the New Testament: "Shall be punished with everlasting destruction?"

W. H. WILSON.

"The Keys."

Dear Restitution:

"Will some of your able writers, Bro. Wilson or some one that has the ability, explain what is meant by the Keys of the kingdom of heaven? I understand it was Peter who was addressed, but what are the keys? I take them to be the gospel, am I right? Also the meaning of the finding or loosing on earth or in heaven. If Peter forgave did God forgive? If otherwise with Peter was it otherwise with God? Has any one this power to-day? As I have been asking the meaning and cannot tell, please answer and oblige an anxious brother praying for light. The passage I refer to is in Matt. xvi. 19; xviii. 18."

Matt. xvi. 19.—The keys of the kingdom of heaven were not given to Peter alone (for they were equally given to all the apostles at the same time.—John xx. 21), but to him were first given the keys both of doctrine and discipline. He first, after our Lord's resurrection, exercised the apostleship (Acts i. 15); and he first, by preaching, opened the kingdom of heaven, both to the Jews (Acts ii.), and to the Gentiles (Acts x.)—Rev. John Wesley.

How absurd is the claim of the papacy that it holds the keys of the kingdom of heaven to this day! Peter opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers, as noted above, and it is never to be closed until the last sinner is saved or destroyed. The keys, in such a case, are useless, and might as well be thrown away, so far as the pope is concerned.

Matt. xviii. 18.—"Under the terms of binding and loosing are contained all those acts of discipline which Peter and his brethren performed as apostles; and undoubtedly what they performed on earth, God confirmed in heaven." These acts (continues Mr. Wesley) included excommunication from the church, in the spirit and power of Christ, and also absolution from a sentence of excommunication. In the primitive church absolution meant no more than a discharge from church censure. I know of no apostle who exercised the divine power of forgiving sin, even in the name of Christ. The Penitent was always referred to the Savior for salvation.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN.

Bro. Underwood:

In RESTITUTION of July 22, Bro. W. T. Baker quotes the Christian of London on Unitarianism. I am afraid the Christian is as far from the true gospel as the Unitarians. Is not the true dignity of Jesus his Messiahship (ignored by both) and not any view as to his person about which so many opinions have been held? Did not all Jewish believers hold the Oneness of the Supreme as declared by Moses and by our Lord? And also the Divine Sonship? Did not Gentile believers "turn from idols to serve the living and true God affirmed by Jesus to be the Father "only"? John xvii. 3. Is there any New Testament evidence that such believers were challenged for holding the One Supreme? Do not many Unitarians hold the supernatural birth of Jesus? Has not the absurdity of Trinitarianism done more harm to the gospel than Unitarianism? The error condemned by John in 1st Ep. was denying the humanity of Jesus, without which his Messiahship were impossible—while holding a mythical etherial pre-existent Emanation which really became the root of Trinitarianism. These were known in church history as Gnostics—knowing ones.

J. CAMERON.

To preach Christ is to preach what he hath revealed, either in the Old or New Testament; the declaring that he will come from heaven in flaming fire is in the apostle's sense preaching Christ.—John Wesley.

THE SOJOURN AT SINAI.

We did not quite finish our last lesson. What does this eighth verse of the 9th of Hebrews mean? "The way into the Holiest of All was not yet made manifest while the first Tabernacle was standing?" It means that Jesus had not yet come to take away the "sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin," that were a part of the worship under the first covenant. We are now under another covenant now. Jesus has come, and has given us the previous gospel. He has put his laws into our hearts and has written them in our minds. We love him and obey him. He has offered one sacrifice for sins forever, and having accepted him for our sacrifice, he remits our sins, he remembers them no more. This is the only way whereby we come into God's holy court and find pardon. We can have boldness to enter by the blood of Jesus. It is the new, or new made and living way. Heb. ix. 19, 20. We could not come to God, if we had no Savior. It would be of no use to pray. Our prayers would never reach his ears. How Auntie's heart beats with indescribable feelings as she thinks about it. How dreadful it would be. Men and women shut their ears, or laugh at us when we ask them to take Jesus for their Savior. They will not listen. They go talking about something else. They hate religion, but it is because they do not know what it is. It is purity, it is clearness of character. It is the only thing that will make us happy. We are nt rest when we know that we are doing that which is right in the sight of God, and it is the only way that we can be at rest. Nothing else in all the wide world will give us perfect peace and joy. But we are wandering from our subject. The shadowy pictures of the Tabernacle are gone. Christ entered not into the holy places made with hands: these were only figures of the true holy places,—the heavenly Jerusalem that is yet to come, in which we are to have eternal inheritance. Let the little ones be patient, it will not be long until they will see the beautiful City, and Auntie hopes they will all have an entrance there.

We have talked about the furniture of the Tabernacle and of the court before, shall we talk about them again? Not now? You want to learn some thing about the beautiful dress of the priests? You will have to turn to the 28th chapter of Exodus. Aaron and his sons were to be God's ministers.

Aaron, you remember was the brother of Moses. He had four sons; Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar. Nadab and Abihu died because they took common fire to put in their censers when they went to burn insense before the Lord. We suppose they were drunken. Look at Lev. x. 1, 2, 9. After Aaron's death, Eleazer was made High Priest, and the office went to his descendants, till the time of Eli, spoken of in connection with Samuel. Eli was descended from Ithmar. His children held the priesthood until the time of Solomon, who took it from Abiathar and restored it to Zadok of the house of Eleazar. The high priesthood lasted for about 1370 years. In all there were 80 high priests.

But you want to know about their dress. The high priest wore first, what we would call a tunic. It was made of fine linen, and was close fitting. He had loose linen trousers, and over the tunic and trousers, a sleeveless robe of blue that reached to his feet. A binding of woven work was put around the neck to make it strong. On the hem, or skirt of this robe, pomegranates were worked in colors of blue and purple and scarlet. Between the pomegranates, bells of gold were hung.

These bells were to tell the people that the priest was still living when he was out of their sight in the most Holy Place. While they could hear the sweet tinkling music, they knew that all was going well between him and their God. We have now the tunic, the trousers and the robe. But there is still another garment. It is called the ephod. And what is curious about it, is this, the word ephod means "oracular," that is, something that speaks in a divine or prophetic way. Could the Ephod speak? It was in two pieces, that hung down before and behind like an apron. The two parts were clasped together at the shoulders by leek green beryl or onyx stones. These stones were set in gold, and had the name of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved upon them. From Exodus xxxix. 4, it seems as if there were shoulder pieces, or straps, that were coupled together at the edges. These must have been narrow pieces, that went up from the sides of the ephod to the shoulders. The garment covered the breast and reached below the hips. The yarn with which it was worked, was of the same colors as the pomegranates. Gold was beaten into thin plates and cut into wires to work in with the colors. From the back part of the ephod, a rich girdle or belt came around the waist and was fastened in front. It was of linen and was worked in the same cunning way as the ephod. The ends reached to the feet.

The next thing was the breast-plate, or breast-plate of judgement. It, too, was of linen, beautifully embroidered, and when doubled, was a span or about ten inches broad. It was fastened to the shoulder pieces of the ephod, by chains of gold, at the lower side just above the curious girdle, it was bound by its rings to the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue. It could not be lost.

We have not said anything about the stones;—there were four rows of precious stones set in the breast-plate in settings of gold, upon each stone was engraved the name of one of the tribes, But what is meant by the strange words "the Urim and Thummim? Josephus, a Jewish writer thought they were the stones themselves, and so thought the seventy wise men who once made a translation of the Scriptures. Mr. Milman, also thinks it probable, that they were nothing more than the stones. A mitre, or turban was made for Aaron's head. To the front of this, a plate of gold was tied by a lace of blue. The words "Holiness to the Lord" were engraved upon the plate.

Aaron's sons had a little different dress. They had the loose linen trousers, the long coats or robes, th girdles and the turbans.

Announcement.

The brethren and sisters of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will meet in Conference at Lanark, Ill. commencing Sept. 18, 1896, and continuing over Sunday 20th. Preaching brethren D. M. Hadler and J. F. Wilcox are expected. Come let us have a feast of good news.

J. W. GLOFFELTY, Pr. in Cr.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the State of Indiana, will convene at Argos, Indiana, on Friday at 2 P. M., Sept. 18, 1896. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of truth to meet with us and enjoy at least one more reunion of those of like previous faith. We are admonished to be watchful, the signs thicken, events of momentous importance tell us plainly the hour of his coming is near. Be we therefore ready.

J. F. WAGONER, Pr.
A. C. ROBERTS Sec.

The Eleventh Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at the City Park, in Stanton, commencing the Lord willing, on Friday September 11th and will continue for ten days. We give one and all a cordial invitation to come and enjoy some blessed meeting with those of like previous faith. Come prepared to do all in your power to help make the meetings both pleasant and profitable. St. Paul is near the center of the State, being just twenty-five miles north of Grand Island, so let all who will have an equal chance to attend. We would like for all who can to bring tents; but to those who cannot, we say, "Come any way and we will see that you are cared for in the best manner possible." There will be a hunting tent at the park so that the sisters need not spend their time in cooking, but can enjoy the meetings. Yet we would say, "Bring your provisions with you, if you wish. You can dispose of them to the committee appointed for buying provisions, who will credit you for them. This will go towards paying your board at the tent." Once more we ask you to come and tarry with us for a short time, and help us in the Master's work. Let us serve him while we may, that we may be ready to meet him when he comes in glory to set up his kingdom on the earth. Brothers and Sisters, this time is not far distant. Let us strive to be faithful; and when the time comes, may we one and all enter into the rest that is prepared for the people of God.

Dear Restitution:

We wish to say to the brethren of the Church of God, of Southern Kansas, and throughout the State that a Conference will convene at Bitter Creek, Sumner Co., Kan., on Friday evening before the second Sunday in Sept., and continue over Sunday, and as much longer as the interest may demand. Brethren, this meeting is yours. Will you come to enjoy it? There will be some important business to attend to. Should any of you have a hobby please hitch him at the outside post. We do not want to have any wild mustangs loose in the crowd of people. Come together for religious worship, let us have peace, let us have a meeting commendable to the people of God. Times are very hard; but the Lord is liable to come, even if times are hard, whether we have a dollar or not, let us get ready, all make an extra effort to try and be at this meeting. Bro. L. E. Conner has promised to be with us, if it is possible. We would like to have as many come as possibly can come to do so. You may think times are too hard, but this is a burden all must bear in order to share the joys derived from it. This meeting will be held at the Southeast corner of Sumner Co., one-half mile south of Bitter Creek post office, Geuda Springs 7 miles north is the nearest railroad station. Any coming by rail may address me at Geuda Springs, or Bro. J. M. Vickery, Arkansas City, telling us when to meet you and we will be pleased to wait on you. This may be the last gathering in this life, so then come. Come one, come all.

Books and Tract List.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodson. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

"LITTLE CHRISTIANS."

Is that a writing any or the straightest? A 150 page pamphlet by Wm. Glenn Moncrieff, Chicago, was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid at ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for any who are interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send to them to this office at once.

"SET AS THOSE OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is a tract containing 12 pages of just such reading as a good many people want, and the square was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5 cts each or by the hundred at $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, with music for writing the air to the first lines of each. Flexible cloth 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, a clear, concise essay by Brother J. M. Stockman, and it impresses us as a new square article. It is so good we should like to see it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the door to open at God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each or 15 cts per dozen.

"Answer to Letter of A. Cramer," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Hummel, and printed in Bible Standard, April 22, 1895. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

"A Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4 page tract, being a letter written by Sister Addie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage and printed in the Restitution of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

"The Restitution of all Things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 2, 1896. NUMBER 33.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life necessary for final salvation.

Poetry.

Work Done for God Can Never Die.

Ho! ye who spend your strength for naught,
And slight the blessings Christ hath bought,
Toilers for earth and time and sense,
Oh, what shall be your recompense?
Of all that's done beneath the sky,
Little hath immortality;
What's done for earth fails by and by,
What's done for God can never die.

Ho! ye who join the eager strife
For gold or fame or pride of life,
Indulge the lusts of flesh and eye,
And for the world with worldlings vie
Death shall undo your toils as vain,
And leave you no abiding gain,
What's done for time ends by and by,
What's done for God can never die.

Sceptres and crowns will mock our trust,
Monarchs may crumble back to dust,
By moth or rust or theft or fire,
Treasures will flee and hopes expire,
Desire shall fail and strength decay,
The world itself shall pass away;
What's done for self ends by and by,
What's done for God can never die.

When comes the King in royal might,
To crush the wrong and crown the right,
When all the saints in glory meet,
No more to die, no more to weep;
When thrones are set and crowns are given,
With all the rich rewards of heaven,—
Oh, in that glorious by and by,
What's done for God can never die.

Hesaias. (Isa' C. V.) Chap. 54.

1. Rejoice thou sterile one, and thou who dost not bring forth: break forth and call for help, thou who dost not suffer birth-pangs, because many more are the offspring of the desolate one than of the one who hath the husband.

2. Make broad the place for thy tent and thy tent-curtains; pitch; spare not; make long thy tent-cords and strong thy tent-pins;

3. Still to the right hand and the left let fly; and thy seed will inherit nations, and thou will inhabit cities that have been made desolate:

4. Fear not, because thou hast been put to shame, nor be confounded because thou hast suffered reproach; For thou will ignore age-lasting shame, and the reproach of thy widowhood thou shalt nevermore have recalled to mind:

5. Because the Lord is it who create-eth thee, the Lord of Sabaoth is his name; and the one who hath delivered thee, he will have been called Israel's God by all the earth.

6. Not like a wife forsaken and dispirited hath the Lord called thee, nor as a wife who hath been hated from her youth, hath thy God said:

7. For a little time I forsook thee and with great mercy shall I be merciful to thee:

8. In a little anger I turned away my face from thee, and with age-lasting mercy shall I be merciful to thee, hath the Lord said who hath delivered thee.

9 Since the water of Noe's time, this is mine even as I swore to him at that time, that I would not be angry with the earth on thy account any more, nor in threatening thee.

10. Would the mountains change their places, nor thy hills be moved from their places; Even so neither will the mercy from me toward thee leave off, nor shall the covenant for thy peace be changed. For he hath spoken favorably to thee, O Lord.

11. Not humbled and unrestored hast thou been comforted; Lo, I am making ready for thee thy diamond-stone and thy foundations sapphire.

12. And I shall make thy battlements jasper, and thy gate-ways stones of chrystal, and thy outer-wall chosen stones;

13. And all thy sons taught of God, and in much peace thy offspring.

14. And in righteousness wilt thou have been built; Refrain from an unjust one and thou shalt not be afraid, and trembling will not draw nigh thee.

15. Lo, proselytes will come to thee through me, and will take up their abode with thee and will flee for refuge to thee.

16. Lo, I have created (generic not causal creation) thee not as a coppersmith who bloweth coals and bringeth out a utensil for employment; yea none, I have created thee not to decay unto loss.

17. Any instrumentality devised against thee will I not prosper: And every voice will stand up before thee in judgment; thou wilt make them to be inferior, and therein will they be amenable to thee. There is an inheritance for those who serve the Lord as courtiers, and ye will be my justified ones, saith the Lord.

CHAPTER 55.

1. Ye who thirst go your way to water and as many as have no money (silver) go, market and eat without money and without price wine and fat.

2. Why do ye value money and your labor that is not to satiety? May ye have hearkened unto me, and ye will eat good things, and your soul will luxuriate in good things.

3. Attend with your ears and may ye have followed in my ways: May ye have hearkened to me, and your soul will live in good things and I shall have covenanted with you an ever-lasting covenant, the holy, reliable things of David namely.

4. Lo, an instrumental testimony have I given him to be unto nations, a ruler and director for nations.

5. Nations that have not known thee will invoke thee, and laities that have not known thee will flee to thee for refuge, for the sake of the Lord thy God, the Sacred One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee (the Christ meant).

6. May ye have sought the Lord and when ye find him invoke him; and whenever he draweth nigh you,

7. Let the irreverent man forsake his ways and the transgressor his counsels, and may ye have turned unto the Lord, and he will have found mercy, because exceedingly will he remit your sins.

8. For my counsels are not as your counsels, nor my ways as your ways saith the Lord.

9. But as the heavens are above the earth even so is my way removed from your ways, and your thoughts from my thought.

10. For as whenever the rain or snow hath come down from out the heavens and may not return until it shall have saturated the earth, and it bring forth and bud, and give seed to the sower and bread to eat,

11. Even so will my oracular (spoken) word be, whatever shall have gone out of my mouth, shall not return until it shall have accomplished all that I may have purposed, and I will prosper thy ways and my commandments.

12. For with rejoicing will ye go out and with joy will ye have been taught; yea the mountains and the hills will leap out to receive you with joy and all the trees will clap with their branches.

13. And in the place of the broom-plant cypress will come up and in place of the fleabane myrtle will come up; and the Lord will be for a name and an eternal sign, and it will not fail.

CHAPTER 56.

1. Thus saith the Lord, Watch to guard judicial-procedure and may ye have done righteousness; For my instrumental salvation hath drawn nigh to arrive, and my mercy to be revealed.

2. Blessed happy is the man who doeth these things and the man who holdeth to them, and who is watching to guard the sabbatic-rites, not to desecrate them, and watching to keep his hands from doing unjust things.

3. Let not the one of another race who is relying on the Lord say, The Lord forsooth separateth me from his laity: And let not the eunuch say, I am a withered tree.

4. Thus saith the Lord to the eunuchs, As many of you as shall watch to guard my sabbatic-rites, and shall choose the things that I desire, and shall hold to my covenant.

5. I will give to them in my house and within my wall a place of renown better than sons or daughters, an everlasting name will I give to them and it will not leave off.

6. And to the people of other races who rely upon the Lord to serve him as bond-servants, and to love the name of the Lord, to the extent of being his bond-men and bond-maids, and all those who watch to guard my sabbatic-rites not to desecrate them, and who hold to my covenant:

7. I will lead them unto my sacred mountain, and cause them to rejoice in the house of my votive-prayer: their whole-burnt-offerings and their sacrifices will be acceptable upon my altar, for my house will have been called the house of votive-prayer for all the nations,

8. Hath the Lord said who gathereth together the dispersed ones of Israel, because I shall gather together unto him a synagogue.

9. All ye wild beasts of the field come hither, eat, all ye wild beasts of the forrest;

10. See, because they all have become blind, they have not comprehended; young dogs will not be able to bark; asleep in their hair, that like to slumber;

11. And reckless dogs in their soul are they, that do not know satiety, and wicked are they, dogs that do not know in an understanding way; They have all followed out their own ways, each one according to his own interest.

COMMENT.

The 54th chapter has been interpreted for us by Paul in Galatians, and the allegory of Sarra and Agar as individually representing the two covenants, one of "grace" and the other of "law" fully explained; and were it not for the bad translation of the C. V. and R. V. much that is now dark would be transparently clear it seems to me. "The sterile one" of the first verse is of course "Sarra" the wife of Habraam who is in temporary disgrace because of her sterility, while Agar the concubine is in temporary favor, because of her fertility, and she is therefore spoken of as "having the husband." While there is a blessing for all Habraam's offspring, yet the blessing is for "the Child of promise." "For in Isaac have we been called." Under the imagry here of an Eastern primitive household, the Habraamic covenant "for the nations" fully brought out. "And thy seed will inherit nations" one of the illustrative clauses. "Not humbled and unrestored hast thou been comforted" correlates with "the restoration spoken of through the mouth of all the prophets" of course, and is the beginning of "the great restoration of all things." This chapter should be read in the light of Paul's interpretation of it in Galatians.

The 55th chap. is the great invitation to the gospel "water," the water of life, and the spiritual "feast of fat things" made clear to us now in the gospel.

Read the 4th verse for its theology and oracular statement of what Christ is officially in his relation to us "the nations." And then read the 5th verse and learn for whose sake all this glory and work of beneficence is brought to pass. Then read the last clause of the 11th verse and learn how all this is brought about, namely "I will prosper thy ways and my commandments." Does this not exactly agree with Christ's own teaching and confession? Read the 18th verse for differences of translation, especially the last clause "the Lord will be for a name, etc." There is nothing finer in all literature, aside from the thought of inspiration than these two chapters.

The 56th chapter ought to be the text-book of the International Society for the promotion of arbitration between the nations of the present day.

It is the Christian assertion of the fundamental teaching of all Scripture namely—that "all God's ways are judicial ways," and I am free to confess that I believe that true Christianity has in the past and will in the future progress only as the thought of mankind becomes leavened with this great principle of judicial-procedure. As sons of God and partakers of the divine nature it is but natural to expect that the character of the Father should be exemplified in the offspring. Read the 6th and 7th verses of this chapter in the light of this exegesis and ponder upon the teaching. Then call to mind the fact that Christ himself quoted the last clause of this seventh verse and applied its teaching for our enlightenment.

Observe also the significance of the word "synagogue" in the eighth verse. For it is a synagogue of nations" that is here being spoken of.

Again notice the term "dogs" and the term "young dogs" and "the wild beasts of the field" and "the wild beasts of the forest" all here used in a parable sense as applied to "the nations" who, however, civilized they may be in the general acceptance of the term, yet are wanting in the graces of the true Christian civilization—This summed up in the last clause of the last verse, the 11th in this statement "They have all followed out their own ways, each one according to his own interest." In short as "dogs" or "wild-beasts" we lack the altruistic first principle of Christian civilization, self-sacrifice as bond-servants of the living God and his Christ. Genuine altruism is an enlightened and rational sacrifice of self for neighbor if the exigency requires it, and not a blind middle-age sacrifice of self to an inutile idea merely of offering a sacrifice, a concept which has its rise in selfishness and which results in acts that promote the worst forms of it as all history and experience teach us.

"Christ and Country" or Christianity in its Relation to the Earth.

Under the part of the heading above placed within quotation marks, there is in the last number of the American Sentinel. (No. 32.) a remarkable article over the signature of S., who I suppose is one of the Editors of the paper. The object is to show the relation of Christianity to the present world, and consequently the Christian's duty with relation to the country in which he lives. According to Mr. S's., understanding of the subject the present earth is destined to complete and eternal destruction. He says, speaking of "the plainest truths set forth in the Word of God." "It seems to be almost impossible for the vast majority even of those who profess to believe that Word, to understand that according to the teachings of Christianity sin has completely separated this world from the eternal purposes of God which are in Christ, so that there remains nothing for it but complete and eternal destruction."

This is a very sweeping assertion. But I do not see that the vast majority of the professors would or do disagree with him concerning the "complete and eternal destruction" of this world. They expect the earth in the great judgment day to be destroyed and they themselves to be taken to heaven to dwell there, or if they are to dwell on an earth it is not this earth, but a "new earth," and that is what Mr. S., believes as we shall see.

Mr. S. after speaking of the inconsistencies of "the ministers of the gospel," who teach the people that next to Christ is country," says concerning the Christian, "It is through Christ that he has a country." But that country is not on this earth. "It is a country which the Christian will dwell in after this earth has been consumed by fire." 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10.

After making this assertion Mr. S., goes on to explain that "if Adam had not sinned the Garden of Eden might have been extended indefinitely even until it covered the whole earth. Earth would then have been a perfect country, and that is the only kind of a country that the Creator purposed for man's abode. But Adam sinned and the world which God had given him passed from his hands into the hands of satan. Jesus Christ, by his death purchased back both man and his inheritance, and after this sin-cursed earth shall have been burned with fire a new creation will bring forth a new and perfect earth, even as a perfect earth was created in the beginning." "We, says the Apostle Peter, according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. 2 Pet. iii. 13. That is the Christian's country. This is what the works my country mean to him. According to this the new earth, the whole of it, is the Christian's country, and the "new earth" is not "this earth." This earth is to be destroyed. After saying these things he refers to Abraham and says. "He sought a country but he sought it not on this earth. His descendants Isaac and Jacob an Lot who like them believed the promises of God confessed likewise that here they were pilgrims and strangers. And they that say such things writes Paul, declare plainly that they seek a country. Heb. xi. 14. They might have returned to Palestine as good a country as was then on the earth, but now, it is written they desire a better country, that is an heavenly, wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city, v. 15, 16.

Mr. S., has certainly made his meaning plain that this earth is not the Christian's country, that the Christian's country is not on this earth, that it is the new earth. The reference to Heb. xi. 14, 15, shows that I have not misinterpreted him,—his reference and his comment. Paul says, concerning Abraham's seed "And truly if they had been mindful of that country whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is an heavenly." Mr. S., says, "They might have returned to Palestine as a good country as was then on the earth, but now, it is written, they desire a better country, that is an heavenly." Mr. S., has it in his mind that Paul was contemplating the descendants of Abraham as having gone out of Palestine when he said, They might have had opportunity to have returned if they had been mindful of that country whence they came out." But Mr. S., has misinterpreted Paul, and misinterpreted the promises made to Abraham, and misinterpreted the "gospel." A careful examination of Paul's words will show this. In the 8th verse we have these words, "By faith Abraham when he was called out to go into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance obeyed, and he went out not knowing whither he went." Here Paul says, the place to which Abraham was called was the place which he should after receive for an inheritance. This is very definite. In the ninth verse he says, "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob the heirs with him of the same promise." Paul says, Abraham sojourned in the land of promise: and we know that was the land of Canaan or Palestine. And according to Paul that was the "place" which he shall after receive for an "inheritance." Isaac and Jacob were heirs with him of the same promise, the same inheritance. So much is plain, so much is certain. The tenth verse reads, "For he looked for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God."

11 verse. Through faith Sarah herself received strength to conceive seed and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised.

12. Therefore sprang there even of one and him as good as dead so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea-shore innumerable.

13. These all died in faith not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

14. For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country." Now comes the misinterpreted text.

15. "And truly if they had been mindful of that country whence they came out, they have had opportunity to have returned.

16. But now they desire a better country, that is an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city."

There is nothing in these verses, from the 8th to the 16th inclusive, showing that Abraham's Children had gone out of the land of Canaan, and had become sojourners in other lands, and were desiring a better country than the land of Canaan, and not desiring to return to that land. On the contrary he speaks of Abraham having in obedience to God's call gone out into a place which he should receive for an inheritance, and calls the same place the land of promise and says that Abraham sojourned in that land as in a strange country with Isaac and Jacob the heirs with him of the same promise. To say that Abraham's children might have had opportunity to have returned to the land of Palestine, but desired a better country than Palestine, is to make the apostle inconsistent with himself. What has already been stated proves this and it is not necessary to repeat it. The interpretation is inconsistent with the plain wording of the promises and the history of the case. Abraham dwelt in Mesopotamia in the land of the Chaldeans, when God called him to leave his country and his father's house and come into a land which he would tell him of, Acts vii. 2, 3; Gen. xi. 31, 32; xii. 1. He obeyed and went out of that land and finally came into the land of Canaan, the land in which his descendants afterward dwelt, in which the Jews dwelt in Stephen's time. Acts vii. 4. After he came into that land God promised to give it to him and to his seed for an everlasting possession. The first promise says, "Unto thy seed will I give this land." Gen. xii. 7. The second says, "Lift up now thine eyes and look from the place where thou art, northward and southward, and eastward and westward, for all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it and to thy seed forever.....Arise and walk through the land in the length of it and in the breadth of it for I will give it unto thee." This language is definite and plain. Abraham was told to look upon the land which God would give him, to walk through it and survey it in its length and breadth. The record does not say that God took him "off in vision" to a new earth which he promised to create and to give to him. What he saw he saw with his natural eyes—the land of his sojourning. The land that Abraham's children might have returned to if they had so desired, was the land he dwelt in when God called him. They sought a heavenly country, and such will Canaan be when the promise is fulfilled. Abraham's children believing the promises made to Abraham could not have expected a new earth which would not be this earth, because the promised country was on this earth. This is certain if language can make anything certain. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, were men of plain common sense not allegorizers of God's word, and when he promised to give the land of Canaan, the land of their sojourning, they expected that he would do exactly what he promised. There was nothing to cause them to expect any thing else. There was nothing in the promises concerning an earth to be created. The land promised was a part of this earth, and they were in the land, God was not deceiving them; therefore knowing that they would understand the promises in the literal sense of the term he intended them to be so understood. Christianity then has a relation to this earth, which it teaches is to be purified from the curse and become the home of God's redeemed people. This will be the final state. But God has also for that particular land promised to Abraham and his seed, in the age which will be immediately after this. He will re-establish the kingdom of Israel in that land under the reign of the Messiah and his glorified brethren, the saints, and extend its dominion over all the countries of the earth. The proof of this in the Bible is abundant. But the vast majority see it not and the Sentinel on that subject is with the majority.

The Restitution.

EDITORIAL STAFF,
Directors of the C. P. Association.

M. JOBLIN, Corresponding Editor.

PLYMOUTH, IND. SEPTEMBER 2, 1896.

BROTHER M. Joblin informs us that he will be at the Argos Conference, notice of which is given elsewhere.

WE hope our brethren will respond liberally to the proposition to send THE RESTITUTION on trial for three months for 25 cents, to those who do not take it. In this way much good can be done, and many new names added to the list.

MANY parents, who are toiling hard and depriving themselves of many comforts in order to give their children a classic education, should remember the words of John Lord. He said: "There is no more absurd cant than that culture of the mind favors the culture of the heart. Education seldom keeps people from folly when the will is not influenced by virtue. And to this should be added the reminder of Youmans, that "many a college student only succeeds in mastering a disqualifying culture."

THE following letter came to hand and we print it entire, that the friends referred to may know that Bro. Joblin did send word, but for some cause the letter never reached us. It surely would have been given place at once. Dear Bro. Underwood:

I sent notice of baptism of five in Cleveland some two weeks ago. Wish you would publish it, as parties like to inform their friends and relatives in that way.

The letter in which it was sent was sent on purpose,—no other matter for publication in it. You will please add the following to it:

Later. On Tuesday evening Aug. 18th at a special meeting we had the unspeakable joy of baptizing two more trusters in the covenants of promise, into the all saving name of Jesus. It was a season of refreshing, long to be remembered. Bro. Henry S. Davis and his beloved wife, after a mighty conflict with themselves, yielded to the power of truth, and now experience the peace the world can neither give nor take away. Bro. Davis has been a member of the Presbyterian Church, the Congregational Church, and, for some sixteen years has been till lately connected with the Epworth League Methodist Church,—and a great worker in the Young Men's Christian Association. He had many, many ties to sever, but they are severed, thank God, and he has been enrolled with the sect everywhere spoken against. Happily, Sister Davis, who had many years been a member of the Disciple Church also fell in love with the truth, and so both cherish the same blessed hope. May the Lord bless them, and make them a blessing to others, while they live, and crown them with glory by and by.

WE give below a letter from Sister Oliver regarding the notice of the Kansas Conference. Just what is meant by "an advance truth" we do not know, and do hope it is nothing that will cause "jealousy." For ourselves we have thought the notice for the Conference a good one, and that it is a good thing to leave off all these "advance" views, if such they be, and preach some of the "forty years ago" regular saving GOSPEL. The kind that is the "power of God unto salvation." Brethren, if you have "jealousy" in your heart, cast it out. Do you believe the Master will come soon? REALLY do you think so. Say, when he comes do you want him to find you arguing some fine spun theory that is causing strife and division, or would you rather be "caught" preaching the gospel? Some one says "Milk for babes, strong meat for me please." All right, we will not dispute it. Another says, "We are to grow in knowledge, keep on learning all the time." Yes, that is so, but if you will find the text and see that your growth in knowledge is kept in proportion to you growth in grace you will be all right. Don't get knowledge at the expense of grace. In love to all concerned.

Dear Restitution:

I noticed an item in THE RESTITUTION purporting to be a notice of Conference Meeting at Bitter Creek, Kansas, which my son and self had anticipated attending, but with human depravity it is hard to discern whether that is a notice for the gathering of God's people or an auction of mustang ponies. For fear that some one would come with an advance truth over what was embraced forty years ago and that they would not be the origin of it, they have side tracked it by substituting the word hobby, and it is to be hitched at the first side post. We feel to exclaim with the souls under the altar "How long, O Lord will this spirit of jealousy continue." Now come you that should be brethren and sisters in the like precious faith, unbind the spirit of jealousy, hang up your eyed hook and break that iron bedstead and invite all new truth and with brotherly love reason one with another. By so doing we can grow in the knowledge of the truth, and receive a greater blessing here in this life by obeying two commandments, viz., "Search the Scriptures and love one another." And should the oldest one of you live one hundred years you will then fall short of a full knowledge of God's great purpose. And until such a reform takes place we shall feel shut out of your meetings. As the last messenger to run on earth has told us to come up out of such. And we pray that soon brotherly love will reign in the hearts of all our people.

Submitted in love to all by one in search of the truth.

MRS. LIZZIE B. OLIVER.

Passing Events in the Light of Prophecy, Gleaned from European Writers.

The London Standard in a leading article on Lord Dufferin's speech at the annual banquet of the British Chamber of Commerce in Paris, says, "The need for prudence and reserve on the part of those who control the destiny of nations was emphasized by Lord Dufferin in his striking picture of the condition of Europe at the present moment—every power prepared for war,—an atmosphere charged with electricity, and the storms ready to burst if any one of a half a dozen men were but to raise his hand, or speak above his voice."

"The Figaro contains an article dated June 15th by a well known diplomatist, discussing the retirement of Lord Dufferin, he says: "It will occur at one of the most critical and unfortunate moments that have arisen in the relations between France and England. The task of Lord Dufferin's successor, whoever he may be, will be one of the most thankless. Egypt is a cloud between the two countries, and it is a cloud which gets larger and larger, as each succeeding event shows only too clearly all the unscrupulous and selfish efforts made by England to remain there."

The Constantinople correspondent of the Daily News, says considerable anxiety exists in consequence of the continued arrests in the capital of both Armenians and Turks, but especially the latter. The city is full of rumors of the discovery of conspiracies and increased vigilance at the Palace. Some of these rumors are manifestly false, but without the allegation of anything definite, well informed persons speak with anxiety of the present situation.

The Turkish troops at Mecca, Medina and Jedda, have mutinied for want of pay and rations; and the whole empire is in a state of unrest, but the most critical point at present is the Island of Crete. The unanimous action on the part of the Great Powers in regard to Crete is at length a fact. Their proposals were, The immediate convocation of the Cretan Assembly, an amnesty to the Insurgents, and the appointment of a Christian Governor. And to these the Porte has yielded. But the impression prevails at Crete, that the proposals have come too late. Turkish troops continue to be poured into the island, and volunteers are arriving from Greece to join the Insurgents. The later development of the situation inspires fear of a prolongation of hostilities, resulting in further complications. A telegram from Constantinople says there is considerable activity noticeable in the shipbuilding departments of the arsenals on the Golden Horn; and at Ismidt an Imperial trade has been issued ordering to push forward as much as possible the construction of all warships now on the stocks. All this activity is attributed to events in Crete, and the possibility of complications with Greece.

It is said that several embassies in Constantinople have received an anonymous letter calling attention to the unendurable and desperate condition of the Armenians, who declare their resolve to free themselves from the tyranny of Turkey, casting upon their oppressors the responsibility for all that may occur. This has produced an impression in certain diplomatic circles, especially as during the last week there has been a growing agitation among the Armenians.

It is said that the late M. Jules Simon predicted that the inevitable break-up of the Turkish Empire would be precipitated by a quarrel over the ultimate control of Egypt. England, or some other Power, he thought would press the Sultan from one direction, while Russia, followed her traditional policy by an advance on Constantinople. He had no doubt France would come by her own so far as her Syrian claims in the East were concerned, and would also secure compensation on the Northern coasts of Africa, as a set-off to any material advantage reaped by Great Britain, at the expense of the Turk.

The Jerusalem correspondent of the Jewish Chronicle writes that Baron Edmond de Rothschild has established another colony. It is called in Arabic Mutelle, and is near Galilee. The village with houses and baths, and land, equal to nearly three thousand acres, with many springs on the land, and a water-power mill, and the sources of the Jordan near by, has been bought from the Druse Tholuth Bassan Hassan, has left four executors to carry on the good work of helping his down trodden race.

The Sultan's health is said to be so poor that the evident approach of the day when his enfeebled fingers will cease to hold the reins of government, causes equal joy and apprehension. The latter not being lessened by recent additions to the already enormous garrison. A period of complete anarchy is a probable contingency which is causing anxiety at more than one embassy.

Jesus said Jerusalem should be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And when we think of the once mighty Turkish Empire, and now see it in its decrepitude we are obliged to conclude that Gentile times are nearing the end. The Trender-down of Jerusalem will soon be trodden down himself, if coming events cast their shadow before.

A Lecture.—Vain Worship. No. 2.

It matters not whether this idea was imbibed from others, or is the result of the thinking of your own flesh, it is of man, it is not of God. The God-idea is not in it. The God-idea was expressed by Paul, who said he was "not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," and then tell us why: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. We kindly say to you that this divine statement grinds you to powder. It annihilates it. Salvation is predicated upon faith, in that Scripture, as in scores of others; notably in the words of Jesus in Mark xvi. 16. "Go ye into all the world." This was said to his disciples just before leaving them. Why did he order them to scatter in that way? Why not let them

LIVE AND LOVE TOGETHER?

Oh, there was work for them to do, and the next words tell us what it was: "Go ye into all the world and teach the gospel to every creature." For what purpose they were to preach is disclosed in the next words following: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned." Now, then either Jesus and Paul made a tremendous blunder, or else the sincerity-will-save idea is a delusion. You can take your choice, but I implore you not to decide till you have gone thoroughly over the words of Jesus and his apostles with the object of knowing the mind of the Spirit upon the vital question.—But it may be profitable to ask here, WHY it is that worship is vain on the part of those who teach for doctrines the commandments or doctrines of men? I have just shown that salvation depends upon the belief of the gospel; this, of itself is conclusive; no such latitude as you claim is allowed. Besides, Jesus in John iv. 24 says:—"God is Spirit; and they that worship him [acceptably] must worship him in spirit and in truth." Here we find two essential elements in acceptable worship; viz:—Spirit and Truth. Spirit stands for the mind, the will, the affection,—sincerity—In a word, it must be in contrast with mere lip service, that is so offensive to God. But there is another essential element in acceptable worship:—We must worship in truth. But here it is necessary to ask what it is to worship in Truth? First, I would say, as we can know of no God except as he reveals himself to us, to worship in Truth is to worship the One Living and True God who has revealed himself to us in the Word of Truth. Secondly, it is to thank and praise, and revere him for what he has actually done for us in the past: what he is actually doing for us at the present time, and what he promises to do for us in the future. This is the most comprehensive way I am able to state it. In view, then, of the fact that Jesus says, those who lay aside the commandment of God and hold the traditions of men, worship in vain, I am in duty bound to examine the popular systems of the day, and point out where and in what respect they are doing as the Pharisees did, and incurring the same condemnation, travelling on to the same disastrous ditch, the pit of corruption, because of spiritual blindness. What, then, to begin at the very foundation, is believed and taught respecting God? Do they direct us to Jehovah's own declaration of himself in Isaiah xlv. 5. "I am the Jehovah, and there is none else?" And of whom the prophet says verse 11, "Thus saith Jehovah, his Maker".....v. 22, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God, and there is none else." Do they point to the explicit [illegible] of Jesus in John xvii. 3, "And this is Life Eternal, that they might know thee the ONLY TRUE GOD, —and, some one else beside the one Living and true God Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent?" Do they call attention to I Cor. viii. 4 where the Spirit in Paul says, "There is none other God but one? For though there be that are CALLED Gods, whether in heaven or in earth, as there be gods many, and lords many. But to us, there is but one God" i. e. To Paul and the church of God at Corinth and Cleveland, Ohio, and elsewhere,—to them sanctified in Christ Jesus,

HEART-WORSHIP

THE HOLY ONE OF ISRAEL

THERE IS BUT ONE GOD.

And who is he? The Spirit's answer follows immediately as to who the One God is,—it is the FATHER, of whom are all things, and we in him. The Greek is much stronger than this translation. It says: "Yet to us there is but one God, the Father, OUT OF WHOM are all things, and we for him. I now solemnly ask, what do the religious systems do with these commands and declarations of the Spirit in the prophets, in Jesus and in the apostles? What do they do with them? They do exactly as the Pharisees did.—they lay aside these commandments of God and hold to traditions or commands, or ecclesiastical decrees of men. Doctrines and practices having no authority from the Scriptures gradually crept into existence, showing a departure from the simplicity of the gospel, to the complex system of Trinitarianism. The first departure was in formulating a creed at all, when they had the will of God as expressed by his thoroughly equipped messengers. The very first creed, called the Apostles' Creed did not depart from the truth as

TO THE UNITY OF GOD.

It said "I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, his only Son our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried," etc., etc.

The Nicene Creed was the next, dated A. D. 325, with additions made by the council of Constantinople in A. D. 381. After saying "I believe in One God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth," it goes on to say, "And in One Lord Jesus Christ.....begotten of his Father before all worlds, God of God, Light of Light, Very God of Very God, begotten not made, and much more, as if at Constantinople had had later revelations than those near apostolic times and wrote the Apostles' Creed. But it remained for the Athenasian Creed a hundred years later to complete the apostasy from the Truth concerning the One Living and True God. It commences by saying that "whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith—which faith except every one do keep, without doubt he shall perish—everlastingly," and then proceed to say what that faith is: viz.: —One God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity, neither confounding the persons nor dividing the substance—Such as "the Father, is, such is the Son, and such the Holy Ghost—The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate, and the Holy Ghost uncreate. The Father Eternal, the Son Eternal, the Holy Ghost Eternal. The Father Almighty, the Son Almighty, the Holy Ghost Almighty.—The Father is God, and the Holy Spirit is God, and yet they are not three Gods, but one God. This, with a great many more of just such senseless assertions is what composes what is called the Mystery of the Holy Trinity. Now, inasmuch as it is not in the Bible, nor the first creed after the Apostolic Times,—you see plainly where it comes from. The Mystery of iniquity is it. It is a man-made mystery as the grand declarations of the Spirit already quoted prove; and the penality of not believing this abominable perversion, this presumptive blasphemy is said to be to perish everlastingly. This is where the doctrine of the Trinity comes from, note it well. And note, too, that we have to repudiate that human document or creed and every other human creed, and begin again,—we come to the great fountain of Truth with our pitchers, and draw and draw again till our minds are illumined with the spirit of him, out of whom are all things; and it gives us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

THE SON IS GOD,

THIS EXPLAINS OUR ISOLATION.

This is why, after teaching the truth of God we baptize converts, no matter to what church they have belonged nor how long. Why we worship no other God? Is that not sufficient reason? We worship the One Living and true God, of whom Jesus says it is Eternal Life to know. Oh, what a rock to be founded upon.—The whole apostasy can neither move nor daunt us. Brethren, and does it not make you fell like shouting aloud for joy when you hear the words of Jesus? The One Living and true God, whom to know is Life Eternal; providing they know, too, Jesus Christ, whom he sent? You may sit up all night reading about God of God, and Light of Light, in the Athenian's Creed, but you can get no Eternal Life out of it. There is none in it.

Conference Report,

The Annual Conference of the Church of God met at Marshalltown, Iowa, Aug. 13th, and continued till the 23rd inst. Preachers present were A. J. Eychaner, O. J. Allard, D. M. Hadler, J. B. Cruton, G. M. Myers, John Garton, W. L. Crowe, and J. F. Wilcox of Chicago. Many able discourses were delivered and able essays read.

An able essay was read by Sister Libbie Palmer on "Universal Resurrection," and an able essay by Bro. Brinkerhoff of Garwin, Ia., on "Yearly Communion;" also two essays by G. M. Myers. One on "Spirit" and the other on "The New Birth;" and an able essay by J. F. Wilcox on the "Life of Jesus."

Three put on Christ by baptism. They were Sister Schenck of Brookfield, Mo., and A. J. Dunn of the same place and Ada Allen. May they be found walking in the new life when Jesus comes.

The old tent was shipped to Belle Plain and the new tent was shipped to Sac City where Bro. A. J. Eychaner begins work, to be joined soon by some other preacher of the truth.

The officers appointed for the coming year were G. M Meyers, Chairman, A. J. Eychaner, Treasurer, O. J. Allard, Secretary. Money paid in and subscribed for the coming year for evangelistic work $231.89.

We mean to organize our forces for more effectual and thorough work in Iowa. With good organization in as every state in the union, we could turn the world upside down, and send out many more laborers into the vineyard. Let all who read this do some thing for the work in their own state or somewhere else, but do something. It is high time to awake out of sleep, for our salvation is near, and the time for work is short.

W. L. CROWE.

Dear Restitution:

The Annual Conference of the State of Iowa, has just closed at Marshalltown after a session of eleven days. It began on the 13th and closed Sunday night the 23rd inst. A goodly attendance of brethren from various parts of the State and some few from adjoining States gave the meeting success from the start. The interest was unbroken and the spirit of love rejoined throughout. Personally I can say that it was to me a beginning of new life, a refreshing shower upon the parched and perishing field. I renewed acquaintance with many old friends, and found many new friendships which I hope will not be broken either in time or in eternity. The attendance was good from the town and surrounding country and a spirit of inquiry started which I believe will not subside in a day. Five obeyed the command with joyful hearts, and were immersed in the Iowa river, in the name of the Master. One of the tents was shipped to Sac City on Monday where Brothers Eychaner, and Crowe, begin meetings on Thursday, of this week. The other tent is now being erected at Belle Plaine where Bro. Garton and myself expect to remain for a couple of weeks at least, when I shall go to Lamark, Ill., to attend the conference at that place.

Yours in hope of the gospel.

J. F. WILCOX.

Report of Discussion.

Editor Restitution:

The discussion came off on the 20th between J. Tomlinson and myself, and by the help of the God in heaven, we smashed the Pentecost kingdom to atoms. We held two sessions, two hours each, thirty minute speeches. My opponent used the blackboard chart, but I peddled him the first speech. On his last speech he gave himself away entirely, acknowledging the kingdom yet future. To God be all the praise. I must tell of one expression he made, that, "part of the Kingdom was in heaven, and part on earth," to which I referred him to Matt. xvi. 26, "brought to desolation." I must tell of one grand point we made. 2 Tim. iv. 18, "And the Lord shall deliver me (Paul) from every evil work, and will preserve me (Paul) unto his heavenly kingdom." Also, I Thess. ii. 12, "That ye walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." Here I referred to Acts viii. 36, where Philip and the eunuch came unto a certain water: (not into.) Now verse 38, where they "went down into the water," (then they were in the water.) Now I went to Acts xiv. 21, 22. Where Paul was talking to the disciples, (church members) that it was "through much tribulation they would enter into the kingdom of God." Showing the Church, not the kingdom, and the kingdom future, for Paul and the disciples. And that my opponent was no better than Paul. That was a point that all could see. With James ii. 5; Matt. xxv. 31-34; in James ii. 5, "Heirs," in Matt. xxv. 31-34, "inheritors." I double shotted my citations, and they told on the enemy like grape and canister. My opponent choose one of his fellow-preachers for moderator. I chose a very intelligent Baptist. Before closing I told my moderator to leave the victory to the congregation, but my opponent's moderator objected, knowing they were so badly beaten. I think he did not want to stand the punishment. One of their women members gave it up the same evening, and told some of her sisters they were beaten. I look for others to give it up, they seemed to be almost paralyzed. To the Lord be all the praise, that gave us wisdom and strength to overcome error with truth.

Answer to Question.

To The Restitution:

In THE RESTITUTION of Aug. 19th, a question is asked by Mrs. B. F. Reppert, in regard to the church at Philadelphia, Asia Minor, as spoken of in Rev. iii. 10. I find that John Kitto in his history of the Bible says, "Philadelphia alone long withstood the power of the Turks," and in the words of Gibbon, "at length capitulated with the proudest of Ottomans among the Greek colonies and churches of Asia," he adds, "Philadelphia is still erect: a column in a scene of ruin." "It is indeed an interesting circumstance," says Mr. Hartley, "to find Christianity more flourishing here than in many other parts of the Turkish Empire. There is still a numerous Christian population: they occupy 300 houses. Divine service is performed every Sunday in five churches." Nor is it less interesting in these eventful times, and notwithstanding the general degeneracy of the Greek church to learn that the present bishop of Philadelphia accounts "the Bible, the only foundation of all religious belief;" and that he admits that "abuses have entered into the church, which former ages might endure, but the present must put them down." It may well be added, as stated by Mr. Hartley, "The circumstance that Philadelphia is now called Allate-Shehir, the city of God, when viewed in connection with the promises made to that church, and especially with that of writing the name of the city of God upon its faithful members, is, to say the least, a singular concurrence.

Budding Fig Trees.

All hail! Thou true millennial year!
I believe thy reign is almost here.
I believe the day is just at hand
When truth and right shall fill the land.

The race for knowledge now is on;
The day of darkness past and gone;
Man takes of things a nobler view.
Inspects the right, and proves the true.

"New ideas" flash from mind to mind,
And new discoveries still we find:
Error and view will pass away.
And truth and right will come to stay.

Many are running to and fro,
Revealing secrets as they go;
Investors find a stopping place,
And yet they live not in the race.

Nansen has reached the Northern Pole,
And Roentgen sees the human soul;
But some one hails "Mine Herr Roentgen,"
And ends the very thoughts of men.

Some telegraph without a wire,
Transmitting news by electric fire—
And with the modern telephone
Man talks with man from zone to zone.

Some see canals on the planet Mars;
Some find great oceans on the stars;
Another finds out how to fly,
And with the eagle cleaves the sky.

The Isthmus parts its ridge in two,
And lets our ships go gliding through;
They need no more the Horns to round,
A shorter passage they have found.

The submarine cable's nothing new,
We talk beneath the ocean through,
And Uncle Sam, and Prince Wilhelm
Each offer greet from realm to realm.

The Russian Bear, with morning peep,
Finds us in midnight slumbers deep
And if "Good Morning" you would say,
You'd hear "Too late, by half a day."

The Weather Bureau heats this all,
And sends around the morning call,
And warns us in prognostic form,
And we prepare to meet the storm.

The driller bores to depths unknown,
(They'd better let that pot alone,)
And goes he forth forth from out Hades
To search the land and kill the trees.

The dynamo old Phoebus beats,
And lights the sky, and lights the streets,
While Cynthia yields to wired light,
And bids the electro world good night.

The horse must now yield up the ghost;
Wheels take his places—a mighty host,
And the pedestrian has found
A novel way to ride around.

The farmer says, "'tis only seeming,
And all this boast is only dreaming."
Yet he awaketh from his dream
And plows his fields and mows with steam.

The printer comes in for his share,
And the pagerus does not spare;
The papers drop from off the roll,
And news goes forth from pole to pole.

Thought moveth thought in simple mode
Our hardest musings to unload.
The penman writes, the printer prints,
And gives to many noble hints.

The budding fig trees warning give
To all that on the earth do live;
The day of God is drawing near.
Awake, O mortals, wake and hear!

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 9.

First Proposition:

Resolved: The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

The Oriental mind is poetical. Even in this practical age the Emperor and Empress of Japan write poetry, and on New Year's day let a verse from each float over the palace walls.

The Occidental is practical. It is safe to say that if the Psalms had been written in the West there would have been no such bold figures as God riding upon the clouds and walking upon the wings of the wind, while the earth trembles at his look and the hills smoke at his touch.

For one to take the poetical books of the Old Testament and to quote them with slavish literalness as tho' they were as exact as the multiplication table is to completely ruin their beauty and miss their truth. How many quotations the negative has made from the five poetical books of the Old Testament the affirmative does not know but he has counted twenty five from the Psalms alone.

"The enemies of the Lord shall be as fat of lambs, they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." The negative quotes this. It is not true. It is poetic license. Put by it Psa. cii. 3, "For my days are consumed like smoke and my bones are burned as an hearth." Here a good man is in as bad a fix as the evil. Was it actually true that the enemies of the Lord of Psa. xxxvii., consumed away into smoke? The Philistines for example, Psa. xxxvii., is an antiphonal chord. Two bands of singers alternating, telling of the good which comes to the righteous and the evil which overtakes the unjust. To take these highly colored imaginative songs for a cold catechism is to wrest the Scriptures. Then to force plain sayings of Christ and the twelve into metaphor or parables teaching the opposite of what they say is a sure recipe for a hopeless and unscriptural theology.

A number of the quotations are like Psa. xxxiii. 19, "To deliver their soul from death." Quoted to show that the soul can die.

The fallacy lies in taking an inferior meaning of soul and making it exhaustive. In that Psalm it refers to the earthly life as is evident from the next clause "and to keep them alive in famine." Indeed the original term is translated "life" more than 100 times, and "soul" 466 times. It is not difficult to fill columns with quotations where "soul" refers to breath, or life or a person (that is so) but all such prove what nobody denies.

Sometimes the soul means mind so it can love, Is. xlii. 1; hate Is. i. 14; feel sorrow Job xix. 2; confidence Ps. lvii. 2; revenge Jer. v. 9; joy Psa. lxxxvi. 4; fear Is. xv. 4; and think Ps. cxxxix. 14; Prov. xix. 2; Deut. iv. 9. The soul as connected with the earthly body, being allied to the animal world can die, but the soul looking upward and joined to the mind, to the deathless spirit, can it die? That is, become annihilated? Death is not annihilation.

Another class of quotations have as their real meaning the destruction of national enemies. We may extend that to the folly of trusting in national rulers, instead of God. "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes," Ps. cxviii. 8. The context shows that as a nation Israel speaks, it is not to be taken literally. "All nations compassed me about." That was not literally true. Ps. v. 17, "I shall not die, but live," is certainly not true of an individual, for all die.

All the Old Testament was written under the Theocracy. Life and immortality were not yet brought into light. The views of the writers were modified by the law which said nothing of future reward or punishment. What they are thinking of is help now on earth "Some trust in chariots, and some in horses but we will remember the name of the Lord our God," Ps. xx. 7. So in Ps. cxlvi. 3, 4, "Put not your trust in princes nor in the son of man in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." The psalmist has no idea of writing an article on theology, he is warning against trusting to men. "His thoughts" mean "his plans." The word occurs but once, has a secondary meaning. Young gives purposes; Gesenius gives counsels; Tuerst gives plan. A similar word is found in Deut. vi. 4 where it means plan.

In regard to the enemies of Israel who are also enemies of God, they are represented as stubble, as the fat of lambs they shall consume, the Lord will rain upon them snares, fire and brimstone, they shall melt away, the righteous shall wash their feet in the blood of the wicked and tread down their ashes. Think of these things as literally coming to pass, the wicked melting, the righteous washing in their blood when wading through deep ashes. "The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life," says Paul. It will kill any theory with thinking men, to build on poetic flights as one would on plain teaching. No number of quotations from the hymn books of the Old Testament can prove an item of theology. Those books contradict themselves if you view them as cold, formal assertions.

"God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave for he shall receive me," Ps. xlix. 15; "Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel and afterward receive to glory." Ps. lxxiii. 24. These offset all negative's quotations. The favorite word for mind in the Old Testament is "heart," it is equivalent to soul where the latter means mind "your heart shall live forever," Psa. xxii. 26, spoken of the meek is equivalent to "your soul is immortal." It is Ezekiel's xviii. 17, 28, "he shall not die" where the bodily death is unavoidable.

So Elder Wilson ought to see that his criticism that olam "everlasting" ought to be applied to soul if it be immortal, has this answer: in some cases the soul dies, in others it lives. Coupled with this is the fact that he conceives life and existence to be the same while death means non-existence. That is a serious error. When he takes up space in showing that the wicked die, that they do not have eternal life, he is affirming matters which are not in controversy. If he finds a verse showing that death means extinction of being, a verse written after Jesus brought life to light he will score a point.

Let us listen to a wail from King Solomon. He married seven hundred times. While that would admirably equip him for running a newspaper, it was enough to discourage any man. Probably no man has written Elder Wilson's theory in plainer language. "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything neither have any more reward, for the memory of them is forgotten," Eccl. ix, 5.

If you take this as the inspiration of God, then you certainly have a contradiction; for the righteous are included and for them there is no reward. This is not the whole truth, cut out from the context and its limitations, it is not true at all. Take another: "For that which befalleth men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath: so that a man hath no preeminence over a beast, for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust and all turn to dust again." Eccl. iii. 19, 20. Do you think the first part of that is literally true? Did any beast ever sit on an ivory throne and behold the glory of God as Solomon did? He thought the reader would know enough not to take the words in a strict literal sense. Solomon did not.

Viewed as a reminder of the brevity of life, as a warning that we take nothing away, that here we must prepare for judgment, his words have value.

Torn from their contexts, forced to express the whole truth they are cruelly mutilated and their beauty and strength lost. The verse following explains each. v. 21 says "neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

He writes only of time and earth when he says they know not anything and have no reward. Six times in that chapter "under the sun" occurs, and to imagine his words to be true absolutely and in the unseen world is to disregard the warning "under the sun." In this chapter we are told that there is no knowledge in the grave. No one would assert that there is. Does the soul or spirit go into the grave? Solomon says not. Dust goes there "can dust praise thee?" Of course not. In the eleventh chapter he repents the advice of the ninth chapter to live joyfully but he adds "but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment," v. 28. So then there is a future with its rewards and punishments.

In the verse following "all turn to dust again" Solomon shows that he refers to the body only. "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth." The difference between the two is that between heaven and earth. So chapter xii. 7. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was and the spirit shall return to God who gave it?" Solomon was not a Sadducee. Hence when God told Adam, "Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return" he referred to that which was made of dust and not to the spirit. When Jesus said "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit" and gave up the spirit he referred to the "I" which raised his body, and he put an insuperable barrier to the acceptance of the Sadducean theory.

GEO. T. SMITH.

REPLY NO. 9.

The readers will observe that the intent of Elder Smith's present paper is to destroy confidence in the Old Testament Scriptures as a revelation of God's will to man concerning his eternal destiny. It is with feelings of sorrow that I must refer to this. Had I been discussing with a disciple of Ingersoll, I should not have been surprised, but did not expect it from one who professes to be a disciple of Christ and a Christian minister. It opens the way for infidelity which now pervades society, and is sweeping down in force upon the professed Christian church. It is one of the signs of the times of the very near approach of the blessed second advent of the Lord Jesus. Eld. Smith, I am sorry to say, is innocently joining in with an unholy company in bringing about those predicted things. He also evidently made a random statement when he said:

"No numbers of quotations from the hymn books of the Old Testament can prove an item of theology, whose books contradict themselves if you view them as cold formal assertions."

Of course the words, "hymn books of the Old Testament," is but an irreverent way of speaking of the sublime poetic expressions of the Holy Old Testament Scriptures. He says they cannot "prove an item of theology." I will call attention to a few items for these poetic Scriptures.

1. "He was wounded for our transgressions."

2. "With his stripes we are healed."

3. "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."

4. "For the transgression of my people was he stricken."

5. "Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin."

6. "He bore the sin of many."

7. "And made intercessions for transgressors."

These are quoted from the poetic writings of Isaiah.

1. "Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity."

2. "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."—Psalms.

1. "Messiah shall be cut off, but not for himself."

2. "To make an end of sins."

3. "To make reconciliation for iniquity."—Daniel.

1. "The just shall live by faith."—Habakkuk.

These citations may be largely increased, but enough has been given to show the mistake of the affirmative.

The following is Paul's estimate as to the value of the Old Testament Scriptures:

1. "Able to make the wise unto salvation."

2. "Profitable for teaching."

3. "For reproof."

4. "For correction."

5. "For instruction which is in righteousness."

6. "That the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work," 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

Says Jesus: "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded if one rise from the dead."

Space forbids the extension of this class of evidence which is not strictly the topic under discussion, but it seems to be necessary to show the authority of the Old Testament Scriptures, as viewed by New Testament writers.

In speaking of Psa. xxxvii., the affirmative says: "Two bands of singers alternating tell of the good which comes to the righteous, and the evil which overtakes the unjust," and then says, they are "highly colored and imaginative songs," though David said: "The Holy Ghost spake by me." They only need to be read for any unprejudiced mind to see that they are the plainest kind of statements. I will groupe them that our readers may see the error of calling them "highly colored imagination."

THE GOOD.

1. "Those that wait on the Lord shall inherit the earth."

2. "The meek shall inherit the earth: and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."

3. "The Lord knoweth the days of the upright: and their inheritance shall be forever."

4. "For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth."

5. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord."

6. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."

7. "He shall exalt thee to inherit the land."

8. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of man is peace."

Can you detect anything "highly colored," and "imaginative" here?

THE EVIL.

1. "Shall soon be cut down like the grass and wither as the green herb."

2. "For evil doers shall be cut off."

3. "For yet awhile and the wicked shall not be."

4. "The arms of the wicked shall be broken."

5. "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away."

6. "The seed of the wicked shall be cut off."

7. "He passed away, and lo, he was not."

The affirmative further says: "If he find a verse showing that death means extinction of being, a verse after Jesus brought life to light he will score a point."

All right. I will now score a few points.

See Acts iii. 23; "Every soul which will not hear that prophet (Jesus) shall be destroyed."

This is the inevitable doom of "every soul," who willfully refuses to listen to the overtures of mercy offered by Jesus. Only think of it, "every soul."

Phil. iii. 19. "Whose end (telos) is destruction." The "end" is the finality.

1 Tim. vi. 9: "Foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition," (olethron Kai apoleian), two of the strongest words in the Greek language to express utter, total, complete ruination or destruction."—Pettingell.

Acts viii. 20: "Thy money perish with thee." The same phrase eis apoleian—go to destruction is predicted of Simon and his money.—Unspeakable Gift.

2, Thess. i. 19: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction."

Matt. iii. 12: "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire," in place of preserving it for everlasting torture.

"He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption," (phthora), dissolution, decay, death—the same word which Peter uses in speaking of those who as brute beasts utterly perish in their own corruption.—but he that soweth to the spirit shall reap life everlasting" (zoe aionios).—Unspeakable Gift.

Rom. vi. "What fruit had ye in those things whereof ye are now ashamed. For the end (the finality) of those things is death." But now being made free from sin and become the servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." For the wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

In this testimony the final end of two classes is explicitly stated. One is everlasting life," (zoopoiesoe) and the other "death," (thanatos) aionios thanatos everlasting death.

Eld. Smith speaking of the word soul (nephesh) says: "The original term is translated life, more than 100 times and soul more than 466 times. It is not difficult to fill columns with quotations where soul refers to breath, or life, or person."

You are right for once, those are the primary meanings attached to nephesh (soul) and nephesh (soul) applies to everything wherein there is the breath of life. But you cannot find the Hebrew adjective olam (everlasting) applied to nephesh (soul) a single time. Where does your immortal (nephesh) soul come in? In the New Testament we have psuche (soul) as the equivalent of the Hebrew nephesh (soul) and you cannot find psuche (soul) prefaced by the Greek adjective aionios (everlasting) as applied to man. The Greek psuche (soul) applies to everything wherein there is the breath of life.

I wish to call special attention to another extract from Eld. Smith's paper, which is somewhat remarkable.

"The soul as connected with the earthly body, being allied with the animal world can die."

You are progressing finely. Elder Smith: keep on in the line of the last two extracts and you will soon be able to bask in the full sunlight of God's precious truth. That is just what I have been trying to show right along that the nephesh or psuche (soul) "can die," just as you have said. There is no immortal or undying soul. "connected with the earthly body."

We will receive the aionios zoe (everlasting life) when the natural or "animal" body is raised a spiritual body at the resurrection. An unending life can only be manifested through an incorruptible organism. Life manifested through a corruptible organism must cease sooner or later, it could not be otherwise.

I quote again from Eld. Smith: "When Jesus said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit, he referred to the "I," which raised his body."

He has given the same thought in several papers. It is so absolutely foolish it requires no argument. A few passages of Scripture will silence that 1 Cor. xv. 15, 16: "We witnessed of God that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead are not raised."

Heb. xiii. 20. "The God of peace, who brought again from the dead the great Shepherd of the sheep."

Acts ii. 24. "Whom God raised up."

Acts iii. 15-26. "Prince of life whom God raised from the dead."

Eld. Smith says it was the "I" the (supposed) immortal spirit which in his imagination occupied the body of Jesus, which raised the same body. The Bible says God raised him up. All this immortal spirit is an assumption. I challenge him to produce a single passage of Scripture where the attribute of immortality is attached to the spirit of man. I know he cannot produce it, and he knows it too. Why try to deceive the people with such a fallacy.

The New Testament shows clearly that eternal life is something to be obtained and not a present possession. The word immortal occurs but once and immortality five times.

1. Tim. i. 17. "Now unto the king eternal, immortal."

1. 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. "The blessed and only Potentate the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality."

2. 2 Tim. i. 10. "Brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

3. Rom. vii. "Seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." (Do immaterial, immortal spirits seek for it?)

4. 1 Cor. xv. 53. "This mortal must put on immortality."

5. 1 Cor. xv. 54. "And this mortal shall have put on immortality."

Rom. vi. 23. "The gift of God is eternal life."

1 John ii. 25. "He hath promised us even eternal life."

John x. 8. "I give unto them eternal life."

This don't look as though a lot of immaterial spirits had got a monopoly on the matter of eternal life.

Obituary.

Died July 31, 1896 at Anthony, Kansas, Clarence Merit after a short illness with typhoid fever, and was buried on August 1st, after a short discourse by the writer, from Luke ii. 10. "And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Showing that through the disobedience of man death came into the world, and that it was on account of this that our brother now sleeps the sleep of death, for death is passed upon all men, and that he like the prophets of old is now waiting until the Life Giver comes. That since "by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. The Lord hath anointed him to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent him to bind up the broken hearted; to proclaim to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." And he exclaimed on the Isle of Patmos, "I am he that liveth and was dead and am alive forever more and have the keys of hell and of death." And that when he comes he will unlock the prison house of death, and our brother will come forth clothed with immortality. Our brother about four years ago followed the example of our Savior by going down into the watery grave that he might be begotten of spirit that in due time he might be born of spirit and be like him (our Savior) by becoming the Son of God, in fact by partaking of his nature. Rom. i. 4; 1 John iii. 2, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes and there shall be no more death."

"Brother thou art sweetly sleeping,
All unconscious of our gloom;
But Jesus soon is coming,
To call thee from the tomb."

Nellie Grant Armstrong, daughter of James and Hattie Armstrong, died in Nemaha Co., Kansas, July 10th of bilious catarrh of the stomach. Age almost 11 years. She was an exceptionally good child, of great force of character for one so young, truthful, kind, generous, a sweet singer, a lover of music and books. Oh, how we did desire to see her grow up to womanhood. Surely an enemy hath done this. We can never out live the grief. God's abiding Word is the only condolence that can be given to the parents and friends.

Notice.

Bro. Underwood:

Please announce through the columns of THE RESTITUTION that I have once more entered the field as an Evangelist of the Coming Kingdom.

After an interval of many years of comparative silence and inactivity in the gospel field; during which my children have grown, become settled in life, and I am relieved of their care and support, and stirred by deep gratitude to God, who has freely pardoned my sins, and restored me to life, to health, and to his loving favor, I am moved again to enter upon the work to which the best years of my life have been devoted and in which my heart's best affections have always been enlisted.

Any church, or isolated believers who desire help in the good work can write me and I will arrange to visit them at the earliest opportunity. My address is 1004 Kinball Ave., Chicago, Ill.

J. F. WILCOX.

Editor Restitution:

I want to ask one question if it is agreeable, and if it is, please place it in THE RESTITUTION that all brothers and sisters may have the chance to search for it. We see that some of you are using the words "Immortal Soul;" search the Scriptures well and see if you can find it.

In morning-glory flowers,
Swing—swing!
The baby in the hammock
Sleeps through the morning hours,

The honeybee at evening
Goes to the hive to rest,
To Mother's arms the baby—
He likes that cradle best.

The Story of Israel Beyond the Sea. No. 58.

THE SOJOURN AT SINAI.

Jesus wore a seamless coat. We wonderif it was any thing like the sleeveless robe of the High Priest? John xix. 23. We do not know. It was woven without seam from the top throughout. Most of the garments of the Hebrews came ready made from the loom, so there was not much sewing to do, save in the way of ornamentation.

Jesus was a priest, though he belonged to the tribe of Judah. He is a priest still. He could not have made an offering of himself, if he had not been a priest. But he did not take this honor upon himself. God gave it to him when he acknowledged him as his Son, at his baptism. Compare Heb. v. 4, 5, with Matt. iii. 17. His priesthood is an unchangeable one. It will not go from him to another man, and to still another, as it did in the olden days. That is the reason he is to save evermore, all who come to God through him. He ever lives to make intercession for us. And if he did not wear the beautiful priestly garments when upon earth, he could plead for men and could get forgiveness for them.

Can you distinguish between the High Priest and the common priests? I think you can. Aaron was the High Priest, his sons were priests. The dress of the priests was different from that of the High Priest. It consisted of a pair of linen drawers, a long white garment, or cassock of linen, that reached nearly to the feet, and a cap or bonnet shaped like the cup of a flower. The cassock was woven so that there were figures or diamonds on it, just as there are on some of our tablecloths and towels. A flower-embroidered girdle, held the cassock in place. In some pictures this girdle is represented as passing around the neck, crossing over the breast, and after forming a belt, falling in long ends, to the bottom of the cassock.

Aaron belonged to the tribe of Levi. Ex. iv. 14; vi. 20. But not all the Levites were priests. Those outside of the family of Aaron formed a kind of royal guard, for the tabernacle, while it stood. When the people started out on their long wilderness journey, the Levites had to carry its parts, and when the people stopped to rest, they had to pitch the sacred tent. Num. i. 50, 51, 53. We shall find out more about them when we get further along in our story.

We are to learn more about the priests now. Their work was different from that of the Levites. Aaron's part was to burn incense of spices upon the altar of incense. He was to do this when he dressed the lamps in the morning and when he lighted them at evening. Ex. xxx. 7, 8. It was also his part, to go into the Most Holy Place before the mercy seat, (study Lev. 16th chapter) and to offer the sacrifices and offerings of the day of atonement. The other priests had to watch over the fire on the altar of burnt offerings. It must never go out by night or by day. Every morning and every evening there were sacrifices to offer with meat-offerings and drink-offerings, and blood to be sprinkled about the altar. The people must also be constantly taught in the law of the Lord. But we have not seen how Aaron and his sons were set apart to do his holy work. It tells us in Ex. 29th chapter. Moses was to bring them into the court of the tabernacle; and wash them in the great basin that I have told you about. Then he was to dress Aaron in his fine linen clothes, and put the mitre and crown upon his head, and anoint his head with oil. It was poured out and ran down upon his beard and to the skirts of his garments. Psa. cxxxiii. 2. Afterward his sons were to have their priestly robes, and girdles and bonnets put on, and were to be anointed as their father had been. Ex. xl. 15. Theirs was to be an everlasting priesthood. It was to pass from son to son, and from son to grandson, so that there would always be a priest. The covenant of an everlasting priesthood was given to Phinehas, the grandson of Aaron. He was the son of Eleazar. Num. xxv. 11, 12, 13. From him are descended the sons of Zadok, who are to have charge of the sanctuary in the coming age. Ezek. xliv. 15, 16; xlviii. 11, 35.

There is something here that we can not quite understand about this priesthood not having any break, for no priest of Eleazar's line has ministered at the altar for hundreds of years. Can it be that the children of Phinehas, and of the sons of Zadok, having received the gospel, have been made priests or ministers under the new covenant? You know that all who have obeyed the Lord Jesus have been made priests unto God. 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9; Rev. i. 6; v. 10. They do his work. They offer themselves a willing sacrifice to him.

When Aaron and his sons had been washed and dressed and anointed, Moses had them lay their hands upon the heads of the bullock, that he was afterward to kill before the Lord some of its blood he was to put upon the horns of the altar, the rest was to be poured beside it. Parts of the bullock were to be burned upon the altar, and other parts were to be burned outside of the camp. It was a sin-offering. A similar ceremony was gone through with the first of the big sheep, only after it was killed its blood was all sprinkled about the altar, and the whole of its flesh was burned upon the altar. It was a burnt offering. The blood of the other sheep was put on the right ears, thumbs and toes of Aaron and his sons, and sprinkled upon their garments. Portions of its flesh were put in a basket with a loaf and a cake of bread, and a wafer, and were waved before the Lord, and then burned, other portions which were waved or heaved up, were for Aaron and his sons. They must be boiled in the holy place, and be eaten with bread. If any part was left until the next day it must be burned with fire. It took seven days to prepare the priests for their solemn duties, with sin-offerings, burnt-offerings and wave-offerings.

Seven days were also to be taken in the ceremony of setting apart the altar for its holy use. It, too, must be anointed. Then the sacrifice of the little lambs, that were a type of Jesus was to begin.

But our lesson is growing too long. We must stop for to-night. In our next we must talk about giving to the Lord. I know you will like that. You may begin with the 12th verse of the 30th chap. of Exodus, and read to the 17th verse. Then turn to Ex. 35th and read the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 21st and on to the 30th verse.

Announcement.

The brethren and sisters of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will meet in Conference at Laurel, Ill. commencing Sept. 18, 1896, and continuing over Sunday 20th. Preaching brethren D. M. Hudler and J. F. Wilcox are expected. Come let us have a feast of good news.

J. W. GLOTFELTY, Chair.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the State of Indiana, will convene at Argos, Indiana, on Friday at 2 P. M., Sept. 18, 1896. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of truth to meet with us and enjoy at least one more reunion of those of like precious faith. We are admonished to be watchful, the signs thicken, events of momentous importance tell us plainly the hour of his coming is near. Be ye therefore ready.

J. F. WAGONER, Pres.
A. C. ROBERTS' Sec

The Eleventh Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at the City Park, in Grand Island, commencing, the Lord willing, on Friday September 11th and will continue for ten days. We give one and all a cordial invitation to come and enjoy some blessed meetings with those of like precious faith. Come prepared to do all in your power to help make the meetings both pleasant and profitable. St. Paul is near the center of the State, being just twenty-five miles north of Grand Island, so that all will have an equal chance to attend. We would like for all who can to bring tents; but to those who cannot, we say, "Come any way and we will see that you are cared for in the best manner possible." There will be a boarding tent at the park so that the sisters need not spend their time in cooking, but can enjoy the meetings. Yet we would say, "Bring your provisions with you, if you wish. You can dispose of them to the committee appointed for buying provisions, who will credit you for them. This will go towards paying your board at the tent." Once more we ask you to come and tarry with us for a short time, and help us in the Master's work. Let us serve him while we may, that we may be ready to meet him when he comes in glory to set up his kingdom on the earth. Brothers and Sisters, this time is no far distant. Let us strive to be faithful; and when the time comes, may we one and all enter into the rest that is prepared for the people of God.

DAILY PROGRAM.

7 A. M. Reading of Scripture and prayer.
7:30 A. M. Breakfast.
9 A. M. Bible Reading or Social Meeting.
10 A. M. Business on week days and Sunday School on Sunday.
12 M. Dinner.
2:30 P. M. Public Preaching.
6 P. M. Supper.
8 P. M. Public Preaching.

The intervening hours between 8 A. M. and 6 P. M. will be occupied in the Reading of Essays, in Prayer and Social meetings, or in some way that will be beneficial to all. Come and we are sure that you will feel well repaid for so doing.

Your Sister in Christ.

Dear Restitution:

We wish to say to the brethren of the Church of God, of Southern Kan., and throughout the State that a Conference will convene at Bitter Creek, Sumner Co., Kan., on Friday evening before the second Sunday in Sept., and continue over Sunday, and as much longer as the interest may demand. Brethren, this meeting is yours. Will you come to enjoy it? There will be some important business to attend too. Should any of you have a pet hobby please hitch him at the first outside post. We do not want to have any wild mustangs loose in the crowd of people. Come together for religious worship, let us have peace, let us have a meeting commendable to the people of God. Times are very hard; but the Lord is liable to come, even if times are hard, whether we have a dollar or not, let us get ready, all make an extra effort to try and be at this meeting. Bro. L. E. Comer has promised to be with us, if it is possible. We would like to have as many come as possibly can come to do so. You may think times are too hard, but this is a burden all must bear in order to share the joys derived from it. This meeting will be held at the Southeast corner of Sumner Co., one-half mile south of Bitter Creek post-office, Geuda Springs 7 miles north is the nearest railroad station. Any coming by rail may address me at Geuda Springs, or Bro. J. M. Vickery, Arkansas City, telling us when to meet you and we will be pleased to wait on you. This may be the last gathering in this life, so then come. Come one, come all.

Books and Tract List.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

FUTURE PROBATION.

Is that awaiting any of the unrighteous? A 150-page pamphlet by Wm. Glen Moncrieff. This work was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid for ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for any who are interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send ten cents to this office for a copy.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, well gained for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 25cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"An open letter to J. A. Conrad," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in RESTITUTION, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Addie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the RESTITUTION of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Address, THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Charity.

'Tis better to give than to get,
When the heart with the gift goeth fair;
For pity, as treasure set,
Relieveth while sharing the care.

Oh, that bliss of the magical touch
That goeth where'er it would spend,
Knowing nought of the sad overmuch
That only hath loss to the end.

The poorest have riches to win
In the giving that wasteth no store,
When the oil and the wine poured in Flow graciously back to the door.

The cruse of the widow hath still Filled record in hearts that are pure,
Who arise in their grace to fulfill
The law of the Lord that is sure.

"But Whom Say Ye That I Am?"

"But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the Son of God, even to them that believe on his name—which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

"...nd the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld) his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."

It is here definitely stated that "the Word" (whatever that implies) was made flesh and dwelt among us.

There is something very striking in the constant and marked application of the term "only begotten Son of God" to Jesus Christ.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," etc.

"He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God."

"No man hath seen God at any time, the only begotten Son which is in the bosom of his Father, he hath ...[illegible]... and so on—

"...here is therefore evidently a marked distinction between "the only begotten Son of God," and the "sons of God" "born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh"—by adoption, "for of his own will begat he us by the Word of Truth." Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Eph. i. 5.

Abraham "offered up his only begotten son"—Yet Abraham like God, has a multitude of sons, for Paul addressing Christians, says that "Abraham is the Father of us all." Rom. iv. 16. These however are sons by adoption only, through faith in Jesus Christ, through which process they become "sons of God."

The term "only begotten Son," whether applied to Isaac or Jesus, clearly implies a distinction that it is fatuous to ignore; as the very re-iterated use of the term is clearly intended to emphasize a peculiarity in application which in the case of Isaac we do not pretend to mis-understand.

"Simon Peter answered and said, thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." Did Peter mean that Christ Jesus was the son of Joseph (who repudiated the claim,) or did he mean that he was the Son of God in accordance with the statement of the Arch-Angel Gabriel, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the Power of the Highest overshadow thee, therefore also that Holy Thing which shall be born of thee, shall be called the Son of God?"

It will be noted that Gabriel terms Jesus in the embryotic state a "Holy Thing," whereas many deny that he was a "Holy Thing" until after his baptism or perhaps resurrection.

Had Peter meant that Jesus was only a son by adoption (as in 1 John iii. 1) the exultant outburst and blessing of the Messiah seems inexplicable. Many at that time, no doubt, would have said the same, flesh and blood having revealed as much to them, through his wonderful works. But Peter's reply was the result of the inspiration of God himself, as Jesus declared, and had a much deeper meaning. It was such believers as the former, who forsook him when he averred that he was the Bread of Life that came down from heaven, that God was his Father and that he had Eternal Life abiding in him." John vi. 30 to the end of the chapter. "Doth this offend you," said Christ, "what and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before?" "And they said, Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph whose father and mother we know, how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?" "From that time many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him." Why? Because this was the crucial test of faith and they denied his Divinity.

Mark the reply of Simon Peter to the question brought forth by this very defection and rejection. "Will ye also go away?" "We believe and are sure that thou art Christ, the Son of the living God."

It was upon this very confession of his Divine Origin and miraculous conception as embodied in the reply of Simon Peter, that the Messiah declared he would build his church, and the test stands good to day.

Even the agnostic and infidels confess Christ an extraordinary good man endowed with wondrous powers, but Jesus demands more than this of his true disciples, as it is written, "that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name" John xx. 31.

What did the Centurian mean "Truly this was the Son of God?" And unclean spirits who fell down before him, saying, "Thou art the Son of God."

It was on this claim he was condemned, "Art thou Christ the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, 'I am.'" The High Priest fully comprehended all it implied and he called it blasphemy." Mark xiv. 61, 64.

"For a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy, and because thou being a man, makest thyself God." John v. Here is the whole matter in a nutshell. They denied his claim of Divinity, and judged him to be a man of simple human parentage as do the Unitarians of our day.

The writer of "Logos" in a Western paper of Aug. 15, thinks "the Word" is synonomous with Solomon's "wisdom," but John declares "the Word" became flesh and dwelt amongst us and it was this, "which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon and our hands have handled of the Word of Life," 1 John i. 1. Could he have been referring to the wisdom of Solomon?

The Editor, a deep thinker and able man, much interested in this question of the Divinity of Christ, says this article is the best exposition of 1 John i. 3 he has ever seen. Yet not a single "thus saith the Lord" is educed in support of the writer's position, who appears to attach singular faith to opinions of "Professor Burton," who probably, having less advantages in his time, knew less about the matter than the Editor of the paper, or the writer of Logos himself.

Elder Smith (in the Smith and Wilson discussion) adopts the same principle and is continually hauling in and quoting, as crushing arguments, the opinions of all sorts of uninspired men, heathen and otherwise, whilst at the same time depreciating the value of the Sacred Records. This may do when disputing with infidels, but Christians, wherever found, regard Scripture as the only source of Truth and revelation, and that the opinion of men, except when founded on the Word of God, is of no more value than a soap bubble or the kaleidoscopic utterances of the Rev. Dr. Talmage. For the wisdom of man is folly in the sight of God, and Plato, Socrates or Empedocles knew less of the beginning of wisdom than the humblest Christian who lifts up his voice in prayer to Almighty God through Jesus his only begotten Son.

"Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct him? He that reproveth God, let him answer it."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 9, 1896. NUMBER 34.

The Man Child of Rev. xii.

Editor Restitution:

I received the following request by card the other day:—

Bro. Fife:—Please give us an article in THE RESTITUTION on the "Man Child."

T. E. ADAMS.

The Man Child of Rev. xii., being one of a group of signs, each representing one of a group of features, all of which are to exist at the same time, and all go to make up one general scene, the strength and simplicity of which can only be seen, when each and all appear in proper place, would be better treated and understood in a set of articles than in one short one, but perhaps a set of articles would occupy too much space in the paper. So I will briefly consider the question separately.

WHAT DOES THE "MAN CHILD" OF REV. XII. REPRESENT?

Before setting out to show who the Man Child is, it might be well to show who he is not. If can not be used here to represent the papacy for several potent reasons.

1. Because the dragon is placed in the same group and is figuring as a civil power at the time of the birth of the Man Child, which was not the case at the birth of the papacy, for the dragon never appeared as described in the group (with 7 heads and 10 horns and 7 crowns upon his head) until the founding of the German Empire, A. D. 1870, the same year the papacy ceased to exist as a civil power.

2. Because the dragon was intent on the destruction of the Man Child, but he has never had any occasion for a quarrel with the papacy, which in the day of its civil power was employed in the same work the dragon is engaged in, of [illegible] corresponding God's people).

3. Instead of figuring as a "Man Child" the papacy is represented by a child bearing woman.

4. There is no work allotted to the papacy that could be called ruling the nations with a rod of iron, to come off after the setting of the group of Rev. xii., which includes the "time of trouble" of Dan. xii., when "Michael shall stand up" and Daniel's people shall be obedient, every one that is found written in the Book," compare with Rev. xii. 7. The only claim she has to make, after that time, is, "I sit as a queen and am no widow and shall see no more sorrow," Rev. xviii. 7, and she is only led to make such promise to herself, by the lifting up process of the angel, preparatory to her overthrow, Rev. xviii. 21. But that the Man Child represents the church of God is made plain.

1. By the fact that both the child and his mother, are objects of hatred and malignity on the part of the dragon, for he seeks to devour the one and persecute the other. The common lot of God's people.

2. By the work he is to perform, He "is to rule all nations with a rod of iron" precisely the same as that assigned our Savior, for David writes concerning him. "The Lord hath said unto me, thou art my Son this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt rule them with a rod of iron, thou shalt dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel," Psa. ii. 7, 9.

This inheritance and possession, and rulership, our Savior shares with his followers. To him (that overcometh) will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers, even as I received of my father," Rev. ii. 26, 27.

3. By the association of his enthronement, for he was caught up unto God and to his throne, the same that was promised to the overcomers, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21.

4. By comparing with the allegory formed in the fourth of Galatians and getting an inspired explanation, and here let us stop and consider that there are three women made use of by inspiration, to illustrate the three systems of religion, two spoken of by Paul in the fourth of Galatians, and one in the xvii., of Rev. All three are spoken of in connection with their children. Says Paul, "For it is written that Abraham had two sons, the one by a maid maid, the other by a free-woman, but he who was of the bond-maid was born after the flesh, but he of the free-woman was by promise. Which things are an allegory, for these are the two covenants, the one from Mt. Sinai which gendereth to bondage which is Agar, for this Agar is Mt. Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is and is in bondage with her children, but Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. Gal. iv. 22-26. In this allegory we discover a duplicate of the Man Child of Rev. xii., and his mother, only in the case Paul speaks of there was a real Man Child and his mother but in Rev. xii. a pen picture of the same thing, as seen by John in vision, with surroundings added, and Paul explains that Isaac represents the whole church of God, and the free-woman his mother, the Jerusalem which is above, and the explanation being inspired of course is conclusive and settles the matter once for all.

The Man Child being the Church, it is obvious that his birth is the resurrection of them that are Christ's at his coming, and it follows that the events portrayed by the other members of the group, will constitute a part of the surroundings of the resurrection, which are made known by signs by our Savior, in order that the wise "virgins" may be supplied with oil in their vessels with their lamps, trimmed that that day may not overtake them as a thief. In love for the truth, J. M. FIFE.

What Ought We to Preach at Our Conferences?

This is the heading of an article, written in 1879 by Bro. J. S. Arnold, and as it is just our sentiments we give it place again. In addition to the subjects that cause divisions then, others have since sprung up. Advance truths, greater light given to this one or that on certain subjects. The old fashioned gospel is not threadbare to us yet. But here is the article.

"This is a question of considerable importance, for at these meetings we expect large congregations. After we go to the trouble of advertising for the meeting, and making preparations for the accommodation of all who may come, what would be the most profitable to preach those to mixed congregations? I will state what course I think would be best. We generally meet on Friday evening for preaching, when, as a general thing, there are not many that gather to hear the Word spoken; but on Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night, there is generally a goodly number comes out to hear. Now, what would be most profitable to preach to the people at these meetings?

There are so many Bible subjects to choose from, that perhaps we might say—any Bible subject would do—it makes no difference what one we take. Let us stop and consider for a moment to see whether there is a Bible answer to this question or not. When our Lord gave commandment for the Apostles to go and preach he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

Here then we find that the gospel is the subject made choice of in preference to anything else. And why? Because in it is contained the power of God for the conversion and salvation of sinners; and, still further, the righteousness of God is made known to the people through the gospel; hence, we can see the importance of presenting this subject in as clear a light as possible, so that people may believe and obey it, and be saved. All other subjects ought to be laid aside at these meetings, and the gospel ought to be preached as Christ and his apostles taught it to the people. Every other subject was laid aside by them and their attention was given to preaching the gospel alone. I have, sometimes, been very much surprised at conferences, when the house would be crowded to the utmost, that some brother would spend from one to two hours in presenting some wild theory of his own, or hobby, if you please to call it so, something like this—"The wicked dead will never be raised from the dead;" and then, to make it worse, some one will surely have to follow him, to knock it all to pieces, as he supposes, and tell the people that they will all be raised and judged—justified or condemned—and so on.

Another will say except you meet every first-day of the week you can not be saved; and then some one will undertake to show that he is surely mistaken about this matter. Then again, some one will given good lecture on the signs of the times, giving dates running out in '78 or '80 as the case may be, and then tell the people he is no time-setter, and that he does not believe in the time at all. But there are his figures terminating at these dates. Then some one will have to give us a long lecture on the two witnesses, who they are, while, perhaps, no two exactly agree on these subjects. So, better let them alone at these meetings. When there is a full house to talk to let them alone, and present them to the brethren when assembled, and not to a mixed congregation. We have our heads full of doctrine, and it would, perhaps, be good to talk a little more on the subject of what we should do, and not quite so much on what we should believe. We should endeavor to impress on the minds of our hearers what they must believe and do to get into Christ. Here I believe that we are a unit; but on all these subjects we are not. It would then be better to let them alone, and not let the people know we are divided on these subjects, and thereby do more good by acting in concert with each other.

With good feelings toward all, and a desire for the triumph of the truth as it is in Jesus, I remain your brother in Christ Jesus."—J. S. Arnold.

"It Doth Not Yet Appear."

The two first verses of the third chapter of John's first epistle contain so much of love and promise to the human family that I often turn to and read them, for they hold out a hope and give such consolation as is needful to help me bear the trials which beset me each day of this life as they follow one another in quick succession.

We all have worries and sorrows and trials and need some haven to which we can go for rest and consolation, as the ship sails into some quiet harbor, to escape the storms of the sea. In these verses I find that haven of consolation as in perhaps but few others, and at Bro. Underwood's suggestion I will write a few thoughts which they have awakened in my mind many times.

How thankful we should ever be that God has so loved mankind, made in his own image, that they may be called his sons if they obey his commands. His love is infinite. It is everlasting. It will not fail. It is manifested to all, even though they daily disobey his will, for "he forgiveth all our iniquities." And above all, he has sent into the world his only begotten Son that we might live through him.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God?" When? Why, just as soon as we believe on that Son, repent of our sins, and are baptized into his all-saving name. This is the way, and the only way, we can become the sons of God, because it is written: "I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

After a hearty belief in the gospel of Christ, repentance and baptism, then there must be a daily, an hourly walk with God. His will must be obeyed. We must have works with our faith, for James says, "Faith without works is dead." To comply with the three essential things (faith, repentance and baptism) and yet make no change in our lives, but continue on as before, will not answer. It must be a life of prayer, of giving thanks, of meditation upon God's Holy Word, of brotherly love, of all those things which Peter tells us we must add to our faith, (virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity)—in fact, it must be a life as nearly in accordance with our blessed Savior's life as it is possible for us to lead. It must be a life of watching, for our Savior has promised to return to earth and be its King; therefore, "it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Herein is found the promise of a resurrection to another, an everlasting life; a life in which we shall be immortal, as he is immortal, he having been made so by the Father because of his sinless life, while on earth. And being clothed with immortality he has power to also clothe all with immortality who obey the Father through him. This glorious promise that we shall be like him is the great healing balm to our anchor, and is a great source of consolation to all believers in the true gospel of Jesus Christ. Having this hope

The perils which daily beset us
Will hold for us no fear;
We know he will never forget us,
In the day when he shall appear.

In glory we'll see him as he is;
No eye will be dimmed with a tear;
We are earthly no more, but are his—
But now "it doth not yet appear."

Then strive, strive ward for the crown.
For the time of his coming is near;
When gladly this life we'll lay down
And take up that other so dear.

Let us all strive to be accounted worthy to obtain that resurrection to another life.

Politeness of Manners.

"The sweet look of kindness, the pence-speaking tongue."
"So pleasant and lovely in old or in young."

Be polite, study politeness, stereotype it. It's "like apples of gold in pictures of silver." "One of the first one of the most important lessons for children to learn is courtesy, politeness of manners. What is wealth, office, talent, education, or even religion under cover of a morose, abrupt, clownish, uncouth exterior, a manifest destitution of a kind, gentle, manly affectionate deportment! Be polite, study the graces, not the graces of the dancing-master, not the foppish etiquette of a Chesterfield, but benevolence, the graces of the heart, whatever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report. The true secret of politeness is, to please, to make happy—flowing from goodness of heart—a fountain of love. As you leave the family circle for retirement, say good night; when you rise good morning. Do you meet or pass a friend in the street, how gracefully, smilingly, with the usual salutations. Wear a hinge on your neck and keep it well oiled, above all, study Solomon and the epistles of Paul. There is no book like the Bible for courtesy or politeness of manners. Study the Bible, make it the man of your council; and we have no fears of your dishonoring your profession by politeness.

"How pure the sacred Word of Truth;
The blessed Book to guide our youth;
Here brightest glories meet and shine;
Here mercy smiles in every line."

Be polite, be civil.—When the rich Quaker was asked the secret of his success in life, he answered "Civility, friend, Civility." Some people are uncivil, sour, sullen, crabbed, crusty, and impudent. "Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit, there is more hope of a fool than of him." Be kind and courteous to everybody. There is nothing like kindness. It sweetens everything. A single look of love, a smile, a grasp of the hand, has gained more friends than wealth and learning. "Charity suffereth long and is kind."

Words that breathe of tenderness
And smiles we know are true,
Are warmer than the summer-time,
And brighter than the dew."

HIRAM SHOEMAKER.

If they who wear the chains of creeds once knew the happiness of breathing the air of freedom, and of moving with an unencumbered spirit, no wealth or power in the world's gift would bribe them to part with their spiritual liberty.—Channing.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

M. JORLIN, Corresponding Editor.

PLYMOUTH, IND. SEPTEMBER 9, 1896.

If "the wages of sin," be "death," Rom. vi. 23, how can the punishment of sin be eternal life in misery?

Is it be recorded that all the wicked will the "Lord destroy," by what right does any one say the wicked will live forever?" See Psa. cxiv. 20.

If the mission of Jesus Christ be to destroy the devil. Heb. ii. 14, and the work's of the devil, John iii. 8. How can the existence of sinners and of sin be never ending?

"If men would ever keep in mind the statement of the apostle Paul, "In me that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing," they would refuse to glory in "man, in whom is no help." There is a comparative insignificance and instability in all that is human, that makes an arm of flesh absolutely worthless as a means of rest or support. To trust in its wisdom is to rely upon what God has declared is to himself foolishness. To have confidence in its strength is to trust in a broken reed, for it has neither durability nor permanence. "Let no man glory in men," is the apostolic exhortation. And again, "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." To glory in men is to trust in a fading flower. Our glory must be in him who is the High and Lofty One that inhabiteth eternity. In him is almightiness, omniscience and eternal duration, who is willing and able to save to the uttermost all who came unto him in the way he has appointed, and continue steadfast and immovable in the hope and the confidence firm unto the end."

Christ the Heir to David's Throne.

"That the New Testament message was identical with the Abrahamic, Davidic hope of Israel is evident in the promise that Christ made to the twelve, that in the time of regeneration they should "sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 28, which is again confirmed by the testimony of Peter upon the day of Pentecost, that God had raised Christ from the dead on purpose to sit on David's throne, Acts ii. 30. Peter further puts it: the very prediction of David (in the 16th Psalm) that he should rise from the dead, was based on the promise to David that he should have a seed who should succeed him in his throne, which Peter interprets as Christ; which exactly agrees with the message delivered to Zedekiah the last King who sat upon the throne of Judah, "Thou profane, wicked prince of Israel, whose day has come when iniquity shall have an end; thus saith the Lord God, remove the diadem, take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn and overturn it, and it shall be no more until he came whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 25, 26. Christ is surely here referred to as Zedekiah's successor, because the joint testimony of Is. ix. 6, 7, and Luke i. 32, 33 forever settles that point. It says The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever." In addition to this read Nathaniel's confession to Israel, (Thou art the King of Israel.)

The Gospel of the Kingdom. A Reply to "The Christian Oracle." No. 23.

Dear Sir:—In continuing the subject introduced in my last, I offer additional proof from verse 35 of Hebrews xi. "Women received their dead raised to life again; (through faith in God) and others were tortured not accepting deliverance (because of faith in the promises of future good made to the fathers and the end in view is expressed in the next words:) "That they might obtain a better resurrection;" that is, a resurrection to a better life, or state of existence. But why this in preference to everything else? Why did they so earnestly desire such a resurrection? Because God had promised them something they could not possess without it. What was that? Why the very thing in question—the goodly land of Canaan when it would be a heavenly country. It was an

EVERLASTING BEQUEST

and only an everlasting state of existence would enable them to inherit it. They know, and they proved by living there by faith that it would not be converted into a heavenly country in their mortal life time. They knew death would overtake them, but they were willing to suffer all these wrongs at the hands of wicked men, rather than miss their part in a better resurrection, for then, the promised blessing would be bestowed. Paul tells us in 1 Cor. xv. 23 that Christ is the first-fruits, afterwards they that are his at his coming. And the same writer says concerning Christ in Eph. i. 11. "In WHOM ALSO WE HAVE OBTAINED AN INHERITANCE." And in verses 13 and 14. he says, "In whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with the holy spirit of promise, which is the EARNEST of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession. They were the purchased possession. They had been bought with a price, 1 Cor. vi. 20. But WHEN will the purchased possession be redeemed? We get our answer from the lips of him who in Luke xxi. 27, 28: "And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory: and WHEN these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads—(why dear Lord?) For your REDEMPTION draweth nigh. The seal of the Holy Spirit of promise is the earnest of the inheritance until then, no longer: for then it is that he in whom the inheritance is obtained, says to them, "Come.....

BOUGHT THEM,

ENDURE THE KINDNESS."

Matt. xxv. 34. But what is the import of the Word "Earnest" It means a pledge or assurance of God's purpose to fulfill his promise of an inheritance to the justified ones. This does not look as if justification was the grand finale of redemption's plans, does it? Justification is a condition or state attainable through faith, by grace or favor, that made them fit for a portion of the inheritance of the saints in light, Col. i. 12: [Henderson's and Campbell's translation]. For further proof that justified ones had an inheritance in prospect, and not in turn to Heb. ix. 15: where we are told "that by means of the death of Christ for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which were called [by the gospel] might receive the PROMISE of eternal inheritance. Would it not be strange if Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had no such promise? Why you yourself say you are "looking for a kingdom." Where is the kingdom you are looking for? And where are you looking for it? What is to become of the kingdom you are in when you get the one

ACTUAL POSSESSION

YOU ARE LOOKING FOR?

Will it be located anywhere in particular or everywhere, generally? It would be shameful to try to deprive me of my hope like a veritable iconoclast, and never even tell me what kingdom I ought to look for. You are now invited to consider Romans xv. 8. "Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God." What truth, Paul? Hear him: "A minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to CONFIRM the promises made unto the fathers." If words have any meaning, we have unmistakable proof that part of Christ's work at the first advent was to confirm, i. e., to give assurance of the truth and to the Fathers. I think the scenes of Calvary confirmed the promise of eternal inheritance to the Fathers. Was he not dying because of sin—on account of sin? Was he not about to open a way out of the grave for all the worthy so that they could by and by hear him say, "Come, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world? Surely he came to assure us that God had neither changed his mind nor altered his purpose but would surely carry out

CERTAINTY OF GOD'S PROMISES

HIS ORIGINAL PROGRAMME.

I do not think you can read Gal. iii. 16, 17, 18, without seeing that the promises to Abraham and Christ were promises to them an inheritance. The 17th verse shows that the law did not interfere with the promise made 400 years before; the promise still stood while the law was in force; the latter being only added to the promise till the seed should come whom the promise [of the inheritance] was made. You say "there is no land in this inheritance." You do not seem to know that God chose to promise Abraham eternal life by promising him

THE EVERLASTING POSSESSION of the land but this is so. Eternal life is implied in that promise of the land, and I find it promised to him nowhere else. You say you "saw at a glance the errors I make." I am afraid you you have only glanced at Gal. iii., for you say the promised inheritance is people, "not the world of land or soil, but all mankind." If you are correct in this, Gal. iii. 29 will agree with it: "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus: and then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise, [.. the inheritance] to Abraham and Christ." v. 16. It was addressed to justified ones, and if you are correct they had obtained the blessing. But lo, and behold they only by justification become HEIRS, (not possessors) according to promise."

IF YE BE CHRIST'S

A Lecture.—Vain Worship. No. 3.

What did Jesus say? Every plant which my Father hath not planted, SHALL BE ROOTED UP. I have shown you who planted the Trinity in Unity plant. I have shown you that God had nothing to do with it. If time and strength permitted I would show you that the author of that creed are indebted to Plato and other Pagan philosophers for the doctrine of

THE TRINITY IN UNITY.

It is Pagan, I say, it is not Christian. It is HUMAN, it is not divine. And I would refresh your minds with the fact that the Everlasting Perish, is the penalty attached to this Catholic law, or commandment.—remember also, that, coincident with this, you have to subscribe to this same heathen conception if you would unite with any of the great religious bodies of this day. I was myself in 1893, consigned to everlasting punishment, unless I repented for Claiming that the Father and the Son were not of the same age. —that the Son was not the Eternal God, and that my Savior died for me,—his did not. Just as sure as God has spoken to us that plant will be rooted up. And in all earnestness, I ask, what then, becomes of the God of so-called Christendom? The God which the apostasy in Council at Constantinople impressed upon it.

Natural immortality of every son and daughter of Adam is affirmed by all the Great Religious Bodies is so-called Christendom. "Im"—means not. "Mortal" means "Subject to death," so that immortal means "not subject to death." I ask you who planted this plant? Remember it says that no member of the Human Family is subject to death. Where did this idea originate? When was it sprung upon the human intellect? Who first embraced it. Why, the Fountain head of the Human race embraced it. It was preached to him by the Serpent in Eden. "Thou shalt not surely die," was what he said; and that means, of course, that he would live on, and on and on forever, if he did not. That was the promise the man believed in preference to God, who said, "Thou shalt surely die;" i. e., providing he ate what he was told not to. His death, and that of untold millions who inherited his nature prove that the serpent lied; prove that the serpent could not make good his word; prove that his lie was a murderous lie; prove that God told the truth. Man is not immortal. The or sowed its seed, and as sure as Jesus told the truth, that plant, too, should be rooted up, Jesus says so, my friends, and we believe it, and therefore speak. Put it down; the Spirit in Paul says God only hath immortality. Those who say all men are immortal, say what the serpent said,—believe what the serpent said; disbelieve what God said; believe just what Adam did; believe the very lie that made him the sinner that brought death and a thousand ills—every ill that afflicts us, and creation generally. Does the lapse of time lessen the guilt of believing that lie? Why is it not just as wicked to believe it now as at the beginning? Why is it not many, many times to believe it now, after countless millions have been slain by it and proved its author a liar and a murderer? and with the testimony of Jesus to the same effect? As those who believe God are Abraham's seed, and a seed of the Woman,—those who believe the serpent are the seed of the serpent, and their heads will be bruised. Hales, and Socrates and Plato and other heathen philosophers without a ray of divine light, taught just what the serpent taught. The apostate church of Rome under one of the most profligate Popes that ever occupied the Papal Chair made the belief in the immortality of the soul a doctrine of that church, so now you have the history of the planting, and cultivation and replanting of this plant. Jesus Word for it,

SERPENT PLANTED THAT PLANT

A MORE HEINOUS SIN

IT WILL BE ROOTED UP.

It was planted in opposition to the Father Christ, not Plato brought immortality to light when he rose triumphant over death. Believers in immortality lay aside the commandments of God, and hold to the traditions of men and teach them for doctrines. Do you know what makes us so sad, and earnest to show you God's truth on this subject? It is the Word of Jesus. "In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

IT IS NOT CHRISTIAN;

it originated with the serpent; it was formulated by heathen philosophers, —it was adopted by the Catholic Church and now, this, the very groundwork, or cornerstone of rebellion, and the point of unbelief is made a fundamental doctrine of Protestantism. What did Jesus say? He said that both the blind and their leaders shall fall into the ditch together. If you do not see this to be the most destructive, and abomination and wicked doctrine ever taught,—let me, as a last resource, show you what God thinks of it. He contradicts this immortality doctrine in 1 John v., by plainly revealing that Eternal Life, or immortality is God's gift to us through His Son, and adds: He that hath the Son hath the life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life. [Eternal]. Where does universal immortality stand beside this divine statement?

GOD'S MEANING OF HIS SON IS that he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son, hath not life." And what does God say of those who do not believe this record? He says they make him a liar, if they do not believe it. What a crime! They place themselves in the same cell with the serpent. This is the indictment that hangs over him! They follow his example. He first made out that God lied, when he said man should surely die, and with brazen effrontery contradicted him and tens of thousands, ah, hundreds of thousands—millions think they are Christians while making God a liar by not believing that only those who have the Son have life when

THEY MAKE GOD A LIAR;

of course they do not believe a liar? How could they? They do what Jesus says, lay aside the commandment of God and hold to the tradition of men; with the awful result that their worship is vain. Their worship is vain. They allow the Bible to lead them while they hold the infallible guide-book in their hand, they are without excuse,—they love to have it so, and in the ditch they land at last. Out of the foregoing dogma grew the false and pernicious doctrine of heaven above at death for the good, and hell beneath at death for the bad. The commandment of God sent to us by Jesus is that the meek shall inherit the earth, and by Daniel that they shall possess the kingdom of God under the whole heavens for ever, even for ever and ever. And again by Jesus that no man hath ascended to heaven,—and even his disciples could not go there. And as to the wicked, Peter says they are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished, and Solomon says that they, too, shall be recompensed in the earth; and that their end is destruction, utter and complete, consumed into smoke like the fat of lambs, burnt up root and branch instead of eternal torment. All

THESE COMMANDS OF GOD

are laid aside, and traditions of men take their place, with the result that, not worshipping in truth, their worship is vain. Before Almighty God we solemnly aver that we do know one unadulterated truth taught by the theology of the day. Some are as earnest and sincere that I have no doubt they would die for it,—But they do not believe what God promises them. Eternal Life in a Kingdom on Earth. They, will, not accept that, and to save themselves from Eternal Extinction of Being they cannot find one promise of anything else as the consummation of faith and hope. As this is the hope set before us, and they have not laid hold of it, they have no hope worth a straw. Baptism into the name of the Anointed Jesus is the command of God in order to forgiveness of sins; and this is to be after faith in the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and repentance.—this is all laid aside and traditions of men are taught for doctrines instead. Some ridicule baptism as of no importance at all; some call sprinkling, or pouring baptism—when only dipping, plunging or burying is baptism,—and even most of those who bury in water do not do it for the purpose for which God commanded it—remission of sins! Positively they will not immerse one unless the candidate says he believes his sins are already forgiven. It is astounding—most astounding, the liberty they take with

GOD'S LAW OF PARDON.

How in the name of truth can a person get rid of his sins before he has complied with the conditions exacted of him. Baptism under those circumstances is a human ordinance, and utterly worthless, because also the gospel of the kingdom and of life from the dead through Jesus has not been believed. I was trained in these traditions and know how to sympathize with others. Besides the errors referred to, I was taught that Jesus had died as my substitute,—had paid it all; and it only remained for me to believe that he died FOR ME,—and believe that I was saved and I would be saved. Well, I believed that and it made me as happy as a prince, to think that I had been pardoned—happy—happy—ah happy indeed! I later found out that I had not been pardoned. Not pardoned! This was an awful thing to learn, perhaps you think. But friends, it proved to be a wonderful blessing to me. Not pardoned, says another, then what made you so happy? You may well ask that; but I answer, I was told that if

I ASKED FOR FORGIVENESS

and believed that Jesus died for me, I would be forgiven. I believed that, taking it for granted that it was so, how could I help being happy? Like a message from the Governor of pardon. The Messenger may make a mistake and notify the wrong man. If he believed the Messenger he couldn't help being happy, could he? till the mistake was corrected, then he would be unhappier than ever. It was his faith in the first false message, that made him happy. Like the jollification in Cleveland over the capture of Richmond months before it happened. Faith in the report set off the fireworks. When I discovered that belief of the gospel of the kingdom had to be followed by repentance toward God and prove my faith by baptism into the name of Jesus in order to remission of sins, I saw at once I was not pardoned. I had taken the

HAPPY FEELING

as the witness of the Spirit that I had been forgiven but knowing I was utterly ignorant of the gospel of the kingdom Jesus preached, and said should be preached in all the world, I knew I was not pardoned,—not having complied with the law of pardon. did not even know what the law of pardon was. I then took in the whole situation. I had been led by the blind, and having learned the gospel alphabet, be good again with a joyful heart. right at the foot of the ladder, I found pardon, and peace, and reconciliation, and adoption, and heirship, and knew something of the blessedness of the man whose iniquities are pardoned, whose sins are covered, having reversal things from the Pharisees standpoint, laying aside the commandments of men and holding to those of God. O, the satisfaction of having a thus saith the Lord for every item of ones faith. I would not exchange for all the wealth and honors of the world. The words of Jesus "In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" have no terrors for me now; with humble boldness I can say, Abba Father! This enables this little flock to row up stream all the time no matter how strong the current, we hear the inspiring whispers of our Great Captain, "Fear not Little Flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Do you know why? It was because they were sincerely ignorant, or sincerely mapping out a course of conduct for themselves, and so making themselves good after a pattern of their own? Nothing of the kind; but it was, because in the face of the religious leaders of today, when Jesus came proclaiming the coming of God's kingdom,

THEY JUST BELIEVED IT.

And when he invited them to share that kingdom with himself when it is set up, they gladly accepted it. Is it any wonder that God confines the gift of his kingdom to those who believe the promise of it? Would it not be strange if he forced an everlasting kingdom of glory and peace and righteousness upon people who would not believe that he was to set up such a kingdom on earth after swearing by his own existence to do it? Would it not be wonderfully strange for him to bestow that kingdom, and hand it over to people who all through life sighed to wing their flight to other spheres, spheres that they know nothing at all about,—whether it were a suitable place for them or not? Would it not seem almost ridiculous to think that God would place the government of his universal and everlasting kingdom in the hands of those who systematically schemed all through life, to evade God's law and live by their own? Would they be likely to teach others loyalty to God? The Gospel Call is a Call to God's kingdom and glory; an invitation to be world rulers in partnership with Jesus, the King of kings, and Lord of lords. This kingdom and glory, together with everlasting life to enjoy it, by a resurrection from the dead through Jesus is the faith once delivered to the saints, and it is in obedience to the Spirit's injunction by Jude to contend earnestly for that faith; that I appear before you tonight, with what result I do not know,—but I do know it will not return to him void,—it will accomplish that whereto it was sent. I have shown the truth of God in contrast with the traditions of men, and can leave results with him. Just a word to the believer, and I have done. We are banded together as Bible Truth Defenders. In every age truth has been in the minority, and we know from the lips of the Great Head of the Church it will ever be thus till he comes again. Having espoused his cause, let us advance it to the extent of our ability. While he graciously manages our affairs at the court of Heaven, let us faithfully represent his religion on earth presenting lovely specimens of it to all with whom we come in contact. We have been warned in advance that this will involve reproach as it always did. And although no affliction for the present is joyous, but grievous, yet afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby. Oh let us stand fast in the faith,—quit us like

FAITHFUL SOLDIERS OF JESUS CHRIST.

Let us stand by God's grand old Book closer than ever, as the waves of infidelity roll over the earth, everlooking to Jesus, the beginner and finisher of our faith. I believe he will finish up faith in sight, and hope in glad fruition very soon. Oh, let us be ready!! Let us be sure we have the wedding garment on, and then we shall see his approving smile, and hear him say well done. It will take strong faith to carry through the rough end of our race,—Satan desires to have us an ungodly world would lure us into the broadway, and an Apostate Church would make us believe that it matters not what we believe, and our bodies crave gratifications not compatible with godly life.

OH, THANK GOD FOR AN ADVOCATE

with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; we were undone without him. God has been gracious to us in the past,—is gracious to us now, and will by and by dismiss to us all the riches of his grace stored up in the Anointed for us. Oh the loving Father,—we can afford to trust him even in the dark. Oh, how can we adequately praise him?—there was an eye we did not see, that saw us; and an arm we did not know laid hold upon us, with the result that even now we rejoice in hope of the glory of God, with joy unspeakable. We sing of the realms of the blest, but what must it be to be there! Shall we all be there? Shall we? We can be, if we will. And by the grace of God I mean to be there. Oh may we all be there, and mingle our voices with that innumerable company of overcomers who will make the arches of heaven ring with praise to him sitting upon the throne and to the Lamb for ever. Amen.

Announcement.

The 10th Annual gathering of the Church of God, of the Northwest Conference will be held at Scholls, Oregon, commencing Oct. 16, and continued over Sunday. Brethren from abroad, if they will inform us to that effect, will be met at the National Hotel, Portland, at one o'clock Friday. And now brethren, let me admonish you as a Sister in Christ, one who is looking and waiting for the Savior to come and claim his own, let this gathering be one to be remembered. "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no one shall see the Lord." Let no root of bitterness spring up between us whereby we might loose our birth-right. The time will soon come when such gatherings will be of the past. I often look back and think of those that were with us in our first conference. Where are they? Some are sleeping here at Mountain Side, some at other places, some are scattered, and like sheep have gone astray. Yet we feel to thank God that we have some old pioneers yet here at Scholls and in Vancouver, Washington, and our ranks here have been filled up by new recruits, for which we praise God the Father.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec.

Poetry.

Jesus Is Coming!

Thou art coming, precious Savior!
Coming back to claim thine own!
We will meet thee, we will greet thee,
When thou sittest on thy throne.

Thy promises are immutable,
They will forever stand.
We hope, dear Lord, to meet thee there,
In that blessed promised land.

We are hoping, trusting, longing,
For that glorious time to see;
For we know if we are faithful,
There immortal all shall be.

There the faithful of all ages,
Will before thee stand.
What a happy, glorious meeting,
Of that holy band.

Thy will be done, Omnipotent,
For thou art true and just.
We realize our weakness, Lord,
As poor mortals of the dust.

Come our Savior, O come quickly,
Back to earth, and peace restore,
As revealed by the prophets,
In thy olden days of yore.

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 10.

First Proposition:

Resolved: The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

The book of Job affords another instance of a poetical work yielding directly opposite teaching if the passages are treated as literal prose instead of poetry.

We omit these out of deference to hot weather and briefly notice a few evidences that the leading minds among the Hebrews believed in an abode of spirits where they met their ancestors.

Abraham was "gathered to his fathers" yet he died four hundred miles away. This is not burial for it is said of Isaac that he was gathered to his people and his sons buried him after he was gathered to his fathers. So of Jacob. He yielded up the ghost and was gathered to his people. He died in Egypt and was not buried for two months after he was gathered to his people.

Jacob expected to meet Joseph there. At that time he thought Joseph was turned into lion's flesh, yet he said he would go into the grave unto his son, Gen. xxxvii. 35. The word grave (sheol) does not mean the grave where the body is buried, for that the Hebrews had a different word. Jacob evidently could not meet Joseph there.

The strict prohibition against consulting with the spirits of the dead, Deut. xviii. 11. shows the belief of the people, 1 Samuel xxviii. gives a vivid picture. Samuel rebukes Saul for disquieting him and says that on the morrow, Saul would be with him. Samuel's body was buried sixty miles away from Endor. The body of Saul after being hung upon a wall for some days, was burned, so Samuel's "tomorrow shalt thou be with me," referred to the disembodied spirit.

In Isaiah we have a description of the departed spirits rejoicing over the death of the king of Babylon.

Yet while men on the peaks like Abraham could look for another country even a heavenly, or like David could trust God to guide him, then to receive him, still so obscure was the light that Jesus is said to have brought life and immortality to light, it was not seen before or but dimly. So dim was the light that the sect of the Sadducees arose. Josephus says they taught that souls die with their bodies. Dr. Luke says they held that there is no resurrection neither angel nor spirit, but the Pharisees confess both. Acts xxiii. 8. Paul was a Pharisee.

So imperfect was the Old Testament that it was never given to the world by itself. It does not fairly represent God nor teach the full truth. It is fragmentary. It is priceless. It contains important lessons. It teaches the fear of the Lord. It inculcates personal righteousness. But what the cellar is to the house, what the negative is to the photograph so is the Old Testament to the full revelation of God. It is unfair to him and delusive to ourselves to build a doctrine on the Old Testament without strong corroboration in the New.

In the New Testament we find the nature of man recorded. In harmony with the spiritual nature of the religion of Jesus we find spirit first and body last. "The God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thes. v. 23. Paul said he was Pharisee in believing in the existence of spirits, here he puts the spirit as a component element of man.

He did not teach that man is body and body in one body nor did he say his soul is dust, but in Hebrews iv. 12 we learn that the union between soul and spirit is very close, yet the Word of God distinguishes between them. Human philosophy could not do that. Paul does not say that man is body and weight and color. These would be attributes of body, but he was not writing aimlessly. Illustration is not argument. Analogy is weak, it must be exact to carry weight. Now, if thought, reason, love, ambition, fear, hope fill up the definition of the word "nothing" because you cannot weigh a hope, or measure a fear, or tell the size or form of a high ambition, then mind is nothing, soul is nothing, spirit is nothing, hence since God is spirit, God is nothing.

When the anatomist proudly declares that there is no soul because he finds it not with his dissecting knife, do you think he has proved anything? By no means. He might as well say there is no such thing as love, or hope by the same test. When a man like Huxley of deep mental power, of wide research, an honest searcher into nature's secrets yet an unbeliever in the Christian religion rises from poring over natures revelation, and the world's literature for more than half a century and bears testimony, as Huxley did to the moral teaching of the Bible as unsurpassed, we say that the testimony of an enemy is of tenfold value. The prejudice for a theory makes some authors quoted by the negative unreliable, but Huxley's prejudice against the Scripture moves it more forcible when he endorses its teaching.

He said, "We know more of mind than we do of body. The immaterial world is a firmer reality than the material." So Paul, the things seen are temporal, the things not seen are eternal." "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Jesus asked.

Gravitation, chemical affinity, instinct, the properties of anthracite coal do not furnish an analogy to the spirit and soul in the body of man. The spirit is superior to the body, compels it to endure fatigue, pain, even crucifixion. There is analogy in the cases cited. All that matter can do is to move and to enter into new organizations. Chemical affinity is not thought. You may use words to imply that matter can evolve thought but cannot really believe it. You only think you do. In the Bible the heart was regarded as the seat of reason, the kidneys of conscience, the bowels of the affections. If these representations, on the materialistic one of today that the brain evolves thought, sensibility and will were true, it is evident that no man is responsible for his deeds. The atheistic materialist admits that. It is evident, that unless, there be a controlling spirit, the brain's motions are helplessly beyond our reach. "There is a great chemist who can analyze man and reduce him to dust as he was, and destroy his thoughts and consciousness." He has analyzed man—result, spirit, soul, body; reduce him to dust, i. e. his body not his spirit which came from God and returns to him. Eccl. xii. 1; Luke xxiv. 46.

God can destroy both body and soul in hell. Herod could destroy the body of James by killing him. He could do no more. God can. Matt. x. 2; Luke xii. 4. But he would not in the case of James the Lord's brother. For he had feared God, not man. Therefore Jame's soul is preserved entire. 1 Thess. v. 23 and Elder Wilson's theory is contrary to the teaching of the Word.

One text in the Old Testament is enough to disprove it to any one who trembles at the Word and counts one item of truth better than years of consistency. Wise men change their opinions. Take Jno. ii. 19, 20. It is as plain as day that it utterly refutes the theory that the conscious spirit becomes extinct in death. Elder Wilson will neither acknowledge its truth nor explain its meaning. It worries him. It ought to. It shows that he is teaching error. It ought to remind him of the fearful retribution of those who wrest the Scriptures. The man who wished to sell his body for sixty dollars knew that he, the conscious, thinking spirit, owned his body, that he could sentence it to death before its time. He made no such foolish proposition as to offer to deliver first, he expected to spend that sixty dollars while in the body, then deliver. Elder Wilson can find no argument to set aside the words of the Lord.

I submit that to every man who is ready to sacrifice theory to truth, who hopes for salvation because he believes God's Word, the solemn language of Jesus allows no escape. He calls his body a temple. Then in that temple dwelt his soul and spirit, for all three make up the man. After the Jews should kill him, thus destroying his body, he would live, he would think, he would know the appointed hour, he would raise that temple and inhabit it again.

Let Eld. Wilson give a better, truer interpretation and then affirmative will listen to accept. Otherwise one plain, unquestionable declaration of the Master puts to rout the earth born theories of Sadduceeism and Materialists.

GEO. T. SMITH.

REPLY NO. 10.

In the present paper Eld. Smith continues his effort to belittle the Old Testament Scriptures. He says it is "imperfect" and "fragmentary," and speaks of it as being "delusive to ourselves to build a doctrine on the Old Testament."

If that is so, then Paul must have been fearfully deluded. Listen:

"I confess unto thee, that after the way that they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Acts xxiv. 14.

Well, Paul, if you had been living at this day you might have learned that the things which are "written in the law and in the prophets," are "fragmentary," "imperfect" and "delusive."

Listen again:

Acts xxvi. 22: "I continue unto this day, witnessing unto both small and great, saying none other things than those which Moses and the prophets did say should come.

Acts xxviii. 23: "To whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets from morning till evening."

Here we have Paul preaching all day trying "to build a doctrine on the Old Testament." Eld. Smith says that kind of preaching is "delusive."

In reading Eld. Smith's present paper you will find he has use for such phrases as: "spirits of the dead," "disembodied spirits," "departed spirits," phrases the Bible knows nothing about. They had their origin in the dark ages, many centuries before Christ, and were nothing more than the dark imaginings of benighted heathen and pagan philosophers. He would have you think that when the old patriarchs were "gathered to their fathers," that they were gathered together in Ghostland, a so-called place of departed spirits. All we know about that country is gathered from the ignorant and idolatrous teaching of the Egyptians, and the dreamy speculations of Pagan philosophers. The Scriptures are as silent as death about it. It seems to me, Eld. Smith, you ought to seek for proof from a higher source than dark heathenism. The phrase: "gathered to his fathers," bears no possible relation to such superstitions, but is simply a phrase the Hebrews understood as relating to the matter of death. It is said of these people, after being gathered to their fathers: "Thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us," (being unconscious in death.) "His sons may come to honor, and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low but he perceiveth it not of them. It is certain these "departed spirits" don't know how much, if they cannot perceive that a little after arriving in Ghostland. He quotes Saul, and the witch of Endor, to show that people believe in departed spirits. Some of the people did, they received it from the pagans just as they embraced idolatry when they mixed with idolatrous nations. The testimony of a "witch" is no better evidence than the Egyptians, heathen philosophers, and your infidel witnesses.

He cites then Jacob's language, that he would go into the grave unto his son, and says:

"The word grave (sheol) does not mean the grave where the body is buried, for that the Hebrews had a different word."

I wish to call the special attention of all the readers to the above assertion. That is an assertion which demands proof. I am not willing to let that pass. If he fails to produce authority, I will have a few comments to make upon that in another paper. I will let it rest for the present.

He refers to body, soul and spirit again. He does not seem to realize that they are but expressions signifying the entire mortal organism.

Compare it with Isa. x. 18: "Shall consume the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field, both soul and body."

If the expression "soul and body," means that one part is natural, and the other spiritual, how about the "soul and body" of trees?

He speaks about an anatomist declaring there is no soul because he can not find it with a dissecting knife, and remarks, "He might as well say there is no such thing as love or hope by the same test." He certainly could hardly expect to find the soul, if its existence is no more real in substance than attributes of a living material organism.

He next tries to sustain credibility of his called witness, Huxley. A man who would denounce the resurrection of Christ as a fable can hardly be a credible witness on Christian theology.

He then goes down into what he calls the "cellar," to hunt for his spirits, and finds them in Eccl. xii. The same authority he has cited as evidence says: "That which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as one dieth, so dieth the other, yea, they have all one breath, (spirit)." Jas. ii. "Body without the spirit (margin breath) is dead."

Eld. Smith says in No. 3: "There is a controlling intelligent being called the spirit, or the mind, or soul, which uses the nervous system; especially the brain, much as the player the organ."

He compares the brain to a musical instrument which is operated upon by the player, and remarks: "Then we can understand how the mind may be hampered by the 'imperfection of the organ.'" (the brain) just as a player is hampered by his instrument being out of order.

The question is, how does he know that such a conscious agency as he describes, exists at all? His assertion does not make it so. Some one else may conceive of a different theory, and finally publish it to the world, saying, "There is," etc. His "there is," etc., would be just as authoritative both resting on personal assertion.

Eld. Smith intimates that the spirit may be hampered by an imperfect brain structure like a player would be with his instrument being out of order. He then proceeds to tell how the brain may be half paralyzed, and yet the spirit plays just as good a tune as it did when the brain was in order.

He then relates a story about a boy being shot in the head, and lost brain substance daily but retained his mental power unimpaired until he died eighteen days afterward. The size of the brain left was not larger than an egg." This story refutes itself. All the readers know that it is simply impossible for a person to be "shot in the head," with loss of "brain substance daily," until only a piece "not larger than an egg," was left, and have his mental powers (remain) unimpaired." Such stories have a damaging effect to the theory of the affirmative, with intelligent readers. They know better.

He next cites Ferrier, and Joseph Cook, with regard to experiments, on frogs and fish, and as a result of those experiments he says: "These experiments prove that an external agent uses the brain. It is intelligent, it directs the movements of the body, which cannot move without the consent of the presiding being."

If these experiments prove anything, they must by taking Eld. Smith's reasoning, prove that frogs and fish have "a controlling, intelligent being called the spirit, or the mind or the soul," just the same as man is supposed to have. Now if the body "cannot move" without the consent of "a controlling intelligent being called the spirit," then "the spirit" is responsible for the acts of the body."

The body "cannot move" "without consent" of the intelligent being called the "spirit." The body drinks intoxicating liquor by "consent," the result is "the mind or the soul" becomes stupified, and insensible, and while in that condition the body commits murder. Which is the responsible party? In what way does intoxicating drinks affect "the mind or the soul?"

At Kenwood, Illinois, live two young ladies who are devoutly attached to each other one of them by mistake inhaled the fumes of ammonia, which affected the pneuma-gastric nerve, and insanity followed. "The mind or the soul," "consents," and this young lady inhales the fumes of ammonia, and as a result "the spirit, or the mind, or the soul," looses its balance and becomes crazy.

The action is just the same in every form of animal life. If an animal is "shot in the head," "with loss of brain substance," it cannot retain its "mental powers unimpaired," any more than a man could.

The material organism gradually weakens as old age approaches, and in like proportion the mind ("the spirit") looses its power. Men who were intellectual giants during the healthy vigor of the material organism frequently pass into second childhood, as dissolution approaches.

Men of intellectual power sometimes contract a disease known as softening of the brain, and according as the disease progresses the mind ("spirit" or "soul") becomes impaired until finally it looses all power to think on any topic. Hence the healthy action of the material organism is necessary for the proper evolution of thought.

I was acquainted with a writer of national repute who wrote articles which elicited admiration.

His finest thoughts were produced when the brain was stimulated to activity by an excessive use of chewing tobacco. Did the narcotic act upon the brain, or "the spirit?"

Again, if the spirit operates upon the brain "much as the player the organ" when the brain (its organ) ceases to be, what has the spirit to play upon? Can it still operate without an instrument, any more than an organist can play on an organ without an organ? How can the mind survive the dissolution of the body? That it does so, is contrary to science, philosophy, nature, reason and Scripture.

Why attach the power of thought to a dreamy, imaginary, immaterial nothing, called an immaterial, immortal spirit? What do we know about it? What is it but an airy illusion of some dreamy fancy?

Does not nature teach you that the odor of the flower does not survive the flower? Does it not also teach that will, reason and affection cannot be exercised by the material organism, or anything which pertained to it, after its dissolution?

Does not the quality and power of thought depend upon the cerebral organism? Why cannot a natural idiot with a receating forehead think like a man with a fine cerebral organization?

The accident of birth, and mental culture has much to do with the thinking capacity of man. Why so, if the spirit does the thinking?

It will be time enough for Eld. Smith to affirm that the mind survives the shock of death, when he is able to cite some simple, of the evolution of thought apart from a material organism. It would be just as sensible for him to affirm that a man can see without eyes, and feel without nerves, or to think without brains. Every effect must have a cause, and when the cause ceases to be, the effect will also fail to follow. That is according to nature, Eld. Smith, as I you will find it in sweet accord with both the Old and New Testaments.

Does not nature teach that there can be no life unless there is something to live. An immateriality is nothing. If we could properly speak of an immaterial organism, it would be a form constructed out of nothing. Can a form or shape be made without anything to construct it out of? A believer in the immaterial soul Eld. Smith talks about says: "The soul has none of the properties by which matter is distinguished. It cannot be seen, touched, measured or weighed." This soul does not even have the reality of a gust of wind. How foolish to talk of an organism being constructed out of such an aerial, visionary, ethereal and gaseous nothing which can manifest the attributes of a material organism.

What a striking difference exists between this kind of a soul, and the soul God made. The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." In this soul there is form, substance and reality, something which the mind can grasp, and appreciate, and when invested with immortality, when Jesus comes, will be just as real, literal and tangible as was the mortal organism.

If you cannot on the ocean
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows,
Laughing at the storms you meet;
You can stand among the sailors,
Anchored yet within the bay,
You can lend a hand to help them
As they launch their boat away.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready to command,
If you cannot towards the needy
Reach an ever open hand;
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep;
You can be a true disciple,
Sitting at the Savior's feet.

He, every one that thirsteth God gives the blessings of salvation to the undeserving, but never to the undesiring.

Editor Restitution:

You will please find one dollar enclosed to pay for THE RESTITUTION another eight months. I am entirely isolated, have stood alone here more than fifteen years. THE RESTITUTION is all the preacher I have, I think it is a mighty good preacher and I don't want to do without it.

J. T. GARRET.

Editor Restitution:

Please find one dollar to apply on my subscription, and I will send more just as soon as I can. With love to all the dear brothers and sisters in the one faith who has contributed so lovingly, may God bless them all and may we all have a glorious entrance into his glorious kingdom is the prayer of your Sister of the soon coming King of Kings.

With love,
ELIZABETH KENDALL.

Editor Restitution:

We have had nothing but sickness for over a year—at last ending in death. Yes, we have laid a loved companion away in the grave, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. He sleeps in Jesus, blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep. We know our loved one will live again in the kingdom of God, bless the name of the Lord.

MRS. MILES CAMPBELL.

Dear Restitution:

Looking over the paper I see my subscription has expired and I herewith enclose $1.50 for my next year's paper, and would say, God bless THE RESTITUTION and its able contributors, who are so ably and nobly defending the truth, heralding the soon coming of the blessed kingdom of our Master, even the kingdom of our blessed Lord who shall reign on Mount Zion before his ancients gloriously.

Yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes.

AGNES DILWORTH.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed find money to pay my subscription to our very valuable paper, THE RESTITUTION, the remainder for the helping fund. I could not think of doing without its weekly visits it is a source of great comfort to me. We must be living in the last days when men's hearts are failing them for looking upon the things that are coming upon this earth. My prayer is that I may be faithful and have an entrance in the kingdom of God with all his dear children.

Your Sister in Christ,
SARAH HARDEN.

Editor Restitution:

I don't know how to do without the paper. I love to read the able writings of the brethren and the letters from the dear ones of the faith, in the soon coming of our dear Lord to establish his kingdom on the earth, and rule in righteousness. The times admonish us of his near coming. How important that we watch and wait patiently for his coming. I cannot be thankful enough to my heavenly Father for opening my eyes to see the truth as it is in Jesus, that, we have life only in Christ, through the resurrection from the dead, when Christ comes and brings his reward with him, if asleep in Jesus or changed if living. My feet are fixed on the Rock Christ Jesus, and I am made to rejoice in him who is the one hope of our salvation. There are a few of us in San Diego, that meet for Bible study and breaking of bread. Sister Carrie Williams is very poorly, had hemorrage, but is still faithful to her trust in God.

Yours in the one hope of the gospel.

MRS. H. S. DRESSER.

Dear Brother:

Inclosed you will find money order to renew my subscription to THE RESTITUTION for six months. I could hardly get along without it. Bro. Woodward preaches six miles from here and I hear him nearly every time. His appointment is every four weeks, Saturday evening and Sunday morning. Bro. Woodward is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth. O, for more workers in the Master's vineyard. How few there are that are looking for him to return and reckon with his servants, and reward those that have been faithful. When we look about us and see the crime and misery, who can help praying, "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly." The question was recently asked me: "When were the Israelites first called Jews?" The first place I found the word Jew, is in 2 Chron. xxxii. 18. Will some one answer through THE RESTITUTION, also how many of the tribes were called Jews? Was it Judah and Benjamin that were so called? Answer and oblige a Sister in the faith.

SARAH L. GRIGGS.

Selected.

Hard to Please.

There are people who seem to be unconscious of the fact that nobody nor anything can please them. They go to church and return home only to growl; they eat their meals with long faces and leave the table unsatisfied, they go to their business full of qucks and crochets and look as though they had lost every friend in the world. When children playfully greet them they cry out, "go away." They have no time to talk, are always busy and yet sit still and brood over total depravity and original sin. They are always expecting poor crops, and think "there's going to be a famine." they know the hearts of all men but their own. Twenty-five per cent. brings out an occasional grin, but they soon begin to mourn over the circumstances, and say, "it might have been more." The newspapers do not please them. The articles are too long or short, or the sentiments are wrong. The man who wrote the article has a handle on his name, and that ruins his chances for salvation. If a sinner is pricked to the heart and applies for admission into the church, he is suspicioned as having wicked designs on the elect fold. In short, everything goes wrong with these chronic fault finders. No one can live in peace with them. They live in the tombs of society and mourn over the follies and foibles of other men. We have always pitied these unfortunate beings and would be most happy to pour sunshine and peace into their sad aching hearts, but the avenues are all locked up and over the gateway to their sympathy is written, No Admittance. People in this condition have religious dyspepsia and will die of melancholy. Life with them is a road of thorns, and they have ever walked in the shadow of the grave.

That there are times to weep, times when the heart should beat in sympathy with the sufferingchildren of earth, we most fully believe, and we would not inflict one additional pang to the weary aching heart. But we cannot believe that the Christian life is a funeral procession. Neither do we believe that we should always be singing:

"Hark from the tombs a doleful sound,
My ear attends the cry."

There are bright spots in the desert of life, there are flowers as well as thorns, there are rejoicings as well as weepings. Israel shouted when the Red Sea was passed. Angels rejoice when sinners turn to God. The plains of a world made new will resound with tidings of great joy. Sorrow and sighing shall flee away, while shouts of victory will ring through the world from the palm-bearers beside the throne.

Did not Jesus say, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world?" And, again, "Rejoice and be exceeding glad?" When the prodigal returned from the wilderness of sin to the Father's house, was there not rejoicing and music? The future world is pictured to us in visions of beauty. At the right hand of the King there are "joys and pleasures forevermore." "Let not your hearts be troubled," says our absent Lord.

Life is an earnest field, and we must cheerfully and manfully fill our place and await the blessed morning of joy when the reapers shall bear the sheaves as wave offerings before the King in the golden harvests of crowns and immortality.

Testimony to the Truth of the Bible.

Tyre from its ruins, Sodom from its ashes, Rome in her apostasy; Jerusalem in her degradation, the Arab in his tent, the Jew upon our streets, all living and lasting, even if unconscious, witnesses, proclaim that the Bible has God for its author, truth for its matter, as it has immortality and glory for its issues.

Let me suppose, for a moment, that a number of persons in different ages and places have been engaged in making various parts of a marble statue; suppose a person in St. Petersburg made a finger, a second in Rome a hand, a third in Edinburg an ear, a fourth in Athens the body, and so on till the whole was completed, but all without communication with one another, and in different ages as in different lands. Suppose, that when all the fragments were brought together they formed that magnificent statue, the Appollo Belvedere; would you not suppose that some superintending statuary must have guided and given an impulse to every chisel; that some bona ideal, some great archetype, must have been placed before each of them, after the form of which they were inspired constantly to work? In other words, they composed the parts, not as their own fancy prescribed, but as the presiding power directed? This is the fact in reference to the Scriptures! Let us take the portrait of our blessed Savior. Isaiah describes his sorrows, Malachi his triumphs, the dying Patriarch predicts his empire, and the sweet Psalmist of Israel the extension of his kingdom: one prophet gives one feature, and one gives another; and looking at the parts in detail, irrespective of the original, and comparing one with another, we should say they were at once contradictory, that they can never belong to the same individual.

At last, Bethlehem and Gethsemane rise above the horizon, Calvary lifts its awful head, the Son of God appears upon the cross, what prophets said is compared with what Christ is; and lo! all the parts delineated by the pens of prophets in distant and different circumstances, at first apparently contradictory, come to be put together and they constitute "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person." By this alone it is proved that the prophets "wrote as they were moved and guided by the Holy Spirit," and that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah!—J. Cummings.

Geology and the Bible.

Some people condemn geology as setting aside the dictum of the Scriptures, and representing the world as a great deal older than is set down in Genesis. They say that facts of its own finding actually condemn its own assumptions; for instance, one of the remote periods of geology is the cretaceous, or age of Chalk. Between that time and this, inconcivable ages have come and gone, say some geologists. This is sheer assumption, for deep-sea soundings prove that chalk is now being deposited in the Atlantic Ocean; to-day is the chalk-age, and your long-drawn periods of time are pure myths! Again some geologists not the carboniferous epoch so far back that the six thousand years of Hebrew history sink into insignificance. But this is set at naught by the fact that the wooded supports in certain of the Hartz mines in Austria have been converted into lignite since they have been put in, only a few centuries ago. This shows that the production of a carboniferous stratum does not necessarily require a greater length of time than the Bible gives as the age of the world. The action of certain chemicals will convert wood into coal in a short time. Again, in the South Sea, the corals of to-day are forming strata that are the exact counterparts (fossils excepted,) of—say—the Trenton limestones. In other parts of the world sand deposits are now forming, such as composed the Potsdam sandstones. Why not say therefore, that the silurian period is a figment of the imagination?—Compiled.

While some condemn geology because it disagrees with the Bible, others discard the Scriptures for the same reason. But this is a great mistake. It is only the interpretations of each that disagree. When properly interpreted and understood they are in perfect harmony.

Service takes its value from character. The dime, as well as the eagle, takes honor from the state whose imprint it bears. Our fragmentary service is the "small change," and equally honorable with the larger coin of more conspicuous deeds. Few lives round out in a large unity, or rise in tall symmetry.—Marvin R. Vincent.

Mind must and will control matter. The power of the Roman church today is the intelligence of their leaders, and the ignorance of the masses. No wonder they so persistently oppose our public school system. No wonder the colored people were excluded from every opportunity to rise above the status of a well developed animal.

Morality without religion is only a kind of dead reckoning—an endeavor to find our place on a cloudy sea by measuring the distance we have to run, but without any observation of the heavenly bodies.—Longfellow.

Splendid Opportunities

For Home-seekers and others desirous of changing their locations are offered in the great states of Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota and Nebraska. Fertile and productive land is for sale on the most reasonable terms, and there are many openings for all classes of business men, particularly farmers and dairymen. Those interested will be furnished full information, free of charge, upon application to W. B. Kniskern, 22 Fifth Ave. Chicago, Ill.

Announcement.

The brethren and sisters of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will meet in Conference at Lamark, Ill. commencing Sept. 18, 1896, and continuing over Sunday 20th. Preaching brethren D. M. Hadler and J. F. Wilcox are expected. Come let us have a feast of good news.

J. W. Glotfelty, Chair.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the State of Indiana, will convene at Argos, Indiana, on Friday at 2 P. M., Sept. 18, 1896. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of truth to meet with us and enjoy at least one more reunion of those of like precious faith. We are admonished to be watchful, the signs thicken, events of momentous importance tell us plainly the hour of his coming is near. Be ye therefore ready.

J. F. Wagoner, Pres.
A. C. Roberts Sec.

The Eleventh Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at the City Park, in St. Paul, commencing, the Lord willing, on Friday September 11th; and will continue for ten days. We give one and all a cordial invitation to come and enjoy some blessed meetings with those of like precious faith. Come prepared to do all in your power to help make the meetings both pleasant and profitable. St. Paul is near the center of the State, being just twenty-five miles north of Grand Island, so that all will have an equal chance to attend. We would like for all who can to bring tents; but to those who cannot, we say, "Come any way and we will see that you are cared for in the best manner possible." There will be a boarding tent at the park so that the sisters need not spend their time in cooking, but can enjoy the meetings. Yet we would say, "Bring your provisions with you, if you wish. You can dispose of them to the committee appointed for buying provisions, who will credit you for them. This will go towards paying your board at the tent." Once more we ask you to come and tarry with us for a short time, and help us in the Master's work. Let us serve him while we may, that we may be ready to meet him when he comes in glory to set up his kingdom on the earth. Brothers and Sisters, this time is not far distant. Let us strive to be faithful; and when the time comes, may we one and all enter into the rest that is prepared for the people of God.

6 P. M. Supper.
8 P. M. Public Preaching.

The intervening hours between 8 A. M. and 6 P. M. will be occupied in the Reading of Essays, in Prayer and Social meetings, or in some way that will be beneficial to all. Come and we are sure that you will feel well repaid for so doing.

Your Sister in Christ.
Rena M. Gordon, Sec.

Dear Restitution:

We wish to say to the brethren of the Church of God, of Southern Kan., and throughout the State that a Conference will convene at Bitter Creek, Sumner Co., Kan., on Friday evening before the second Sunday in Sept., and continue over Sunday, and as much longer as the interest may demand. Brethren, this meeting is yours. Will you come to enjoy it? There will be some important business to attend too. Should any of you have a pet hobby please hitch him at the first outside post. We do not want to have any wild mustangs loose in the crowd of people. Come together for religious worship, let us have peace, let us have a meeting commendable to the people of God. Times are very hard; but the Lord is liable to come, even if times are hard, whether we have a dollar or not, let us get ready, all make an extra effort to try and be at this meeting. Bro. L. E. Conner has promised to be with us, if it is possible. We would like to have as many come as possibly can come to do so. You may think times are too hard, but this is a burden all must bear in order to share the joys derived from it. This meeting will be held at the Southeast corner of Sumner Co., one-half mile south of Bitter Creek post office, Geuda Springs 7 miles north is the nearest railroad station. Any coming by rail may address me at Geuda Springs, or Bro. J. M. Vickery, Arkansas City, telling us when to meet you and we will be pleased to wait on you. This may be the last gathering in this life, so then come. Come one, come all.

Della Miller, Asst. Sec.

Books and Tract List.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

FUTURE PROBATION.

Is Just now getting out of the unrighteous? A 750 page pamphlet by Wm. Gunn Moncrieff. This work was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid for ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for those interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send ten cents to this office for same.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and compact-suive, and can be had for 5cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 1001 excellent hymns, with music for writing the air on the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conant," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in Restitution, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the Restitutions of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Address, The Restitution; Plymouth, Ind.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Poetry.

Day By Day.

Every day has its dawn
Its soft and silent eve,
Its monthly lunes of bliss or pain—
Why should we grieve?

Why do we heap huge mounds of years
Before us and behind,
And scorn the little days that pass
Like angels on the wing?

Each turning round a small sweet face,
As beautiful as near
Because it is so small a face
We will not see it clear.

And so it turns from us, and goes
Away in sad disdain;
Then we would give our lives for it,
But—ever comes again.

Regeneration.

Read 2 Tim. iv. 1-5; Titus iii. 1-3.

Text—Man's difficulty. Eph. iv. 18; Hosea iv. 6.

Your machinery being out of order, then why not have it adjusted and set going properly. Why halt between two opinions, if the Lord be God serve him. You cannot serve God and mammon. All are sinners, Rom. iii. 23. The wages of sin is death, Rom. vi. 23. If you die in your sins you loose the chance of eternal life, John viii. 21–4. In man's re-generation there is no new nature imparted, no new faculties added, but a of his disordered powers, such as will bring his nature again into submission to God's will and mind into the fellowship of his love—at-one-ment.

As the steps of degeneration going away from God were

1. Unbelief.
2. Disobedience.
3. Guilt.
4. Exile from God.
5. Death.

So the process of regeneration, coming back to God is

1. Belief.
2. Obedience.
3. Forgiveness.
4. Union with God.
5. Everlasting life.

It is necessary to take the same number of steps in coming back to God as were taken in leaving him.

We must remember that the Author of all is God, John vi. 29.

The Mediator between God and man is CHRIST, 1 Tim. ii. 5.

The Revealer is the Holy Spirit. John xvii. 18, 14.

The object is salvation, Luke iii. 6.

The Word of God is the only safe counsel, Psalm xix. 7–9; 2 Tim. iii. 14–17.

Jesus is the only way, John xiv. 6.

Believing, trusting, obeying, and turning from sin is his appointed way of coming to him.

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, Mark xvi. 16.

Believing what Christ and the apostles preached, which is the gospel of the kingdom, Mark i. 14; John xx. 31; Acts xvi. 31.

When we believe this then obey by repenting, turning from sin, Acts xvii. 30; Acts ii. 38; Luke xiii. 3.

Confessing Christ, Matt. x. 32, 33; Rom. x. 10.

Be baptized by immersion into Christ, Mark xvi. 16; Acts xxii. 16; 1 Peter iii. 21; Rom. vi. 4; John iii. 5.

By doing this we obtain forgiveness of sins or remission and the gift of the holy spirit and become united to God, Acts ii. 38, 39.

By living a holy and godly life, receive at the resurrection eternal life.

Can two walk together, except they be agreed, Amos iii. 3.

Christ is our Savior and Lord, John iv. 42; Phil. ii. 11; Rev. xvii. 14.

He was the Prophet, Deut. xviii. 15; Matt. xxi. 11; Acts iii. 22.

He is now High Priest in the holy of holies, Heb. vii. 17.

When he comes he will be Judge, Acts xvii. 31.

And will become King over all the earth, Rev. xviii. 14; xi. 15.

The earth is to be restored to its edenic purity, Acts iii. 19, 21; xv. 14–17.

Dominion was lost by Adam, will be restored by the second Adam Christ.

The true believers are the body of Christ and is called the Church of God. Their aim should be to shun not to declare the whole counsel of God. Exalt Christ above party. The Word of God above human creeds. Church of God without any denominational or sect name. Conditions of salvation as given by the Word only. Take no man's creed, but trust God and his Word. He will not lead them astray.

We read in Num. xxiii. 19, God is not a man that he should lie; neither the son of man that he should repent, hath he said, and will he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?

In Acts xvii. we read "And the times of this ignorance God winked at: but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent.

My friends, now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. Believe God heartily, obey him faithfully, hope in him patiently, and then at the resurrection you will reign with Christ gloriously.

Time of the End.

Dear Restitution:

Please allow me space in your much esteemed paper for a few thoughts on the above subject. There has been much said and written on the subject and I think it is beneficial for all to view it from all standpoints, that we may all conclude from the evidence produced. Some say that the tribulation spoken of by Daniel, and the great Teacher, himself, is applicable to the Jews at present, and that they have been in this trouble ever since their dispersion among all nations. I take a different position. We read in Old Scriptures that Zion was to have a double portion of this trouble. She had one great trouble, the siege of Jerusalem, where over a million fell. There is another time spoken of when half of the city goes into captivity. I think that this last trouble is the tribulation that Christ had in mind and when he said, "immediately after this tribulation shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light," etc. Some say the sun has been darkened, the stars fell, etc., but they don't introduce the moon, she is left out. So the reasoning will not stand the test. Immediately after the trouble, the sun was to be darkened, so if the scattering of the Jews was the trouble and the Jew is still in that tribulation, we had these events all fulfilled before the time, and the moon hasn't been darkened yet. Some of the brethren say that a literal fulfilment of these signs shall never take place, that it all is symbolic language. This position I cannot endorse, from the fact, that at the time Joshua was fighting the battles of the Lord, the sun stood still, typical of something in the future. At the time of the crucifixion the sun was darkened, pointing to a future time when the literal sun shall be darkened, the literal stars shall fall, the moon also shall not give her light. This will all happen in short order, very shortly after Jacob's trouble or tribulation which is to last three years and a half, then immediately after this trouble these signs will be fulfilled. Then at that time shall they see the Son of Man coming with power and great glory, then shall the tribes of the earth mourn when they see these things transpiring, then they shall see their mistakes of going to heaven at death, then they will know that sprinkling, pouring, or any way to suit the taste, won't do. Now, they say it makes no difference, then they will say it makes an awful difference, for we are left assured that the Land was all that was promised to men, but we did not believe it. Then they will say, "Lord, Lord, open unto us," but the Lord tells them he never knew them, they being strangers to the Covenant of promise and from the commonwealth of Israel. Space forbids enlargement, but would be exceeding glad to see an article on the "Time of the End," from Bro. George Mayer. Brethren, we are all nominated, let us try and make our calling and election sure.

Your Brother in hope, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

What a consolation it must have been to have that assurance. This was their hope, the return of their blessed Savior. This is our hope. When he comes and takes to himself authority and power, then shall be peace on earth, good will toward men. Then will the "knowledge of the Lord fill the earth, as the waters cover the sea." Then we shall not read of London with its three thousand miles of street where fifty thousand are shut out every night. We shall not read of the deadly cyclone, then starvation, death, disappointments. Heart-aching will be done, then will that beautiful Second Psalm be fulfilled. This world is groaning under her load. Brethren, can we say any thing only, "Come Lord Jesus and come quickly?"

Yours in faith.

A Precious Promise.

Dear Restitution:

As I see an article in the paper requesting the brethren to write some brief and practical articles, I will say that of all the promises in the Bible, the one that the angels made to the apostles seems the most dear to me. "And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i. 10-11.

How sad they must have felt. Their companion with whom they had been so long and learned to love, doing good wherever he went, healing the blind, the lame, raised the dead, stilled the storm and restored health to the sufferers. But the time had come when they were to be left alone, but [illegible] with a promise—"This same Jesus which is taken from you into [illegible]

gess a justified sentiment—are not heirs of it; and the words of Jesus decide it: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth"—people and all. Oh sir, we have sold for a song here, and are mistaken. [illegible] think these words of the Lord do not mean that the meek shall inherit the earth in the resurrection? [illegible] says, "Hearken, O [illegible] hath not God chosen the poor [illegible] world, rich in faith and which he hath promised to them that love him? This proves that [illegible] after Pentecost there was promised faithfulness and heirship and reign of the Kingdom characterizing the members of the Church of God. And still more. The Kingdom was not yet set up, as Jesus intimates in Matthew 25 when in the future [illegible] poor who have God will come into possession of the promised kingdom. He says [illegible]

THE SON OF MAN WILL COME

in his glory and [illegible] with him, THEN shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Keep this in mind, for it discusses the second Advent. The scene is here, not in any other sphere. I want to cry about and shout it everywhere. The throne of his glory is to be HERE. Would he set up the throne of his glory in the territory of another? Would he be trespasser,—or has the very "land of his foot" which drank his blood, [illegible]

dear Sir, if you wish to get a glimpse of that

DAY OF THE LORD

that gladdened him, I quote for you two verses, as a sample of many scores of others, that exhibits some of the things that will transpire in that day. You may find them in Jeremiah [illegible], 5, 6. To get the connection read from verse 1. It says, "Behold the days come saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, ing the time of these meetings the parties became acquainted, which finally resulted in marriage. The bride was baptized last winter. Bro. Skeels and wife will go to his home in Oregon in a short time. The Church here loses an active member, but we trust Bro. Skeels has secured a companion who will aid him in his work for the cause of his Master. The good wishes of the Church here will go with them. We now have a membership of fifty, and next Sunday another is to be immersed, and we hope for more additions in the near future.

Announcement.

The 10th Annual gathering of the Church of God, of the Northwest Conference will be held at Scholls, Oregon, commencing Oct. 16, and continued over Sunday. Brethren from abroad, if they will inform us to that effect, will be met at the National Hotel, Portland, at one o'clock Friday. And now brethren, let me admonish you as a Sister in Christ, one who is looking and waiting for the Savior to come and claim his own, let this gathering be one to be remembered. "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no one shall see the Lord." Let no root of bitterness spring up between us whereby we might loose our birth-right. The time will soon come when such gatherings will be of the past. I often look back and think of those that were with us in our first conference. Where are they? Some are sleeping here at Mountain Side, some at other places, some are scattered, and like sheep have gone astray. Yet we feel to thank God that we have some old pioneers yet here at Scholls and in Vancouver, Washington, and our ranks here have been filled up by new recruits, for which we praise God the Father.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec.

The brethren and sisters of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will meet in Conference at Lanark, Ill. commencing Sept. 18, 1896, and continuing over Sunday 20th. Preaching brethren D. M. Hadler and J. F. Wilcox are expected. Come let us have a feast of good news.

J. W. GLOTFELTY, Chair.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God for the State of Indiana, will convene at Argos, Indiana, on Friday at 2 p. m., Sept. 18, 1896. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of truth to meet with us and enjoy at least one more reunion of those of like precious faith. We are admonished to be watchful, the signs thicken, events of momentous importance tell us plainly the hour of his coming is near. Be ye therefore ready.

Abdul Hamid's End Near.

Constantinople, Sep. 12, via Sofia, Bulgaria, Sept. 13.—[Copyrighted, 1896, by the Associated Press.]—To those who have eyes to see there is more and more evident the approach of a crisis in the affairs of the decrepit Ottoman Empire. But the Turk himself offers no signs of an appreciation of the fate that is impending over him in the limit that has apparently been reached in the patience of the European powers with the process of extermination of the Armenians that has been steadily and relentlessly pursued by the Turks. There is no diminution in the rancor displayed by the Mussulmans toward the Armenians and no sign of the relinquishment of the Turk's contention that the Armenians are persistent and determined revolutionists and agitators against the sovereignty of the Sultan, and as such, invite the stringent repressive measures that have been used against them.

Some color has to be admitted to this contention of the Turks from the fact that some of the envoys of the powers have received a circular note from the Hintchak Revolutionary committee, declaring that if the reforms demanded by the Armenians at the time of the raid by them upon the Ottoman Bank are not granted there will be a more serious outbreak against the Turkish authority and over a much wider area than was the last, which resulted in the apparently indiscriminate slaughter of Armenians in this city.

Since Friday there has been a large increase of the patrols of cavalry in Therapia, the suburb of Constantinople, in which are situated the French and English Ambassadors' residences; and in Buyukdere and Pera. This is the Sultan's precautionary measure against future outrages, in compliance with the warning contained in the note from the powers. These troops it is understood, come under the authority of those that are warned they will be responsible if outbreaks involving the destruction of property and loss of life occur. But the troops are at the same time instructed that they are authorized to use their arms in self-defense if they are attacked. These so-called precautionary measures have not improved the situation and have rather served to extend the feeling of terrorism on account of the feeling of doubt as to what secondary and veiled meaning may be hidden behind the letter of the instructions to the troops.

Meantime, the British Relief committee is busy with the work of helping the distressed Armenians. The official Turkish estimate of the number of victims of the massacres in this city is 1,100. Other estimates run pretty much all the way upward from this figure. The official estimate is coupled with the allegation that many of those killed were in reality, Turks, but that they were buried with the Armenians; so their numbers went to swell the number of Armenian victims. This undoubtedly is designed as an apology and explanation of the assertion contained in the note of the powers that the savage hands which murderously attacked the Armenians and pillaged their houses were not accidental gatherings of fanatical people or undirected mobs, but that there was every indication of their special organization and of its being known to, if not directed by, the authorities. In foreign circles here the statement that the Turks were killed along with the Armenians is denied.

The actual number of the victims of the disorders was 5,000 and will probably reach 6,000. The military authorities state that three soldiers were killed and thirty were wounded. The Porte reports state that 170 Mussulmans were wounded.

All Mussulmans who have yet been tried by the extraordinary tribunal appointed to pass judgment on those implicated in the recent massacres have been acquitted of the charges of complicity. The evidence against many of these was deemed by foreign residents here conclusive and the failure to hold them adds to the conviction that the Porte has no intention of complying with the demand of the powers that the culprits shall be brought to punishment. In view of this failure to punish the authors of outrages upon the Armenians the state of terrorism among the Armenians continues unabated and the exodus of these people goes on with no diminution. The appearance of the refugees, many of them in a state of destitution from the hasty nature of their flight and all laboring under extreme apprehensions of a blow likely to fall at any time evokes the universal compassion of the foreigners who see them.

At least it begins to look as if the unspeakable Turk might be brought to answer for his infamous outrages and butcheries. The representatives of the great powers named joined in a note to the Sultan remonstrating in the severest terms against the acquittal of the Armenian murderers in Constantinople whose crimes were committed in the sight of foreign residents and as to whose guilt there was not a shadow of doubt. The Turkish Government seeks to refute the charges by discrediting the witnesses, and evidently relies upon the jealousies among the powers to escape responsibility. In England meanwhile there is a rapidly growing sentiment in favor of forcible measures, and the deposition of the Sultan is openly advocated. A powerful British fleet has moved up within striking distance of Constantinople. Mr. Gladstone has written another ringing letter in which he says:—

"In my opinion, the assassin and not his Mohammedan subjects is the author of the massacres.

From first to last, their atrocity has no parallel in recent history. The concert of Europe is a miserable, disgraceful mockery, and some sovereigns and governments had given direct countenance and support to the assassin. Indeed, the presence of the embassies at Constantinople is in itself substantial countenance of support to him and his guilty proceedings. The coercion, which should long ago have been applied to him, might even now be the means of averting another series of massacres."

Lord Rosebury has also written a strong letter of denunciation, in which he says "the question is not of party but of common Christianity, humanity, and civilization." This is the view of the matter which has been taken all along by humane and civilized people, but the record of England does not encourage the presumption that she will interfere. Her warships moved to their present position once before, and then retired. And yet there will be no end to these atrocities until the Sultan is deposed and the Turks are driven out of Europe.

Mrs. Emily Crawford, writing in the Sunday Times, says:

"A friend who has been admitted to Yildiz Palace for professional reasons says that the Sultan ought to be deposed in his own interests, and that if he is not he will be murdered by the jealous palace minions. He never sleeps in the same bed for two nights running. He believes that emissaries are in the building and his camarilla maintain the delusion. It becomes a grave question whether he is not insane, like his brother Murad (the deposed Sultan), in which case the Sheik Ulslam has the power to depose him. —Chicago Tribune.

Poetry.

Turth Lives On.

Through the rugged march of time,
Marked with mis'ry, sin and crime,
Error stalks with upturned head,
O'er her fields of slaughtered dead;
But beneath her bloody tread
The Truth lives on.

Warriors strong and brave, of yore,
Drenched Judea's plains with gore,
And the hand who hated strife,
In the teachings of whose life
The Truth lives on.

Progress rolls her car along,
Slowly righting human wrong;
Might the right may crucify,
Nothing can her power defy;
Though Herod live and Jesus die,
The Truth lives on.

Burning faggots blazing high,
Gibbets tow'ring to the sky,
Inquisition's rack and prin,
Slavery clanking loud its chain,
Falsehood triumphs still in vain;
The Truth lives on.

Fountains of the deep are stirred,
Mighty thunderbolts unhurtled in word,
Till the living Future's soul,
Bursting forth, will spurn control;
Shouts of freedom heavenward roll,
And Truth lives on.

Every blow at slavery's yoke,
Every true word boldly spoke,
Every holy thought within,
Breaks and robs the power of sin;
Freedom's dawn is ushered in,
And Truth lives on.

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 11.

First Proposition:

Resolved: The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

No sacred writer implies that the Old Testament is of authority to Gentile Christians. Timothy may have had some of the New Testament Scriptures. Jesus and Paul honor the Old. So did I. But not as authority in this day. Ingersoll takes his ammunition from the Old Testament and ran so long as men have the confused idea that they are under both Moses and Christ.

It takes a poet to understand a poet. If you will read the Psalms and not see much that is highly colored and figurative even in the 37th, then your imagination needs toning up, you differ from every Bible student of note. If Elder Wilson seriously proposes to hold the Psalms so strictly literal he will fail to see much of God's truth, he will carry a large error with him which he will get rid of in five minutes after death. He ought to have answered my question. Is Psa. 102: 3 true? He ignores it. "My bones are burned up."

I did not say "Everything in the poetical books is highly colored, is untrue, is figurative." Probably Eld. Wilson will see the process of conversion beautifully expanding in me when I say that some things in the Psalms I believe to be literally true. On account of his haste to defend the Old Testament literalism, "the weak and beggarly elements" of Paul, "the yoke we could not bear" "the shadow of good things," he overlooked some plain literal declaration of the Old Testament. One, indeed, I claimed as equivalent to affirming the immortality of the soul. "Your heart shall live forever." Also, "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me." This is in contrast with the death of the wicked. It is as plain a refutation of the theory that the soul of the righteous dies with the body as can be.

"Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel and afterward receive me to glory." Psa. xxii. 40 and 73. How could it be told more plainly? The negative must now admit that David expected to live right on and David was a prophet through whom the Holy Spirit spoke.

"God created the heavens and the earth." "By him (Christ) were all things created," Col. i. 16. Both God and Christ are said to have created all things. How reconcile these statements? Eld. Wilson's plan is to deny the latter one. The higher unity does not occur to him or else he sees it destroys his theory. The case is this, "God raised him from the dead." "Destroy this temple and I will raise it in three days. But he spoke of the temple of his body." The reader must choose between Eld. Wilson's theory and the words of Jesus. It is evident that if "I" and "it" are two different beings or things, then the theory is in hopeless conflict with our Lord. The negative cannot reconcile these Scriptures which say, God raised Jesus and "I will raise it," "I lay down my life .....I have power to lay it down and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father." Jno. x. 18.

The negative practically says that Jesus said what was not true. He thinks it absolutely foolish of course, for it annihilates the Sadducean doctrine that there is neither angel nor spirit.

The texts concerning creation are reconciled by Eph. iii. 9. God created all things by Jesus Christ. The texts as to who raised the body of Jesus are reconciled by "I came not to do mine own will but the will of him that sent me." Jno. vi. 38 Jesus did it, as he said "I will raise it up." God did it by Jesus. This causes the Scriptures to harmonize, but to any man who regards Christ as Master, to whom the Lord does not have to say anything twice to make it true, it renders belief in the theory of the negative simply impossible.

Man as to his personality is a unit, as to his nature is three fold, body, soul and spirit. Any one of these may be uppermost when speaking of man.

The body is called flesh and it is also called mortal. The immortality we are promised if faithful, is that of the spiritual body. This body is not immortal, no one believes it is. Therefore there is no immortality in Eld. Wilson's theory. For the dead saint is annihilated. Paul, Abel, and all the good have perished, they are destroyed just as completely punished and extinguished as the wicked are and will be in their eternal punishment. When Eld. Wilson dies he will be as though he had never been, all the soul he has is his bodily life, or the spirit he is endowed with is his breath, or the disposition of his mind.

His body will turn to dust and since flesh and blood cannot inherit the eternal kingdom it is evident that Eld. Wilson has no immortality at all. Selah!

The wicked have no promise of inheriting a spiritual body. That is the immortality we are to seek.

Justin Martyr finally said the body is the house of the soul, and the soul the house of the spirit.

Simeon told Mary that a sword should pierce her soul, but while any sword may reach the soul it takes the sword of the Spirit to reach the spirit. Any one who confounds soul and body can never expect to separate between soul and spirit. God's Word does. Heb. iv. 12. The spirit of man is the highest and holiest of man. By it he understands God. By his soul or body he cannot know God. It is the spirit which is born of God. it is in the spirit that we are in the image and likeness of God who is spirit. God is the Father of our spirits, not of our souls nor of our bodies. He is the Creator of our bodies. Jesus can thus be the express image of God. The negative cannot tell how he is any more the image of God than a handsome man would be.

God alone hath immortality dwelling in light unapproachable, but he is not selfish and has creatures who are or have spirits and spirit cannot die. Once in each Testament we have that idea expressed though it is taught in no other places. "Your heart shall live forever." Ps. xxii. "Heart" is the favorite word for mind in the Old Testament. The Apostle Peter says (1 Peter iii. 4) "The hidden man of the heart in the incorruptible apparel of a meek and quiet spirit." This is the text which the negative long has sought and mourned because he found it not.

That hidden man is unseen, we never see a spirit, it has not flesh and bones. The unseen is eternal. Paul tells us this when he writes of the body daily decaying, while the mind is constantly renewed "the things not seen are eternal." 2 Cor. iv. 18.

In the definition of unseen and intangible realities, words belonging to material objects must be refined and carried higher. The air invisible yet felt has been a stepping stone for both soul and spirit. The defect in Eld. Wilson's interpretation is largely attributable to stopping with an inferior meaning than pulling down every higher one to that.

Lexicographers inherit the labors of other students, then spend years in studying meanings.

Spirit according to Furst or Gesenius means (1) air, breath, (2) breath of life, the vital principle, (3) the rational mind or spirit, having (a) emotions, Prov. xxv. 28, (b) mode of thinking and acting, Prov. xviii. 14, (c) will and counsel, Ezra i. 1, (d) intellect, Ex. xxviii. 3, Job xx. 3; xxxii. 8-18; Is. xxix. 24. (4) The Spirit of God. Psa. ii. 12; Isa. lxiii. 11, 14; Gen. i. 2.

In the Greek we have (Liddell and Scott) the following definitions. (1) wind, air; (2) breath, breath of life, (3) breathing, (4) life a living being, (5) a spirit, spiritual being; (6) metaphorical spirit, i. e. feeling. The materialist is constrained to ignore some meanings of the word "spirit" and to look upon God as some kind of refined gas.

GEO. T. SMITH.

Reply No. 11.

Elder Smith, not being able to maintain his position from the Old Testament, still continues his effort to create distrust in the same as a divine authority. He says, "Jesus and Paul honor the Old Testament. So did I. But not as authority in this day." Why don't you now? Are you wiser than Jesus and Paul?

He also says. "No sacred writer implies that it the Old Testament is of authority to Gentile Christians." What was Paul doing when he was before Roman tribunals, "Saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come." Acts xxvi. 22. So effectually did he preach Moses and the prophets as "authority" to those Gentiles that his judge exclaimed, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

What was he doing in Rome, (a Gentile city,) when proclaiming Jesus and the coming kingdom "out of the law of Moses and the prophets?" Acts xxviii. 23.

Says Jesus: "If ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed me."

"If ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" John v. 46, 47.

Jesus implies that it is doubtful about believing his words if they reject Moses' words. I am sure Elder Smith would believe the words Jesus preached concerning conditional immortality, if he only believed Moses and the prophets. 265 quotations from the Old Testament are found in the New Testament.

Says Jesus: "Till heaven and earth pass one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Matt. v. 18. A jot is the smallest letter in the alphabet. So accurately shall everything be fulfilled that not even the smallest letter would be omitted.

Elder Smith quotes: "Weak and beggarly elements," "the yoke he could not bear," "the shadow of good things," to give the impression that they were comments upon the Old Testament Scriptures. That is very wrong. They relate to the Sinaitic covenant which was the bond-master, to bring to Christ. That part is fulfilled, but that does not in the least invalidate the Old Testament, any more than the fulfillment of prophecies in the New Testament, would invalidate its authority.

It is not correct to represent Paul and Abel as having entered "eternal punishment," because they are in a state of unconsciousness, awaiting the resurrection. The natural death common to all, is not the "eternal punishment."

The punishment for personal transgression will be the "second death." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." Rev. xx. 6.

"He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. ii. 11.

Elder Smith says, "it takes a poet to understand a poet," thus intimating that poetic expressions in the Scriptures can only be understood by a poet. When God made a revelation of his will to man he did not give him a dark enigma to be guessed at by poets. As to how much of a poet Elder Smith is, I don't know. I remember in his first paper he did quote a little, one clause of which reads:

"What is death? to be born again, an angel of eternity."

This being true, death must be an important factor, a great boon, and a blessing to those who seek eternal blessedness. Jesus in John iii. shows the kingdom of God can be entered only by being "born again." If death is the new birth, it will be of importance to learn who are worthy of death, for all must desire a visit from the "angel of eternity," that they may be born again." For an answer see Rom. ii. 28-32. They refused to have God in their knowledge. God gave them up unto a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not fitting; being filled with all unrighteousness, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, strife, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, hateful to God, insolent, haughty, boastful, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, unmerciful: who knowing the ordinance of God, that they which practice such things, are worthy of death."

"What is death? to be born again, an angel of eternity."

Now, dear reader, if any of you can fit the above bill, you will be recounted "worthy of death."

"For the wages of sin is (thanatos) death (paganized Christianity says it is "to be born again") but the gift of God is (zoe aionios) everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Eld. Smith does not yet like to yield a argument on the words "I" and "it." Let us look at it again and maybe we will discover that it is a twin-brother of his "angel of eternity." Speaking of the word "I," he says: "Is it a real being?" "It is personal, and abides." "The I has no surface extension or weight." He represents the "I," (spirit) as abiding while the "it," (the body) is dead. Let us take Jesus' testimony. See Rev. i. 18. "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forever more." Speaking of Jesus, Eld. Smith says, "I" means the "spirit," let me apply that idea to the text: "I (the spirit) am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I (the spirit) am alive forevermore. If Eld. Smith's assertion is true, the "I" is "the spirit," then "I" (spirit) "was dead." The "I" (spirit) was in the grave. See Matt. xxvii. 62: "Sir, we remember that deceiver said, while yet alive after three days I (spirit) will rise again." The "I" could not rise again" unless the "I" was buried.

When on the cross he said "I thirst." Was his spirit thirsty?

See John x. 14: "I (the spirit) lay down my life for the sheep."

See John xxi. 3: "Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing." Was Peter's spirit going a fishing?

An interpretation which becomes nonsensical when applied to the Scriptures, we can be well assured is false.

The following clipping will further illustrate the foolishness of the doctrine of an inherent natural, immortal soul:

"Judge Stern of Buffalo has to face the question, "Is the soul immortal?" This comes about through the contest over the will of a Mrs. Buckus who died in January, after bequeathing all she had, one thousand dollars, to Nicholas Bushmun, to be used for masses "for the benefit of my poor soul, and that of my deceased husband." She left seven children unprovided for, and they think they have not been rightly dealt with. Their lawyer holds that a soul has no standing in court,—is an intangible negative, and that there is no competent evidence that either the woman or her husband possessed such a soul; and that if they had it is not proven that they can derive any benefit from the thousand dollars. The decision of the Surrogate is looked for with much interest."

Eld. Smith has at last found a text which he thinks proves the immortality of the spirit. He has twice referred to it in this paper. He says: "No sacred writer implies that the Old Testament is of authority to Gentile Christians," and yet he appeals to that, to prove the immortality of the spirit: yes, only think of it, a part of the "Hymn Book," at that. Psa. xxii. 26: "The meek shall eat and be satisfied: they shall praise the Lord that seek him; your heart shall live forever." It is unfortunate for him that the word "heart," in this text, does not signify "spirit" at all. In some texts the word heart is a distant meaning of the word spirit, but in this text it bears no kinship. It is neither a near or a distant rendering or translation from the original Hebrew words for spirit. They are ob, neshamah, and ruach, but the word "heart" in this passage, is a translation from another word. Neither is it a translation from nedibah, neshamah, or nephesh, from which the word soul is translated. Hence the word "heart" in Psa. xxii. 26, is neither soul nor spirit it not being derived from those words. If it did signify either soul or spirit it would prove nothing, because the phrase: "Shall live forever," is in the future tense. The gift of eternal life is conditional, to be obtained by faith and obedience.

In verse 20 of the same chapter, it says: "Deliver my soul from the sword." In verse 29, it says: "None can keep alive his own soul."

These words are from nephesh, the common Hebrew word for soul. Eld. Smith can't find much immortality in this chapter surely.

Eld. Smith has evidently yielded up the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, for he says: "The soul as connected with the earthly body, being allied with the animal world can die."

No one claims that man has two souls. "The soul as connected with the earthly body," is the soul that has been heretofore in dispute between Eld Smith and myself, he claiming that it cannot die, and myself taking the negative. Read carefully the above quotation from Eld. Smith which I have placed in italics, and you will find it as plain as words can put it: "The soul as connected with the earthly body," "can die."

Eld. Smith in referring to the declaration in Eccl. iii. 19, 20. "that a man hath no preeminence over a beast," in order to bring discredit upon that portion of God's Word, says: "Did any beast ever sit on an ivory throne, and behold the glory of God as Solomon did?" It requires but little perception to see that the matter of preeminence relates not to life, but solely to the condition of death. "For that which befalleth men, befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (Hebrew-ruah, spirit or breath) so that man hath no preeminence over a beast, for all is vanity."

All go unto one place: all are of the dust and all turn to dust again. In life he had a preeminence, and in the resurrection all obedient gospel believers will be invested with immortality, and rank with God's beloved Son. But in death he hath no preeminence over a beast; nature teaches that much, Eld. Smith. "Study nature."

He next quotes Solomon's question: "Who knoweth the spirit (ruah) of man that goeth upward, and the spirit (ruah-breath) of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" Who knoweth? Do you Eld. Smith? "They have all one breath" (ruah—spirit) can you tell whether it goes in opposite directions or not? The text shows that both have the same kind of spirit.

In a work recently published in describing the soul the writer says: "The soul, what is it? It is a simple substance, without form or parts. It has no outside, no inside, no length, no breadth: the body may be blown into a thousand parts, and the soul remain unhurt. Let him who can, give a better definition of nothing."

This harmonizes with Eld. Smith's definition; "it has neither extension, surface, nor weight."

Place my article before you, and in your mind take away the "outside," "inside," "length," "breadth," or in other words the "extension," "surface," and "weight," and what would be left of the article in your mind? Every one must answer nothing. That is a sum in subtraction in which nothing is left as a result. Immaterialists are the most complete annihilationists there are in this world. My mind craves a real existence, where I may know that I am the same individual that previously existed, made immortal. I am sure I could not be the same person if I must be deprived of "outside," "inside," "length," "breath, or "weight," but be simply reduced to a mere nothing with not even the reality of wind. Dear readers, does that kind of an existence satisfy your longings? Does it appear to your mind as being sensible? I am sure it is not Scriptural. Pin your faith to the Holy Scriptures and you will find something real, joyous, grand, and satisfying to the loftiest conceptions of the mind. Relegate the unreal, ghastly, visionary, gaseous, fantastic visions of minds who revel in etherial fancies to the source from which they originated, and swear an unswerving loyality to the good old Book.

Dear Restitution:

In the Editorial Column of Aug. 19 there is an urgent appeal to write. I have often wished I could write something, that would encourage some poor struggling soul to a nobler effort to win the prize. There may be some dear one with whom I have been permitted to meet in former years, who would be glad to know that "I still press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" That the precious promises of God's Holy Word, are the beacon lights that cheer my lonely heart and give me faith and hope.

Dear ones, these are momentous times. Discouragements and disappointments are on every hand. "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth." I believe the time of trouble spoken of by Daniel is even at the door. Truly the events which were to be even to the time of the end are being fulfilled in our midst. Never in the history of the world was there a time when so many were running to and fro and knowledge being increased as there is now. Learned students of political economy, or silver tongued orators, whose magnetic strains of rhetoric sway the people. Men of different party prejudices or political faith are being carried from one end of the country to the other with the rapidity of the limited express, and from the platform of the train or the rostrums of our towns or cities are teaching the masses thoughts which cost them months of ardent toil. "Knowledge is being increased" yet it is but a knowledge of this wicked world." "The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand." Yes, blessed be his name, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

Paul tells us in 1 Cor. ii. 9. "But it is written, eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." No dear ones the world does not know these things. 10 th verse. "But God hath revealed them unto us by his spirit." 12 verse. "Now we have received not the spirit of the world but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God, which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teaches, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth." Jeremiah xvii. 5-9, we read, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord, for he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh, but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited." But how different are God's children. "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord and whose hope the Lord is, for he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green," and shall not be careful in the year of drouth, neither shall cease from yielding fruit."

May the Lord help us in these trying times to put our trust in him, that we may not be ashamed, but that we may lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh. Your Bro. in hope.

Report of Meeting.

Dear Restitution:

Again we have had the privilege of meeting with those of like faith at Oneida, Wash.

We took the evening boat from Portland, and morning found us nearly a hundred miles from home.

As we looked out upon the waters of the Columbia at this early hour of the morning the view was interesting indeed. The many fishermen in their boats drawing in their nets at the close of their nights work and a little later as we neared Astoria looking toward the ocean we see hundreds of white sailed fishing boats homeward bound.

The extent of the fishing industry on the Columbia river is surprising.

Changing boats at Astoria we crossed the river which is eight miles in width here, and soon was at the home of Bro. Smalley where we received a hearty welcome.

During the days that followed we enjoyed a much needed rest.

Many were the pleasant hours spent in talking of our common hope.

On Sunday we crossed the Bay and talked to a fair audience. We also preached at the home of Bro. Upton at Oneida during our visit there.

Aug. 5, we buried in baptism five believing ones.

We pray that the Lord may bless them in the Christian race and strengthen them in hours of trouble or of temptation.

May they ever walk in the light of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus and finally be gathered into his everlasting kingdom. Pray for them brethren.

Hesaias. (Isa. C. V.) Chap. 57.

1. See how the justified One hath perished, and no one taketh it to heart; And justified ones are being taken away, and no one heedeth it. From the face of iniquity though hath the justified one been taken.

2. His burial will be in peace: He hath been taken away from the midst of it. (iniquity).

3. And do ye gather together here, ye transgressed, g sons, yessed of adulterers and a harlot.

4. In what have ye luxuriated, and against whom have ye opened your mouth? Are ye not offspring of loss a transgressing seed?

5. Ye who are calling on idols beneath shady trees, who are slaughtering children in the ravines between the rocks?

6. That is thy portion, this thy lot. And unto those hast thou been pouring out libations and unto these hast thou offered sacrifices: on account of these things then shall I not have become wrathful?

7. Upon a high and uplifted mountain there is my couch, and there hast thou offered thy sacrifices;

8. And behind the posts of thy door hast thou placed thy memorial-offerings: Hast thou thought that if thou shouldst stand away from me, then will have something more? Thou hast loved those who sleep with thee.

9. And thou hast multiplied thy fornication with them, and thou hast made those far from thee many, and hast sent elders beyond thy borders, and thou hast been humbled even unto hades.

10. In thy many ways thou hast toiled wearily, and hast not said, I will stop, strong within because thou hast done these things: Therefore hast thou not besought me.

11. Out of respect for whom hast thou feared and lied to me and not remembered, nor taken me into thy thought nor into thy heart? And though I saw thee I looked on one side and thou didst not fear me.

12. And I am going to declare thy righteousness and thy evil things that will not profit thee.

13. Whenever thou shalt call for help, may they have taken thee away in thy tribulation: For all these a zephyr will take and a cyclone will bear them away; but those who hold to me will acquire on earth, and will inherit my sacred mountain:

14. And they will say, Cleanse ways from off the face of it and take away obstacles from the way of my laity.

15. Thus saith the Most High who dwelleth forever among high ones sanctified among sanctified ones his name, a Most High who pursueth in sanctified places, and who giveth courage to the dispirited, and who giveth life to the contrite in heart:

16. Not forever am I going to requite you nor shall I always have been wrathful with you. For spirit will come forth from me and I created every breath.

17. Because of sin I have made him sorrow somewhat briefly, and I smote him and turned away my face from him, and he became sorrowful and went his way with down-cast visage on his ways.

18. His ways have I seen and I have healed and consoled him, and given unto him true consolation, namely peace upon peace to those afar off and to those who are nigh. And the Lord hath said, I shall heal them.

20. But the unjust will have been tossed like waves and will not be able to rest.

21. There is no greeting for the irreverent, hath God said.

Chapter 58.

1. Call for help with strength, and spare not; like a trumpet mayest thou have lifted up thy voice; and mayest thou have declared unto my laity their sins, and unto the house of Jacoob their transgressions.

2. Me do they seek day after day and they long to comprehend my ways, like a laity that hath done righteousness and hath not forsaken their God's judicial-way; They are asking me now for a right judicial-proceddre and they long to draw nigh unto God.

3. Saying, Why is it that we have fasted and thou hast not seen it? That we have humbled our souls and thou hast not known it? It is because in the days of your fasts ye are finding your own desires, and goading on all those beneath your hands.

4. If ye are fasting for crises and contentions, and smiting the lowly with blows, why is it at all that ye are fasting for me, as today your voice hath been heard with clamor?

5. Not this sort of a fast have I chosen, and day for a man to humble his soul; nor shalt thou bow thy neck like a hinge, and strew sack-cloth and ashes beneath thee; nor in this wise shall a fast be acceptable.

6. No, no, such a fast have I not chosen, saith the Lord; but do thou loose every bond of iniquity; do thou sunder knots of compulsory agreements; do thou send away in release the broken down; and do annul every unjust contract;

7. Break thy bread for the needy, and conduct roofless beggars into thy house: If thou shalt see a naked one, clothe him, and thou shalt not overlook any one of the household of thy seed.

8. Then will thy morning light break forth, and thy healings rise quickly, and thy righteousness go its way on before thee and the glory of God environ thee.

9. Then will thou call for help, and God will hearken unto thee; whilst thou art yet talking he will say, Lo, I am present: If thou take away bondage from thee and the stretching forth of the hand (for bribes probably meant) and the spoken word of murmuring;

10. And shalt give from thy soul thy bread to a hungry one, and shalt fill a humbled soul: Then will the light arise in the darkness for thee, and thy darkness will be as midday;

11. And thy God will be with thee constantly; And thou will have been filled even as thy soul longeth, and thy bones will have waxed fat, and they will be like a garden saturated with moisture, and like a fountain which hath not failed of water.

12. And thy age-lasting wastes places will have been built up, and thy foundations will be age-lasting foundations unto generations of generations: and thou wilt have been called a building of enclosures and thy paths in the midst of resting-places.

13. If thou shalt turn away thy foot from the sabbatic rites of doing thine own desires on the sacred day, and shalt call the sabbatic-rites luxurious that are sacred to God, shalt not take thy foot unto work, nor talk a word in wrath from out thy mouth,

14. And shalt be trusting in the Lord he will even conduct thee unto the good things of the earth, and will morsel out to thee the inheritance of Jakoob thy father: For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken these things.

Chapter 59.

1. Is not the hand of the Lord strong enough to save? or hath his ear become heavy so as not to hear?

2. No, but your sins are standing between you and God, and because of your sins hath he turned away his face from you so as not to show you mercy.

3. For your hands have become polluted with blood, and your fingers with sins, and your lips have talked transgressions, and your tongue is practising iniquity.

4. No one talketh right things nor is there a true judicial procedure; They have trusted in inutilities and they talk vain things, because they conceive pain and bring forth transgression.

5. Eggs of asps have they broken, and a spider's web do they weave; and the one who is destined to eat their eggs, hath broken a shell and found in it a basilisk:

6. Their web will not be for an outer-garment, nor shall they clothe themselves from their works: For their works are works of transgression;

7. And their feet run to wickedness; they are swift to shed blood; and their thoughts are thoughts of murders; ruin and wretchedness are in their ways;

8. And a way of peace have they not known, and there is no judicial-procedure in their ways: For their paths are perverse which they are going through and they have not known peace.

9. Therefore hath the judicial-procedure (or judicial-way) stood away from them and righteousness cannot overtake them (or lay hold of them); While they have waited for light darkness hath occurred to them: while they waited its gleam, in untimely fats have they walked.

10. They will grope like blind men for a wall, and as those who have no eyes will they grope; and they will fall at midday as at midnight; like those condemned to die will they sigh;

11. Like a bear and like a dove will they go their way together; We have awaited judicial-proceedure and there is no salvation; It hath stood far away from us;

12. For our transgression is much in thy sight, and our sins withstand us. For our transgressions are in us, and our iniquities we aware of.

13. We have been irreverent and we have lied, and we have turned away from after our God. We have talked unjust things and we have distorted. We have conceived and meditated from our heart unjust words.

14. And we have stood away from following the judicial-way; and righteousness hath stood afar off; Because the truth hath been lavishly wasted in their ways, and through uprightness they have not been able to go.

15. And the truth hath been taken away, and they have changed (translated) the thought of how to understand: and the Lord saw and it did not please him, because there was no judicial-proceedure.

16. And he saw and there was no man (that was a man) and he contemplated and there was no one to intervene and he wended off for there with his arm and with his act of mercy he stayed them up for himself.

17. And he endued himself with righteousness as with a breast-plate, and he put on a helmet of salvation upon his head, and he threw about him an outer-garment of nopital and his cloak.

18. Like one who is about to repay reproach to one's adversaries.

19. And those from the West will have feared his name, and those from the rising of the sun his renowned name; For wrath from the Lord will come like a violent river: With anger will it come.

20. And the Deliverer will come for the sake of Sion, and will turn away irreverence from Jakoob:

21. And this for them is the covenant from me, hath the Lord said: My spirit is it that is upon thee, and the ornacular words which I have given into thy mouth, shall not fail from out thy mouth, and from out the mouth of thy seed; For the Lord hath spoken from that now even forever.

Comment.

The 57th chapter opens with instructed consolation for "the justified" not "the righteous." For there are no righteous from the Scriptural standpoint, old or new. Even the Christ is spoken of "the justified one" because though righteous he took upon himself the sins of the whole human race, and therefore was condemned and delivered up to the death-penalty of sin. His resurrection is his vindication and justification.

Following the consolation to "the justified," comes God's arraignment of idolatry with its folly, and awful consequences, under the figure of spiritual adultery and harlotry. Then comes the statement of the 16th verse "not forever am I going to requite you nor shall I always have been wrathful with you. For spirit will come forth from me and I created every breath."

Read God's ornacular thought of the punishment for sin in the 17th verse: "Because of sin I have made him sorrow somewhat briefly." Then read in the 18th verse what God says will follow this "somewhat briefly" and then see if this agrees with "the eternal torment" of so-called theology.

Note the difference of reading of the 21st verse when compared with the C. V. and R. V.

The 58th chapter opens with an exhortation to the herald of the gospel to lift up a voice like a trumpet, first with a denunciation of the sins and transgressions of his laity, and then with specific instruction as to misdirected zeal and false worship however sincere. A true longing desire as here recognized, will not suffice.

There must be intelligent judgment and discrimination. God's way is a judicial-way as here emphasized, and man's progress toward righteousness if progress there be must be along the royal highway of judicial-proceedure. How slowly the Christian world has been learning this great lesson. The law of equity must become the law of nations as well as individuals, and mercy towards oneself begins in mercy towards others, as here so plainly brought out.

All differences of opinion should be settled with judicial-proceedure and not with "clamor" and "the wager of battle."

Read the sixth verse for an a, b, c lesson in righteousness, and then when you have practised its teaching take the 7th for a post-graduate course.

After you have graduated from this, then "stand in God's hypostases" and apprehend in some measure God's idea of poetry as exemplified in the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th verses—figurative language it is true, but O what facts and consummate realities are thus presented to our eye of faith.

The 59th chapter tells us why God is so near us and yet so far removed from us. "Your sins are standing between you and God. How could the inutility of sin be more emphatically stated than it is in the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th verses? The 9th, 10th and 11th verses give the consequences of this inutile pursuit after "peace." The 12th and 13th verses constitute a true confession of sin. The 15th verse is in brief the recorded history of God's people in the past and their consequent loss.

The 16th, 17th and 18th verses are the divine record and revelation of God's own intervention to save. The 19th, 20th and 21st is the prophecy in epitome of its glorious fulfillment yet to be realized in its greatest issues.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Reverence," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Reverence."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Poetry.

Am I Nearer Home Tonight?

Sinks the sun and fades the light,
Evening darkness into night,
Deeper shadows gather fast,
And another day is past,
And another record made,
Nevermore to change or fade
Till the Book shall be unsealed,
When the judgment is revealed.
Ere I give myself to rest
Let me make this solemn quest:
Have the hours that winged their flight
Since the dawning of the day,
Sped me on my homeward way?
Am I nearer home to-night?

Immortality of the Soul.

In paper No. 8, of the Smith and Wilson discussion, Elder Smith says, "the testimony of Draper Fiske, Huxley and Spencer is all the stronger because these men are unbelievers with a decided prejudice which would lead them to deny this Scriptural teaching if they could." In the first place I cannot see that the testimony derived from these scientists if accepted would throw much light on the subject under discussion. Their trumpets give a rather uncertain sound. But are they prejudiced against the dogma of the immortality of the soul? I think not. Most if not all of them have a strong leaning towards a belief in a future life for man as their quoted utterances plainly show.

They seem to me to be trying to find some evidence independent of a revelation from the Creator on which to found such a hope. But what can they learn from the study of the human organism either from a physiological or psychological standpoint of the connection between mind and matter? We know that men think, we know that in order to think they must have living active brains. We know that plants grow we know that certain conditions are necessary to their growth. In both cases we reach a point beyond which we cannot go. (See in paper No. 2, Tyndall as quoted by Elder Smith). One thing is certain however that any and all legitimate conclusions drawn from the relation between mind and brain apply with equal force to the lower animals for though their mental operations are inferior to those of man, they do think, that they have memory and reason from cause to effect we cannot deny, and in those animals that have the largest brains in proportion to the weight of the animal we find greatest manifestations of intelligence. (Elder Smith speaks of the Elephant having a larger brain than man, relatively it is not larger.) Animals not only have intelligence, but there is abundant evidence that the emotional nature obtains in their manifestations of love, hate and friendship and are not wanting among them.

If therefore there is an intelligence outside of, and independent of the organism in man's case, so also must there be in the case of the lower animals.

Remember I am considering the value of scientific research in this matter. If God has said there is a soul in man that survives the death of the body and is peculiar to man? I humbly bow to his dictum, but has he? As Elder Wilson has shown, man's mental manifestations are dependent upon and governed by the kind and condition of his brain.

They certainly do depend on the amount, quality and condition of his brain. We sometimes call those men who manifest more than ordinary mental power and capacity, brainy men.

In order to clear thinking a person must have brain substance in nominal amount of good quality and sound as to condition. The brain is an organ of diverse structure and diverse function. It is the function of only a part of it to evolve thought.

This explains how it may happen that as Dr. Lionel Beale says as quoted by Elder Smith in No. 8, "a considerable part of the brain matter may be damaged and yet the mind remain in integrity." No physiologist will deny this but, he knows at the same time, that there is a part of the brain which if damaged the mind will not retain its integrity, therefore this fact has no weight whatever as showing that some intelligence short from the brain acts upon it.

Two brains may be of equal weight, but one may have more than the other of thought evolving tissue and may therefore far exceed the other in its ability to think and reason, or if they did not differ in this regard one might be in a healthier and more active condition than the other and thinking would be influenced accordingly. Some time ago in conversation with a clergyman, I urged this point. He said "the brain is the tool with which the soul works." I said then why is it that some souls act so like saint just because their tool gets a little out of order? As in the case of a crazy man for instance? He replied that he did not know. If the soul is independent of the brain except as a medium of manifestation and communication how about responsibility.

But to return to the subject of prejudice with which we began. I think there is very little prejudice in any quarter against the dogma of man's immortality. I know of no other doctrine that is so universally believed as this. Henry Ward Beecher many years ago speaking of this doctrine said of "if that it was Semper Ubique Ab Omnibus" though he frankly confessed that it was not taught in the Scriptures. Many people who do not believe the Scriptures to be a revelation from God to man some how cling to a belief in a soul that survives the death of the body. I once heard a judge declaiming against the New Testament and against the characters of Christ and his apostles. He called them communists and other bad names. It occurred to me to ask this learned? Judge the question, Do you believe in the immortality of the soul? He replied certainly I do. And did time and space permit I could give other examples in which this belief obtains in the minds of those that discard the Bible altogether.

Most believers in the Bible, as the Word of God, never having investigated the subject for themselves, believe it so teaches and are surprised when told that expressions like immortal soul, never-dying spirit, id genus omni so common in the religious literature of this time, are not found in it, but how those discarding the Bible maintain such a belief affords a curious phase of human reasoning or rather the blind acceptance of a tradition without reason. To my mind the fact is significant though why significant I have not time now to explain. The only evidences adduced in support of the belief that I know of is founded on man's desire for life and is well expressed by Shakespeare who seems to have correct notions as to the source from which it eminated. "It must be so. Plato thou reasonest well. Else why this pleasing hope, this fond desire, This longing after immortality. Or whence this secret dread and inward horror, of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul back on itself and startles at destruction." But this is not proof. God has, we grant, implanted in man a desire for life and that desire need not go unsatisfied. He has provided a way whereby life, everlasting life may be attained; but it must be in his own appointed way. All mortals are possible immortals but all mortals will not attain to immortality.

This is a question of veracity between God and satan, and most of the human family are arrayed on the side of the latter. The just conflict of declaration occurred in the Garden of Eden. "In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die. Ye shall not surely die." The apostle Paul warned the church in his day, against this heresy, "I fear lest, by my means as the serpent beguiled Eve by his subtility, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ."

And again, "He that believeth not God hath made him a liar because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that the Son hath life. (The eternal life) and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

Any one therefore claiming to have a future unending life independent of God's Son questions God's veracity.

There are also prophecies of this heresy in the Old Testament. Because with lies we have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and you have strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life. What has been more saddening to the hearts of humane and kind-hearted men than the doctrine of eternal life in sin and misery or the now generally repudiated doctrine of eternal suffering in hell-fire which grew out of it, and what is better calculated to make men careless of the future than to assure them that they are immortal. Believing it, they feel sure of life, and the doctrine of eternal torment having been eliminated, they are willing to take their chances as to the conditions under which that life is to be enjoyed or endured, and therefore do not trouble themselves about the matter. I know many such.

Again, "Because ye have said, we have made a covenant with death and with hell (the grave) we are at agreement when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves. We have made an covenant with death and with the grave. We are at agreement. That is, we have nothing to fear from them. Joseph Cook says, "We don't die, we only slough off. The grave only gets the slough, and who cares for the slough." But hear what God says to the next verse. "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone (the Son again) a precious corner stone, a sure foundation. He that believeth (in him) shall not make haste. Your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell (grave) shall not stand. Only those who are built on this foundation, the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus the Christ himself being the Chief Corner Stone, have a promise of eternal life.

J. T. SMITH.

Perfected Through Suffering.

Yes, we read that the Savior was made perfect through suffering. Think you the cross was light? No indeed! Take for instance the strong man who is scarcely ever sick and let his frame be racked with pain, for a few hours, and where is he? Helpless as a little child. Take the cheerful, healthy, patient ones, and a few weeks sickness lead to fretfulness. Herein is the cross of which the Brother speaks. It is worn with meekness by a very few. People naturally shrink from suffering, although our pillow be smoothed by fair young hands, yet, we often murmur, what is the import of all this? Simply, "bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." And in another place it says every man must bear his own burden." Plain enough isn't it, one burden every one must bear. Every soul must have one burden, they alone can bear it. But the Scripture saith, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Precious promise. Who would not take up his cross daily and follow the Just One. Some one and I had a little talk over that very passage. They thinking the word daily was not there, and I not knowing just where it was, could not say for certain it was there. To be able to rightly divide the Word of Truth is something that must be acquired by the followers of Christ. Else when people assail the truth it will suffer at our hands. Many, I am told see our frailties and stay out of the fold. May the Just One forgive our shortcomings, and help such to realize every one has his own burden to bear, but it is much lighter to bear when we consider the Savior was tempted on all points as we are, and is touched by the feeling of our infirmities. Yes, we have a Savior who is certainly pitiful, of tender mercies else how could we raise our eyes to heaven when we have sinned, and say, "Father forgive us," which we certainly often need to. Many many seem so sure the broad road wherein many go is right. The little flock has become at best a nuisance in some places. But blessed be the name of the Lord who hath left these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes.

In sincerity.

The Perfect Law.

"But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deeds." But what is this perfect law of liberty? The Apostle James says: "If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scriptures, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well."

This perfect law must emanate from him who is perfection, even from God, who is the God of love. Then we conclude that love is God's great Royal Law written in the heart of all his children? Can there be an end or limit to love? Is it not the great law of the universe? Is it not above all other laws? Supreme love to God and man would supersede all other laws. Let us see what the great Teacher has said about love, "Master which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. This is my commandment that ye love one another, as I have loved you. If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my father's commandments and abide in his love."

Paul addresses up to us Gentiles, and says: "For brethren ye have been called into liberty (the perfect law of liberty of course) only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another, for all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."

Love will be the all-prevailing sentiment in the soon coming kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ and should be now with his people. How many of us in the midst of cares, necessities, and perplexities of this life can say with Paul: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose?"

D. C. & JANE SATTERLEE.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

I wish to define my position in regard to the Sonship of Christ, as I find that many are saying that I believe him to be the son of Joseph. I would not care for others opinions so much, did I not see that such false impressions are hurting the cause here in Iowa. For instance, I read the letter in THE RESTITUTION from Bro. W. P. Baker in regard to having the tent go to his city, he fearing that so many of our Evangelists denied the divinity of Jesus' birth, that such an one might go there, so I wish to say that there is not an Evangelist connected with our Iowa Conference that does so believe, or preach, and I have never believed it, on the contrary I do believe that Jesus the Christ was and is the only begotten Son of God, and that he must be such in order to have authority to seal our adoption into the God-family, being made children of God by adoption, heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. I believe that by the willing of God, or by his Holy Spirit-power Christ was made of a woman, made under the law to let the unconditional redemption of the whole human family from the Adamic death, as that is the universal penalty pronounced upon the whole human race, as well as the Prophet, Teacher who has brought life and immortality to light, and taught mankind how to escape the second death. There are some who hold to this misunderstood position, but it is never mentioned in our conferences, or by our evangelists. As all consider that the good news of the coming kingdom, and the things pertaining thereto, and the necessity of a pure life of faith in order for a part in it, is what is necessary for salvation.

Higher Criticism a Failure.

One fact clearly brought out in the Aberdeen inquiry is the popularity among the divinity students of the late Robertson Smith's Biblical views. In the intellectual, as in other spheres, fashion counts for much. Now many of the students and advanced clerics who pin their faith to the higher criticism understand the nature of the foundation of the new theory? Many of them talk and write as if the views which Robertson Smith imported from Germany had established themselves on a scientific basis, whereas it is becoming evident that much of the foundation is composed of sand. In order to judge of the work of the higher critics we must find at the outset what they set themselves to do. They set themselves to reconstruct the Bible according to what they considered to be the demands of historic evolution. Now, one of the accepted views of historical criticism when the pioneers of the new criticism began to write was that what was called the literary age, the age of libraries, of historical writing was comparatively recent. In harmony with this we find Sir George Cornewall Lewis, in writing the history of Rome, making a start with the capture of the city by the Gauls: and Sir George Cox begins his history of Greece with the time of Solon. Beyond that all was dismissed as chaos and given over to ignorance, myth and legend. Statements, which professed to be accurate, were rejected as entirely untrustworthy, on then prior ground that no solid footing was possible in a world presided over by incoherent tradition. Thus Havet, in treating of the history of Israel, declares that till we come to the Babylonian Exile there is little worthy of belief. To this historic canon the Pentateuch was a stumbling block. The problem before Wellhausen, Kuenen, and their followers was to account for the production of those books in what was supposed to be an age of primitive barbarism. To them the idea that they could be historical in the sense of dealing with contemporaneous facts, not to mention the supernatural side of the question, was preposterous. Wellhausen did what the historians of Greece and Rome did—he drew a hard and fast line beyond which all was treated as mythical. The patriarchs were no longer individuals, but simply corruptions of tribal names. The so-called historical record of Genesis was due to the priestly class who compiled the narrative with a view to giving a supernatural framework and halo to the Levitical and Deuteronomic codes. In brief, no historical footing was said to be possible till we come to the departure of the Children of Israel from Egypt. The existence of Moses is grudgingly conceded, but it is confidently denied that he wrote, or could have written, the Pentateuch, on the ground that for that task a cultured and literary class was a necessity. In all this we have another evidence of the facility with which German thinkers evolve camels from their inner consciousness. Hegel resisted the Newtonian theory because it did not square with his speculative views, and in like manner the higher critics can only maintain their theory by rejecting the light thrown on the subject by archæology. The discoveries in Ancient Babylon prove conclusively that long before Israel entered Egypt it had been in contact with a highly complex civilization under circumstances which render the composition of Genesis quite natural. Moreover, the explorations have verified in a wonderful way many of the allusions made to outside history by the writer of Genesis. Genesis is clearly not the fictional product of the Exile, but an ancient document written many thousand years ago when ancient civilization flourished, when libraries abounded, and when writing was well known and practiced. So far as Genesis is concerned the higher criticism is a total failure. It is not much more successful in dealing with the journeying in the wilderness. The idea that the narrative part of the wilderness record was composed by the priests of the Exile period in order to give an air of reality and sanction to the codes is absurd in face of the curious correspondence between the Biblical record and the discoveries of Archæologists in Palestine. It should not be forgotten, however, that the establishment of the historical accuracy of the Pentateuch does not prove it to be a divine revelation. But one thing Archæology has done, it has shattered the argument of the higher critics, namely, that the Pentateuchal codes could not have been revealed and preserved during the wilderness period because of the absence of a literary class skilled in the art of writing. It needs more credulity to believe that the Pentateuch is mainly a fictional narrative fabricated by designing priests of the Exile period than to believe that the books were written, if not by Moses, at least by some who was in touch with contemporary history.—Edinburgh Evening News.

Sacredness of the Divine Name.

The Rev. Dr. Wise, President of the Hebrew Union College at Cincinnati, has given his view of the ancient Jewish rendering of the name of the Deity. He says that the term "Jehovah," the ineffable tetragrammaton, is never pronounced by any Israelites. They use the word "Adonoi," which signifies "the Lord." The translators of the Bible followed this custom rendering the word "Jehovah" "Lord." In ancient times the Pharisees applied the tetragrammaton by Shem: they they used "Shemo," which is also Biblical, as the sacred name, and this name is yet retained, to some extent, among the Jews. But it would appear from passages in the Psalms that Adonoi, or Lord, for Jehovah was more ancient even than the times of the Pharisees. It thus occurs eight times in Psalms lxxxiv. It also appears in the book of Exodus, where "Jehovah" had been used in the original Hebrew. This substitution would seem to be older than any other, and it is yet common among all Jews.

Dr. wise says he has found that the ancient translations testify in favor of "Adonoi."

Looking at the English translation of the Old Testament it will be found that the name Jehovah appears in the books of Genesis, Exodus, Judges, the Psalms, and Isaiah. It is not in the New Testament.

That They may all be One.

It is all nonsense, if not blasphemy, to talk about "taking the world for Christ," as long as the following last intercessory prayer of the Son of God is impiously disregarded: "Neither pray I for these (apostles) alone, but for them also who believe on me through their word, that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou hast given me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me," (Jno. xvii. 20–23.)

Here it is given out by the Lord Jesus Christ, once for all and absolutely, that it is only through the words of the apostles that the world can be saved, and through these words that unity of hearts can be secured. The mangrel prayers of the sectarian world, and the vain babblings of "Christian Endeavorers"—with whom sentiment takes the place of the words of the apostles—may serve to build up a great social and political organization, but which must utterly fail in responding to the prayer of Christ for divine unity.—The Christian Leader.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

M. JOBLIN, Corresponding Editor.

PLYMOUTH, IND. SEPTEMBER 23, 1896.

FIVE Wednesdays this month. No paper next week.

THE Argos meeting has come and gone. It is hoped that good will result from the effort put forth. Several from other places attended, new acquaintances were formed and all in all it was "good to be there." Further report will be given by the secretary.

THE Vice Chancellor of Oxford University says the meaning of the words, "Buried with him by baptism," will be more clearly brought out if we recall the picture of baptism in the apostolic age, when the rite was performed by immersion, and the passing of the Israelites through the cloud and the sea, and even the deluge seemed no inappropriate type of its waters. "By whom has all this been changed?"

"WHAT the seal is upon the lease or deed, the miracle is upon the Bible, and when people say, "would it not be better to have miracles repented?" We answer, "If you once place your signature and the impression of your seal upon a deed or lease, lawyers would not think of asking you to come back and repeat it once a year, or once in six years, or twenty years. Once done it lasts. So miracles once done as an appendage to the document, are never exhausted."

IT has been said that the Christian graces, like perfumes, the more they are pressed by affliction, the sweeter they smell; or like the stars, they appear best in the darkness of trouble; or like the snow, though cold and uncomfortable, yet it warms and nourishes the earth in winter: so that the believer is nourished in the winter of affliction. Worldly joys end in sorrow, but (holy sorrows end in joy; and as it some times rains when the sun shines, so there is frequently joy in the saint's heart when there are tears in his eyes.

"SON as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee," is the common reading of Is. lxii. 5. The translation of Bishop Lowth seems to rescue this splendid prophesy from obscurity. It is, "So shall thy Restorer marry thee." But the Hebrew Christian Witness says that the original word rendered "thy sons" in one case, and Restorer in the other, only needs to be properly pointed and pronounced, to become "Thy Builder," for it is the same word used in Gen. ii. 22. With reference to the formation of woman out of man. "And the Lord God builded the rib which he had taken from Adam into a woman."

IT has been pertinently asked, "If the Koran does not contain Mohammed's words, and does not represent his sentiment, of what virtue is it as an exposition of Mohammedanism? And if the Bible does not utter the words of God;—and if it does not represent his mind, of what use is it as a revelation from God? And what becomes of his love and truth, if he could give to his poor blind creatures a volume professing to come from himself, and yet wanting in that most essential of all things in authorship—a true statement of facts, and an accurate representation of the Author's mind?"

THE serpent doctrine was restated by Horace Mann, thus: One of the grandest and most precious doctrines of the Christian religion is the doctrine of human immortality. The meaning of this doctrine is, that there is something in us all, which fire cannot consume, nor waters drown, nor death assail; that each one of us has an individuality, an identity, a personality, which is unsusceptible of decay, impregnable to corruption, with no possibility of perishing." "Vain presumptous man." Did you never read that "the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be as stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch?" When neither root nor branch is left, where is your fire-proof something?

THE Church in Cleveland again rejoices. On Sunday Sept. 7, Sister Hickox, for some years connected with the Methodist Body was assisted in putting on the sin-covering name of Jesus, and went on her way rejoicing. It always gladdens us to witness the obedience of faith; but particularly is this so when a brother obtains a sister, wife, and a husband—brother is secured by a sister. Bro. Hickox received the truth in the love of it not many months ago, and we are glad to know that his newly found faith and hope, and rest and peace have commended the truth as it is in Jesus to her. It was remarked by a brother, on receiving a husband and a wife into the Body, that an addition of one to a family was considered a time of rejoicing, and that twins should be a still greater source of joy; and reminded us that only a few days ago, when Sister Minor, her daughter, and daughter-in-law were born of water, we rejoiced over triplets. May all these sweet babes in Christ prove faithful to the end, we pray.

Question Drawer.

"Bro. Joblin, please be kind enough to explain what Jesus means in Matt. x. 23, when he says, "The Son of Man shall come before the apostles should have gone over the cities of Israel preaching the gospel." G. G.

This passage has been a great puzzle to the commentators, we should say judging by the great variety of views published by them. Some affirming that it refers to the final victory of the cause of Christ; (Baumgarten) the destruction of Jerusalem, (Michaelis) the out-pouring of the spirit; (Calvin) the help shall have been afforded by the Son of Man: (Chrysostom) the second coming of Christ; (Meyer) ye shall not have travelled over the cities of Israel, preaching the gospel before the Son of Man is revealed by his resurrection: (Lightfoot) the coming of the Son of Man has a fixed doctrinal sense, here referring immediately to the crisis of Israel's history as a visible kingdom of God, when Christ was to come and judge it; (Jamison, Fausset and Brown). The above seems to be the sum of all the learned doctors can think to be meaning of this passage; and to us it is anything but satisfactory. And what we have to offer ourself is an opinion, and nothing more. It is this: That the 23rd verse at least refers exclusively to the particular mission he was then sending them on; that they were to be his fore-runners,—were to prepare the people to receive himself, who would speedily follow them. The 24th and 25th verses seem to favor this supposition by showing that the ill treatment they might receive should not discourage them, because they as servants should not shrink from persecutions that he as the Master would share with them. If this be not the meaning, we are at a loss to know what it is. And would be glad if others can give a clearer explication.

Christ.

"The treasures of wisdom which Paul in Col. ii. 3, says are hidden away in Christ are simply inexhaustible. To the natural man they are impenetrable, but to the patient research of the renewed mind they stand more and more revealed in their incorruptible wealth of knowledge, and light, and glory. The name of Christ shall be "continued as long as the sun." He prefigured in the typical institutions of the Jewish calendar, as he now figures in the memorials of the Gentiles. His name will never fail from under the heavens. He has laid the foundation of the world's final deliverance from evil in the blood of the cross; and by and by he will return according to his promise, the remaining part of the Father's eternal purpose of reconciliation and regeneration. The New Testament gives us Christ both as a matter of fact, and as an object of faith; fact as to his death and resurrection, and of faith as to the bearing of these two events on our present service, and the blessed hope of his second appearing without sin unto salvation. The object of the New Testament is to impress Christ on the heart and understanding of all who turn in with his offers of eternal life and glory in his kingdom. In order to become the subject of his effect a man must be like the wax to the seal. Hearts had became hard as stones and were not impressible by the processes which God for ages employed for their illumination, and recovery from the alienation and darkness in which they formed themselves by nature. The mind of Christ exhibited to us in those Scriptures is intended to be transferred to our thinking apparatus, that it may take the place of our own natural views of things and give us instead the light of heaven, both upon human affairs, and upon the divine scheme by which the present human situation is at last to be delivered from universal vanity and vexation of Spirit. First came our lessons and afterwards the prize of our high calling. Christ is our example in the case, hence his words, "Learn on me." After mastering the first principles of the oracles of God, we need to address ourselves to the "simplicity that is in Christ." The simple story of his character has been weakened and corrupted by another gospel, and another spirit, which the first century knew nothing about. If we start out with the gospel enshrined in our understanding and affections, we have the only foundation on which it is possible the work and testimony of him who spake as never man spake before or since. He illustrated the ways of God to man on a scale that records with the pre-eminence designed beforehand in the counsels of the Eternal Father. Instruction attends every step of his work, and every word he uttered. There would seem to be no feature of his case that is not charged with the power of transforming and renewing the mind. Take even the most natural circumstances of his life, and there is quite a study in them. We cannot look intelligently at them without perceiving that the most common-place matters were all subordinated to the one great and unquenchable aim of his existence, and all utilized till its furtherance. Take the fact that he had no certain dwelling-place, and we see a case in which the comforts of home life were sacrificed to the interests of the truth which he represented. He had undertaken to manifest God to us and nothing was allowed to interfere. Yes; he sacrificed home life. He would not have been so free to go from one place to another with the heavenly message,—and so free to spend whole nights in the privacy of prayer on the mountain side. What does the apostle say of him? "He pleased not himself." And the great lesson,—the practical bearing of the life and example of Jesus in our case, is, not to estimate things on the world's principles; they are selfish from the bottom up; while those of Christ were wholly un-selfish. His one all-consuming zeal was for the Father's house. In this all his sympathies centered, and in the interests of this he lived, and died, and rose again."

Passing Events,

Have caused much uneasiness in England and other countries of late. Africans have caused much trouble and no little bloodshed.

The Egyptian—English advance has continued, but cholera has caused many deaths.

Preparations for war are still going on; every nation striving to overreach their neighbors in this respect.

In Crete there have been several severe encounters between Greek adventurers and Turkish troops, and it is thought that these may lead to complications between the Porte and the Greek government. All the materials around Turkey are ready for a conflagration. Bulgaria, Macedonia, Greece and Crete are all ready to put an end to the rule of the Sultan.

Europe has allowed the treaty of 1878 to be regarded as waste paper for the sake of peace that is not peace.

The London Morning Post advises the British government to bring the Sultan to terms by threatening to stop the payment of the tribute paid by Egypt.

An unmistakeable change of attitude towards the Sultan is reported from St. Petersburgh. The Czar is credited with having declared that the time has now come for Turkey to fulfill the innumerable promises of amendment she has been making for years.

The Scotsman says that not even in European Turkey is it possible to keep up in perpetuity an undermined and rotten structure by the clever balancing of rival ambitions. Both in Crete and Macedonia there is no longer any tolerable modus vivandi; and the time cannot be far off when Europe will have to interfere vigorously if we are to be saved a general conflagration in the East.

From Constantinople it is announced that the financial difficulties of the Ottoman Government are becoming acute. Many officials have received no salary for months,—and when they complain they are arrested; but the Sultan has at last ordered them paid out of his private purse.

Dr. Theodore Herzel the eminent Austrian Journalist has been in London advocating before Jewish audiences his scheme for a Jewish state. He said he had come from Constantinople, and that the Sultan is favorably disposed towards the Jews. He further said that powerful rulers were seriously considering the scheme he was advocating. What shrewdness he did not know, but he was convinced in his inmost soul that it will be realized. He had laid his scheme before a reigning sovereign, but he could only divulge to a small circle of trusted friends what took place at that interview. In conclusion he said: "So the land of our fathers exists in reality. It is not an imaginary country at the bottom of the sea. There are in it people who live and work on happily. There the old land reviews its youth under the hands of busy men. It bears flowers once again, and fruits, and perhaps one day, one beautiful day, the land will bear again the prosperity and the honor of Jews."

At the conclusion of Dr. Herzl's address, the Jews, as in Paul's day, "had great reasoning among themselves." The "dry bones" are evidently stirred, and the people will be ready to emerge from the "Valley" to take the place of the Turk, when he has to remove from Emmanuel's land.

The Jewish Chronicle commenting upon Dr. Herzl's address, says: "His address to the Maccabeans displayed much sentiment as well as practical power. There were some who sneered at those who talked of fulfillment of prophecy. But unless the Jewish state can annex the missionary ideals of the prophets, the proposal is not worth retaining even as a dream. Dr. Herzl has come to see this. We do not counsel him to lead a missionary movement; but if he would succeed he must gather under his banner not only hard-headed, practical men, but also the enthusiasts of Zion, and the believers in a great future for Jerusalem. The Chronicle also says: "The question of the return of the Jews to the Holy Land, and that of Jewish colonization are uppermost in minds of thoughtful persons.

The latest news seems to carry the impression that England alone may use co-ercive measures if the Sultan does not alter his course. It is believed that he instigated all the recent atrocities. It is thought the purpose of the Czar's visit to Queen Victoria may lead such action. In the meantime students of prophecy who have for years been outlining the events of these troublous times, have great cause to rejoice in view of passing events. Evidently Morn without a cloud will e're long dawn.

The Gospel of the Kingdom. A Reply to "The Christian Oracle," No. 25.

In further review of your position, my dear Sir, I am obliged to say, that I think your Church has most presumptuously assumed the work assigned to the kingdom of God, under the joint authority of his exalted Son and the immortalized saints of all ages, who after resurrection life and glorification will sing: "Thou art worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we SHALL REIGN ON THE EARTH."

Here you should be able to see again, that "the earth of land or soil," as you put it, will be occupied by them. Will they, think you, take it as a gift from God, through faith, or as usurpers? Do not forget that the Revelator says that at the sounding of the seventh angel, voices in the heaven are heard to say, "The kingdom of the world, (kosmos—order or arrangement, or constitution of things) has become our Lord's and his Christ's, and he shall reign for ever and ever," or, "for the ages of the ages." Of course this would have to be altered to suit your views. The idea of absorbing these may shock you by its grossness, but as I am after the truth, you must bear with it. The presumption certainly is, that in some way or other "Christ has acquired the right to the kingdom of the world. It is remarkable that it, the governments of earth that become his, and this throws a flood of light upon the song of the redeemed ones quoted above, "And we shall reign on the earth." This is the end of human governments, and the beginning of the Divine government on earth, that you say has long since come.

POLITICAL INSTITUTIONS

And now, Sir, as your assertion that we speak and write as if we "expected to make money out of the dirt or soil," must be the result of ignorance or wilfulness; as we cannot decide, which, we let it pass, and continue to heap up

EVIDENCE AGAINST YOU.

Do we not read in Heb. i. 2 that God has appointed Christ heir of all things" Surely the physical earth," land or soil must be included in the "all things." The "land or soil" is certainly something. The Lord himself before closing up the Revelation, says, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." How is this? Why, we have it explained in Rom. viii. 16, 17, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, —and, if children, then heirs, and joint-heirs with Christ," who, as we have seen, is heir of all things." Hence, too, that beautiful and comprehensive passage, 1 Cor. iii. 21-23, "Therefore, let no man glory in men, for all things are yours (prospectively, they being heirs, as previously shown) whether Paul or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come,—ALL THINGS ARE YOURS, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." Amen.

HEIRS OF GOD,

You next say of Abraham that "he was called to go out of the land he was living in, and afterwards he received the land he went into, as his inheritance." Let us see once more, if this be true. He certainly left his native country at the call of God. And, to the land indicated by God, the land of Canaan (Gen. xii. 5) he should have inherited it if you are correct. But are you correct in this? Why, no. Instead of giving it to him then, he kept on promising that he would give it to him

AT SOME FUTURE TIME.

"I WILL give unto thee. Being driven out of Canaan by famine he did not return to it until it afforded sustenance for man and beast, although his departure was rather abrupt. And it was after this sojourn in Egypt, and after many events recorded in the 13th and 14th chapters that the Lord said to him, "Fear not, Abram, I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." See chap. xv. 1. And in verse 7 the Lord said to him, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees to give thee this land to inherit it. And he (Abraham) said, "Lord God, whereby shall I KNOW that I shall (future) inherit it?" What

A SILLY QUESTION,—

and what a silly person he must have been to have asked such a question if your assertion be correct. Why, then he was standing at that moment on the land, and looking at it, and had been eating the fruit of it, and yet wanted to know how he should know that at some time future he should inherit it. Now, Sir, if he was inheriting it, Mr. Campbell's system is true. If he was not inheriting it Mr. Campbell's system is false, and what would the world do then? If he was inheriting it, he didn't know it. Singular, to be sure. And Stephen must have made for he says in the 7th of Acts, that God never gave him as much as he could set his foot on, although he promised it to him for an everlasting possession. Oh, how can a million more, or less, of intelligent men and women swallow such a statement as you re-iterate, that Abraham really inherited the land promised him, with this divine testimony in their head?

A SLIP OF THE TONGUE,

Selected.

Righteousness.

It was the incorruptible integrity of Job, and, in a higher sense, of the Redeemer himself, that saved them from the temptations of the devil. And it is as true now, that no one can successfully meet the power of temptation, unless he is righteous, as that a soldier could not defend himself against a foe without such a coat of mail.

A want of integrity will leave a man exposed to the assaults of the enemy, just as a man would be whose coat of mail was defective, or some part of which was wanting.

The king of Israel was smitten by an arrow sent from a bow drawn at a venture, "between the joints of his harness;" and many a man who thinks he has on the Christian armor is smitten in the same manner. There is some defect of character; some want of incorruptible integrity; some point that is unguarded, that will be sure to be the point of attack by the foe. So David was tempted to commit the enormous crimes that stained his memory, and Peter to deny his Lord. So Judas was assailed, for the want of the armor of righteousness, through his avarice; and so by want of incorruptible integrity in a single point, many a minister of the gospel has been assailed and has fallen. It may be added here that we need a righteousness which God alone can give—the righteousness of God our Savior—to make us perfectly invulnerable to all the arrows of the foe.—Dr. Albert Barnes.

Wickedness has no Rights.

It has none because it is essentially and eternally wrong. It is just the thing in all the universe which ought not to be. It has, therefore, at the outset no right to exist, and, of course, when it starts into existence, it has no shadow of right but to come to an end; if not by reformation, then by execution and extirpation. Its only possible pretence of right, is, at best but a squatter's claim. It can assert no valid right by any title that is known or customary among men. It has never created, nor inherited, nor received by grant of purchase, nor obtained by first discovery, nor gained by occupancy undisturbed, nor has it earned by honest labor, nor won in manly trial of strength, or skill, a single cubic inch of space for a home in the universe of God. It begins only as rebellion, and has only a rebel's right either of citizenship or of residence!—L. H. Chase.

Both Needed.

We should study the New Testament Scriptures, and neglect not the Old, for it was of the Old the Savior spoke when he said, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." It was of them Paul spake, when exhorting Timothy to continue in the things which he had learned, adding, "from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." It was of them he spoke when, in the same connection, he declared, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Jesting Upon Scripture.

The evils arising from this practice are greater than appear at first. It leads, in general to Irreverence for Scripture. No man would jest with the dying words of his father or his mother; yet the words of God are quite as solemn. When we have heard a comic or vulgar tale connected with a text of Scripture, such is the power of association, that we never hear the text afterward without thinking of the jest. The effect of this is obvious. He who is much engaged in this kind of false wit, will come at length to have a large portion of Holy Scripture spotted over by this unholy fancy.

Trouble.

I compare the troubles which we have to undergo, in the course of a year, to a bundle of faggots, far too large for us to carry. But God does not require us to carry the whole at once. He mercifully unties the bundle, and gives us first one stick. This we might easily manage, if we could only take the burden appointed for us each day; but we choose to increase our trouble by carrying yesterday's stick over again to-day, and adding to-morrow's burden to our load before we are required to bear it.

"Be Ready."

Now bear the word of exhortation, and be assured, that whatever delusions the world may supply, and however deceitful your hearts may be, in arguing upon the distance and the uncertainty of the event of Christ's coming—be assured that to us, individually, the day must be fast approaching; the time is short—the world is fading from you at every step—death is on every side—and there is but one ground, one hope of safety—be ready. Jesus is the way.—Rev. H. McNeile.

Maxims.

Diligence is the mother of good luck.

Pride breakfasted with plenty, dined with poverty, and supped with infamy.

What maintains one vice would bring up two children.

Rather go to bed supperless than rise in debt.

Buy what thou needest not, and it will oblige thee to sell thy necessaries.

These maxims of Dr. Franklin, though often printed, lose none of their value by repetition.—L. H. Chase.

You have only one life of probation to live and the magnitude of its value no mortal can compute. If you are wise, you will redeem the time with every possible effort.

Hunting and Fishing Guide.

Poetry.

The Pleasant Land.

The anthems that played on the mountains of Judah,
Are low on the walls that form Zion a tomb;
The glory that brightened from border to border,
Reposes in view in the caverns of gloom,
Scattered each chosen band,
Far from the promised land,
Blank are the hills where the tribes once repaired;
Silent the minstrel,
The monarch of Israel—
Sleep not forever!—thou soul-stirring bard!

Murmur ye winds o'er the summit of Sidon,
Breathe on the bosom of Galilee's lake;
Sigh for the ruin of Judah's dominion,
Mourn till the chains of her bondage shall break.
When shall the day-star
Banish her warfare?
When shall the olive-branch wave on the tower?
Break from thy slumber!
Harp of sweet numbers!
Waken the song of her glory and power.

When shall the rose-bud, in Sharon reposing,
Bloom in the gardens that slope to the west?
When shall the flocks, under Carmel reclining,
Graze by the vineyards, and quietly rest?
Fades with the sunset,
Banner and minaret;
So fades the day of the Gentile away;
Welcome the dawning
Of Zion's bright morning!
Welcome, fair Salem, in glorious array!

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 12.

First Proposition:

Resolved; The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

"Spirit and soul and body" is Paul's analysis of man; but in Genesis, body comes first and in that simple and primary revelation one not reading carefully would think the body the most important. However all three appear. First the body formed of dust, then the spirit inbreathed by God, who is spirit, then the soul as the link between the two.

The body is mortal, it is flesh, it is dust. Jesus calls it a temple, Paul an outward man daily perishing. Peter a taberna le which he was to put off at his de ease, 2 Pet. i. 13, 14. Paul tenderly writes of his sufferings while in this tabernacle, it is an earthly house and while we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord; 2 Cor. v. 8, to be absent from the body, to depart and to live no longer in the flesh is to be with Christ, it is gain, Phil. i. 21, 24. 2 Tim. iv. 6. The body returns to dust as it was, never shall we see it again.

The word spirit signifies breath, 2 life, the vital principle, 3 the rational mind or spirit, 4, the spirit of God, (See Gesenius. Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon).

In the Greek we have 1 mind, air, 2 breath, breath of life, breathing, 3, life a living being or spirit, spiritual being, metaphorical spirit, i. e. feeling (Liddell and Scott).

Soul, according to Gesenius, 1 breath, 2 life, 3 mind, 4 animal, i. e. man or lower animals, 5 I myself, thou thyself.

For all these meanings abundant Scriptures are cited by the lexicographer.

If one were to take the inferior, the primary meaning and insist that this is the only meaning, it is difficult to reason with him. One could insist that a box is a receptacle usually made of wood, and therefore when Dickens wrote "Squeers boxed him again" that Squeers put the pupil in a box. If he should reject the dictionary, you would feel that conviction is hopeless.

When you show that the soul thinks, Ps. cxxxix. 14; Prov. xix. 2; 1 Sam. xx. 4; Lam. iii. 20; loves, Is. xlii. 1; truths, Ps. lvii. 2; hates, Is. i. 14; takes revenge, Jer. v. 19; feels pride, Prov. xxviii. 25; chooses Gen. xxiii. 8; 2 Kings ix. 16, you convince the common man that the soul is not merely life, but mind. If the answer be made that David said "Saul seeketh my soul to destroy it, could Saul destroy the immaterial soul? or "hae forest and field (Is. x. 18), soul and body—we may remind him that sometimes the word means life and even the forest and fruitful field have life.

"My soul chooseth strangling" can a soul, a mind be strangled? No. The soul chooses. The mind chose strangling. An attorney in Ohio, misplaced some trust funds. He chose strangling to exposure. He did it with a halter. So Job's mind preferred death to such suffering.

That is all. The body would receive the strangling. The soul would be free. The word for soul occurs 700 times. It means life or a living creature in a majority of cases and in Is. x. 18, vegetable life. In the New Testament the word is exalted. It is not mere bodily life that Jesus refers to in Matt. x. 28, or Luke xii. 4, when he bids his disciples not to fear man who can do no more than kill, but to fear God who after he has killed the body has power to destroy the soul in hell. It is evident that the mind can suffer pain as intense as if the body was plunged in fire it is also clear that Jesus uses 'soul' as meaning the mind and that the wicked shall suffer in mind after the death of the body.

It will be noticed by the careful Bible student that there is a distinction between soul and spirit more marked in the New because it is a higher revelation. When Elijah prayed for the dead child he asked that his soul might return to him, when Jesus raised the maiden to life it is said her spirit came back.

The spirit is the nobler, it is the deeper mystery. It is the mind, for it knows, 1 Cor. ii. 11: it is born of God by believing on his Son, John iii. 6, 1 John v. 1: it is the new man recreated in the image of God after that image had been defaced by sin, Eph. iv. 22-24.

The soul may sink to be merely a slave of the flesh, or it may ascend to aid the spirit in its communion with God.

Wrath, strife, envyings are of the mind, the inner thoughts which sometimes rule. These are classed with fornication, murder and other sins. They are works of the flesh. They are possible only when the mind is carnal i. e. fleshly. The members of the body are yielded to fleshly lusts.

The negative suggests that if the spirit or soul does the things named then the spirit ought to be judged and punished. He is right. The body cannot sin. No physical act is sinful in itself. Always men go behind the act and judge the mind. To kill a man may be duty. The Scriptures teach this. "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done: whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. v. 10.

Our consciousness teaches the same. We know that we control these bodies, that we can turn them to the right or to the left, that we can yield them to sin or to righteousness, Rom. vi. 13, 16.

Go into a butcher's shop, examine a brain, take a little piece of it and remember all that matter can do is to move. Matter, ether, motion, exhaust the physical world. It is impossible for you to convince yourself that matter by volition or rotary movement can generate thought.

Or if you can think such an absurdity of your little particle of brain you have picked up on the point of a pin how would you unite the million pin points in a brain weighing four pounds like Websters? There must be some unit, a presiding genius which uses the brain and the whole body. See Zech. xii. 1; Job xxxii. 8, teach that God has found a spirit in man, and given it understanding. There is no need to suppose that the brain produces thought which the Scriptures do not teach and to reject the spirit when the Word assigns to it power to think, to choose and act, and God holds it, not the body, responsible. To the question what becomes of the spirit of a frog when it dies, the answer is in Eccles. iii. 21; it goes downward to the earth while the spirit of man goes upward. Before we follow the spirit into the unseen world let us emphasize the impossibility of attaining the truth if we do not pay the strictest attention to the meaning of words. Seventy-five per cent of the error we oppose arises from taking a primary meaning of a word and stopping there. In the nature of things our words for mental and spiritual ideas are words which first had only a physical and tangible meaning.

It is easy to see that one would be easily confused in seeking truth if he did not give this fact its full force. Every trade or cult has its own dialect. "House" means something totally different when used by a carpenter, a merchant, an actor or an English Earl.

Spirit first meant air, then breath, it has also a metaphorical meaning of feeling. If one were to limit it to these he would miss important truth and dilute God and angels into thin air.

Religion is not exempt from this necessity. The New Testament gives a tone, a color, an idea to a large number of Greek words which they did not have in ordinary use. Jesus came to give life. He was at cross purposes with his disciples till they came to understand what "life" is in the mind of Christ. Even in the physical realm, Jesus said of the nobleman's child "Thy Son liveth," when the body had not been dead. The fever which robbed him of strength, destroyed his physical life, Jesus restored it

Then, probable more in that age than now, men are apt to think that riches, giving abundance to a man, fill out and make life. But Jesus said "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things he possesseth." The Pharisees, proud, learned, despising the poor crowd, thought that they were alive. The young ruler, rich, moral, obedient to the Mosaic law and loved by Jesus is a fair sample. To him Jesus said, "If thou will enter into life."

He was devoid of life in the language and thought of Jesus. Life is not merely conscious existence.

A twin error regards the death in. "The wages of sin is death." as physical death. Death was here before Adam. Generations, more numerous than all the men who will ever people the earth, were in their graves. To-day innocent children die who have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. (I believe the negative teaches that their lot is the same as that of the wickedest man). Sin separates from God, that is death. Hence Jesus would not admit, for a moment that his people can die. Life in his tongue is perpetual. As he lives so his people. The believer on him shall never die. What we call death is a mere incident, it is as though Jesus had abolished death. When Lazarus died Jesus said he was asleep. With reluctance he told the obtuse disciples that Lazarus was dead. To Jesus there is no life except the life of the spirit born of God. There is no death save the death in sin. All his people are alive. They can never die. Whether we wake or sleep we will all live wrote Paul to Thessalonica.

Death is not extinction of being, not in any kind of death coming to man.

Destruction is not annihilation. The tree cut up by the root and burned is destroyed as a tree but not a particle is annihilated. The lost sheep and the lost boy of Luke xv. 2, are both said to have been destroyed (in the Greek New Testament), but neither was annihilated, nor even physically dead.

A man might as well go into a drug store and insist on attaching common names to everything and thus learn pharmacy, as to go to the Bible with the idea that words must all of them and at all times have the meaning of ordinary speech, and expect to learn the truth.

GEO. T. SMITH.

Reply No. 12.

Says Eld. Smith: "Spirit, soul and body is Paul's analysis of man." Yes, that is true, and it is likewise true of the entire animal creation. If that fact proves an immortal entity in man, the same evidence proves it in the beast. Even trees have got body and soul, Isa. x. 18. Man can destroy the body of a tree, but he cannot destroy its soul (life), he can deprive a tree of life, but to destroy life in the abstract he cannot do.

SOMETHING NEW.

Contrasting the record in Genesis with Paul's analysis, he says. "Body comes first * * * however all three appear. First the body formed of dust, then the spirit inbreathed by God, who is spirit, then the soul as the link between the two." The body he says is mortal, the spirit immortal. With regard to the soul, I will quote his language: "The soul as connected with the earthly body, being allied to the animal world, can die." Hence, in the body he has two conscious personal individuals. He quotes a human authority to show that the soul is in the body, and the spirit in the soul, and "the soul is a link between the two." Man's analysis, then, according to Eld. Smith, is a mortal body, a mortal soul, and an immortal spirit. With the same reasoning he could make a fourth conscious individuality. Paul says, "Your whole spirit, soul and body." "Your" is a personal pronoun in the possessive case, possessing spirit, soul and body. The one possessing must differ from the things possessed.

Eld. Smith further says: "It will be noticed by the careful Bible student that there is a distinction between soul and spirit." I know that very well, but Eld. Smith is the first immaterialist I ever knew who has made such a distinction, they invariably use them as interchangeable words. It is something new. It is a new departure for Eld. Smith. He wrote and affirmed the proposition under discussion. "The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body." The words "soul or spirit" means that they are interchangeable words. To draw a distinction between the two it should read, "soul and spirit." He there affirmed the "unending state" of the "soul," but now he says: "The soul as connected with the earthly body (that is the soul under discussion) being allied to the animal world can die."

He defines soul and spirit as follows:

1. Soul.—"It is also clear that Jesus uses 'soul' as meaning the mind."

2. Spirit. "The spirit is the nobler, it is the deeper mystery. It is the mind."

He says: "There is a distinction between the two." Where does it come in? It appears to me to be a distinction without a difference, both being "mind."

I will now quote from the Bible to show the state of the "mind" when death ensues.

Psa. cxlvi. 4. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Eccl. iv. 6. "The dead know not anything." "The memory of them is forgotten." "Their love and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." Their mind is pretty much gone when it cannot "love," "hate" or "envy."

Ver. 10. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." What is mind devoid of "wisdom?"

Isa. xxvi. 14. "Thou hast visited and destroyed them and made all their memory to perish."

Psa. xxxi. 12. "I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind."

Isa. xlii. 16. "Though Abraham (being dead) being ignorant of us."

Job xiv 21. "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them." The mind (soul and spirit) cannot either know or perceive after death. That is practical non-existence of the mind. "His thoughts perish," "that very day."

Says Eld. Smith: "The body returns to dust, as it was, never shall we see it again."

Says the Bible: "Thy dead men shall live together with my dead body, shall they arise." Isa. xxxvi. 19.

John v. 28. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

Eld. Smith speaks of children "who have not sinned," and intimates that I teach that "their lot is the same as that of the wicked man." It is not gracious in you, Eld. Smith, to try to create such an impression. Sinners only will be punished for sin. The first death is not the punishment for personal sin. The second death is where sinners will meet their doom, from which there is no release.

DEPART AND BE WITH CHRIST.

"I am in a strait betwixt to having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." Phil. i. 23.

What is there in this text to teach the natural immortality of the soul? Nothing but the faintest inference can be drawn from it. There is nothing in the text to show how soon he expected to be with Christ after his departure. The time between the two events would have to depend upon other testimonies.

That he would be immediately with him after his departure is assumed, but is not taught in the Scriptures.

There is a doubt that the common version expresses Paul's meaning. Every thing hinges on the words "to depart." We are told that the word is "analusai, the infinitive of the verb analuo, which is a compound of ana, again, and luo, to loose."

Parkhurst says: "It signifies in the New Testament to return or depart." It is used in Luke xii. 36: "Be like unto men who wait for their Lord when he will return (analusei) from the wedding." It is equally authoritive to use the word return as depart.

Says Roberts: "The infinitive, analusai, is preceded by the article to. The significance of this word will be perceived in the light of the following rule of Greek grammar: 'The infinitive with the article, is, in all cases, equal to a substantive, as ton lo gon, the art of speaking.' Hence, to analusai (literally to return) is the act of returning. In addition to the verb return is the verb to be. This also is in the infinitive, and preceded by the article, and, therefore, ought also to be understood as a substantive—the being. Both phrases are preceded by the preposition eis (for), from which it follows that Paul's desire was for the returning and the being with Christ. The verse, then, translated in strict accordance with the original, would stand as follows:

'For I am straightened by the two, having the earnest desire for the returning and the being with Christ, far better by much.'

In confirmation of the above, Paul invariably refers to the return of Christ as the time of being with him. 1 Thess. iv 17, "So shall we ever be with the Lord."

NOT ABLE TO KILL THE SOUL.

"Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Matt. x. 28.

It is an inconceivable thing to me that Eld. Smith sees the immortality of the soul in the above passage. The text shows that both body and soul can be destroyed. The word destroy is from apollumi, and is used in instances like the following:

Matt. ii. 13. "The young child to destroy him."

Matt. xxi. 41. "Will miserably destroy those wicked men."

Matt. xx. 7. "Destroyed those murderers."

The text shows that men can destroy the body, but God can destroy both body and soul. What are we to understand by that?

One of the definitions of the word "soul" is life. Christ "poured out his soul unto death." "His soul was made an offering for sin."

See Matt. xxiv. 25, 26, (revised version): "Whoever would save his life (margin soul) shall lose his life (margin soul) for my sake shall find it. For what shall a man be profited if he gain the whole world, and forfeit his life? (margin soul) or what shall a man give in exchange for his life? (margin soul).

John xii. 25. "He that loveth his life (margin soul) loseth it, and he that hateth his life (margin soul) in this world shall keep it unto life eternal (Zoe aionios.)

Mark viii. 35. "Whosoever would save his life (margin soul) shall lose it: and whosoever shall lose his life (margin soul) for my sake and the Gospel's shall save it."

The above are samples where the word "life" and "soul" are the same.

Men may destroy the body and deprive man of the nephesh or psuche life, but he has no control of the zoen aionios zoe, eternal life, because our zoen aionios zoe, eternal life, "is hid with Christ in God, and when Christ, who is our life, shall apear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. Men have no power over that. Man cannot destroy life (soul) in the abstract: he can deprive man of the possession of it, but God can destroy both body and life (soul), which man cannot do, and can also deprive him of the eternal life, which man cannot do. An immaterial nothing has no life to destroy.

NO ETERNAL LIFE FOR THE WICKED.

The theory of Elder Smith teaches an eternal life of torment for the wicked. Compare this with the

NEW TESTAMENT.

1 John iii. 15. "No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him."

Acts iii. 23. "Every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed."

Phil. iii. 19. "Whose end is destruction."

2 Thess. i. 9. "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction."

1 Tim. vi. 5. "Foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction."

Rom. ix. 22. "Vessels of wrath fitted to destruction."

Luke xiii. 5. "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."

Acts viii. 20. "Thy money perish with thee." ("eis eis apoleian—go to destruction.")

Jas. i. 15. "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death."

Jas. v. 20. "Save a soul from death."

2 Pet. ii. 12. "But these as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, shall utterly perish in their own corruption."

2 Pet. iii 7-9. "The day of judgment and destruction of ungodly men."

Heb. vi. 4-8. "Whose end is to be burned," not preserved for torment.

Heb. xii. 26. "Our God is a consuming fire." That don't mean a preserving fire.

2 Thess. xi. 10. "With all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish."

Why don't you believe the Inspired Word? It is better authority than pagan philosophers, Idolatrous Egyptians, and the Father of liars.

W. H. WILSON.

Obituary.

Bro. Manasa Myers was born in Montgomery Co., O., May 24, 1818. Of his parentage we know but little as his mother died when he was but twelve years old, and two years later his father died; but it is safe to conclude, that they were very good people for his early training must have been in accord with those principles of moral rectitude which ever characterize the pure in heart, and were so thoroughly impressed upon his youthful mind that they were carried with him in his every day life till he peacefully closed his eyes in that quiet repose from which he hoped to awake when his Lord and Master shall come to claim and crown his own.

He was married to Miss Mary Billmire, Dec. 8, 1840, and resided in his native home till Sept. 1850; when they moved to Illinois and settled in Lafayette Township, Ogle Co. where he lived till the time of his death, which was caused by heart-failure, occurring July 11, 1896, at the age of 78 years, 1 mo. and 17 days.

Honesty, industry and frugality appeared to be their watchword, for by patient and continued toil they prospered financially, and not only made for themselves a comfortable and cheerful home, but shared freely of their bountiful store with each of their children. They were very generous to the poor and needy, for none who appealed to them for aid were turned empty-handed away.

To them were born two sons and five daughters. One son died in infancy. One daughter died about 4 years ago. One son O. W. and four daughters still survive, viz.: Sisters Harriet Moyer of Wichita, Kan., Maggie Forbes of Wall Lake, Ia., Elizabeth Cummings of Milford, Ia., and S. A. Hunt of Lafayette, Ill.

It was in the early sixties that he first heard the gospel plan of redemption unfolded as he believed the Scriptures teach. To the support of the preaching of the gospel of Christ and kindred subjects, he always contributed liberally. His faith was firm in the hope of the gospel,—of the soon coming of Christ, and of the resurrection to a better life.

He expressed a desire to have Bro Hudler preach his funeral, but owing to some cause he could not be found in time to be present, therefore the sermon was omitted. Elder Rolph of the Christian denomination offered prayer at the home and at the grave; where by kind friends and neighbors he was laid to rest in Washington Grove Cemetery, beside his faithful and most estimable companion, who twenty-three years and two days preceded him to the quiet chamber of death to await the joyful call, when they who have fallen asleep in Christ shall come forth clad in immortal youth and beauty, bearing palms of victory, and wearing crowns of glory. It is in that bright happy day we expect again to meet and greet them. Oh! then,

"With what joyful exultation
Shall the saints Christ's banner see,
When the Lord for whom we've waited,
Shall proclaim the jubilee—
Freedom from the world's pollutions;
Freedom from all sin and pain;
Freedom from the wiles of Satan,
And from death's destructive reign."

Until then farewell.

Report of Meeting.

Wednesday evening Sept. 9, was the closing of a series of discourses given by Bro. D. M. Hudler, at Dixon, Ill. Commencing Thursday, Sept. 3, every evening was taken up in dwelling on God's Word, and listening to the promises, that gives strength to those who are striving to be loyal to their faith and to their God.

Among some of the subjects given were, "The Sabbath and the Law," "Gog and Magog," and the ever eloquent theme, "Paul's defense before Agrippa."

We wish also to mention the generous hospitality of the sect, by the name of the Christian Church; who extended an invitation to use their Hall, during Bro. Hudler's stay in Dixon. Their kindness and courtesy was greatly appreciated and gladly accepted, and it is hoped some seed fell in good ground, to bring forth fruit to eternal life, during the interesting meetings held there.

Bro. Hudler is a good talker and shows by his earnest endeavors, that he is truly trying to be able to say as Paul did when the time of his departure was at hand, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." May he, through the grace of God, be able to bring many to the light of the gospel is our prayer.

During Bro. Hudler's stay here, Mr. Mechaner, a young man who has realized the wonderful love of his Savior, threw behind him the allurement of worldly pleasures and obeyed the divine command, "Believe and be baptized." May he hereafter be able, through God's help, to walk in newness of life, be faithful to the end, and then hear the gracious words, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Matt. xxv. 21.

In conclusion we would extend to all our prayers in their welfare, and may we all be found with our robes complete and our lamps trimmed and burning when the Bridegroom appears.

Communicated.

Hesaias. (Isa' C. V.) Chap. 60.

1. Shine, shine, O Hierousaleem: For thy light hath come, and the glory of the Lord hath arisen over thee.

2. Lo, darkness will cover the earth and thick darkness will be over nations; but over thee the Lord will appear, and his glory will have been seen over thee.

3. And kings will go their way unto thy light, and nations unto thy illumination;

4. Lift up thine eyes round about and see thy offspring that have been gathered together: They have come, all thy sons from afar, and thy daughters will have been carried on shoulders.

5. Then wilt thou see and have feared and be astonished in heart, because the wealth of a sea and of nations and hities will be transported into thee: And they will come.

6. Herds of camels, and the camels of Madiam and Gaipha will cover thee, all those from Saba, who bring gold will come, and they will bring frankincense, and they will declare the good-tidings of the Lord's instrumental-salvation.

7. And all the flocks of Keedar will have been gathered together, and rams of Nabnioth will come, and they will have been offered acceptably upon my altar, and the house of my votive-prayer will have been glorified.

8. Who are these that fly like clouds and like pigeons as it were with their young unto me?

9. We have the islands waited for and ships of Thursis will be among the first to conduct thy offspring from afar, and their silver and their gold along with them, for the sake of the sacred name of the Lord, and because the Saint of Israel is renowned.

10. And men of other races will build thy walls, and their kings will stand beside thee; For because of my wrath I smote thee and because of mercy I loved thee.

11. And thy gates will have been constantly opened; day and night they will not have been closed, for a host of nations and their kings who lead them to conduct in unto thee;

12. For the nations and the kings who will not serve thee as bond-servants will perish, and the nations will have been made desolate with desolation;

13. And the glory of the Libanos will come unto thee with cypress and fir-tree and cedar at the same time to glorify my sacred place;

14. And sons of those who humbled thee will go their way to thee with awesome fear; and of those who have provoked thee, and thou wilt have been called City Zion of Saint Israel.

15. Because thou didst become forsaken and hated, and there was no one to succor thee, I shall make thee an age-lasting gladness, a rejoicing for generations of generations.

16. And thou wilt seek the milk of nations and eat the wealth of kings, and thou wilt comprehend that I am the Lord who saveth thee, and thy deliverer, the God of Israel:

17. And instead of copper I shall bring to thee gold, and instead of iron I shall bring to thee silver, and instead of wood I shall bring to thee copper, and instead of stones iron. And I shall give thy rulers to be in peace. And thy bishops (overseers) to be in righteousness;

18. And iniquity will no more have been heard of in thy land, nor ruin nor wretchedness in thy borders; but thy walls will have been called an instrument of salvation, and thy gateways carved work.

19. And there will be for thee no longer the sun for a light by day nor will the rising of a moon illuminate thy night; but the Lord will be eternal light and God thy glory.

20. For thy sun will not set nor will thy moon leave off; For the Lord will be for thee eternal light and the days of thy sorrow will have been fulfilled.

21. And thy laity will be all justified; through an animate-age will they inherit the land, watching to guard the planting, works of their hands for glory:

22. The fewest will be thousands and the least a great nation. I the Lord shall gather them together in due-time.

Chapter 61.

1. Spirit of the Lord is upon me, for whose sake he hath anointed me to announce the good tidings to beggars, hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to herald release to captives and sight to the blind;

2. To call an acceptable year of the Lord, and a day of requital, to comfort all the sorrowing;

3. That glory hath been given to those who sorrow in Sioon, an oil of rejoicing for those who sorrow, a flowing robe of glory in place of a spirit of compunction: And they will have been called generations of righteousness, a planting of the Lord for glory.

4. And they will build up age-lasting waste-places, that have been laid-waste for generations;

5. And men of other races will come shepherding thy sheep and other tribesmen will be thy ploughmen and vine-dressers.

6. But ye will have been called priests of the Lord, public-servitors of God: the strength of nations will ye devour and in their wealth will ye have been wondered at.

7. In this wise a second time will they inherit the land, and eternal rejoicing will be over their Head.

8. For I am the Lord who loveth righteousness, and who hateth robberies of iniquity; and I shall give the results of their toil to justified ones, and an eternal covenant shall I have covenanted with them.

9. And their seed will have been known among the nations, and their progeny in the midst of the hities, every one who seeth them will recognize them that they are a seed that hath been blessed by God.

10. And with rejoicing will they have rejoiced in the Lord. Let my soul be glad in the Lord. For he hath clothed me with an outer-garment of salvation, and an under-garment of rejoicing: As upon a bride-groom hath he placed a mitre upon me and like a bride hath he adorned me with a roomus;

11. And as an increasing land is the flower thereof, and as a garden are its seeds: In this wise will the Lord, the Lord cause to spring up righteousness and gladness in the sight of all the nations.

Chapter 62.

1. For Sion's sake I shall not keep silent and for Hierousaleem's sake I shall not desist until her righteousness shall have come forth like light, and my instrument-al-salvation shall have burned like a lamp.

2. And nations will see thy right-oousness and kings thy glory, and he will call thee by the new name which the Lord shall name it.

3. And thou wilt be a garland of beauty in the hand of the Lord, and a diadem of royalty in the hand of thy God.

4. And no longer wilt thou have been called forsaken, and thy land will no more have been called desolate. For my will will have been called thine, and thy land an inhabited land, because the Lord hath become satisfied with thee, and thy land will have become conjointly inhabited.

5. And as a young man taketh up his abode along with a virgin, even so will thy sons dwell throughout it; and it will be that in the way a bridegroom shall have rejoiced over a bride, even so will the Lord have rejoiced over thee.

6. And upon thy walls, O Hierousaleem I have stood watchmen all the day long and all the night long who will not keep silence, constantly making mention of the Lord.

7. For there is no one like to you, if thou shalt become restored to uprightness, and shalt make Hierousaleem an open-mouthed wonder upon the earth;

8. The Lord hath sworn by his glory and by the strength of his arm, I shall no more give thy grain and thy food unto thine enemies, and alien sons will no more drink thy wine for which thou hast toiled;

9. But those who have been gathered together will eat them and will praise the Lord; and those who have been gathered together will drink them in my sacred court-yards.

10. Go your way through my gateways and may ye have made a way for my laity, and may ye have cast out the stones from out the way: May ye have lifted up a concerted-signal to the nations.

11. For lo, the Lord hath caused it to be heard unto the end of the earth; May ye have said unto the daughter of Sioon, Lo, the Savior hath come unto thee, the one who hath his own wages and his work before his face.

12. And he will call this a saintly laity, one that hath been redeemed by the Lord; and thou wilt have been called a city to be sought unto, and not one that hath been forsaken.

Chas. Gardner.

Under whose preaching were you converted? "Under nobody's preaching," was the pleasant, smiling reply, "it was under Aunt Mary's practicing."

Though difficulties disturb us in our duty they must not drive from it.

A Query.

Society consists of an infinite number of imperfect individuals combined or welded together. As the mass can be no better than the component parts, society is imperfect or sinful.

If this be so, how can one of a given number of the component parts render the whole mass perfect or sinless?

The effect can never exceed the cause because the effect must be contained in the cause either actively or potentially. An imperfect atom can not produce a perfect mass, or, as the Savior put it, "A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit."

This admitted, how can imperfect men regenerate the world and fill it full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

Announcement.

The 10th Annual gathering of the Church of God, of the Northwest Conference will be held at Scholls, Oregon, commencing Oct. 16, and continued over Sunday. Brethren from abroad, if they will inform us to that effect, will be met at the National Hotel, Portland, at one o'clock Friday. And now brethren, let me admonish you as a Sister in Christ, one who is looking and waiting for the Savior to come and claim his own, let this gathering be one to be remembered. "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no one shall see the Lord." Let no root of bitterness spring up between us whereby we might loose our birth-right. The time will soon come when such gatherings will be of the past. I often look back and think of those that were with us in our first conference. Where are they? Some are sleeping here at Mountain Side, some at other places, some are scattered, and like sheep have gone astray. Yet we feel to thank God that we have some old pioneers yet here at Scholls and in Vancouver, Washington, and our ranks here have been filled up by new recruits, for which we praise God the Father.

Almira Brooks, Sec.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will convene (D. V.) at Conts Grove, Barry Co., Michigan, Friday evening Oct. 16th, 1896, and continue over the following Sunday. There are three trains each way daily at Conts Grove, by the C. K. and S. Railway. Going North reach Conts Grove at 7:38 a. m., 4:00 p. m., 10:20 a. m. Going South reach Conts Grove at 8:25 a. m., 4:40 p. m. 12:15 a. m. If there are any who wish to be met at Hastings they will please drop a postal to Bro. A. K. Richardson, of Conts Grove, Barry Co., Mich. There will be one or more good speakers to preach the gospel of salvation. It is not often that we are permitted to assemble in one body to shake glad hands, to cheer, and encourage one another, so let as many of us as can lay asident worldly cares for a few days and attend this conference, doing all in our power, both individually and collectively for the advancement of his cause. The brothers and sisters of that place have earnestly requested that the Conference might be held there, feeling that by our united effort much good might be done. All will be given a most cordial welcome. My prayer is that we will soon meet in the kingdom of God.

Emma Jackman, Sec.

We are admonished by Peter to "sanctify the Lord God in our hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh for a reason of the Hope that is in you with meekness and fear." 1st Pet. iii. 15.

The Lord willing we expect Bro. and Sister Woodward with us for two or three weeks. Commencing Sunday Sept. 20, 1896. Come and bring your friends. These meetings are for work to sow the seed. Let us do all we can to sow the seed of the kingdom which we advocate. Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation, Rom. vi. 2. Go out in the highways and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled, Luke xiv. 28. Because thou art lukewarm and neither cold nor hot I will spew thee out of my mouth, Rev, iii. 16. Work, brethren, in the Master's vineyard. The just shall live by faith; but if any man will draw back my soul shall have no pleasure in him. Heb. x. 38. Faith if it hath not works is dead, Jas. ii. 17. How important it is to work for the Master, your faith will come to naught without works.

Come prepared with your baskets as the brethren here have been burdened by sickness and otherwise they are unable to entertain to my great extent. Yours with the Hope and Faith in Christ.

Fred Greiner.

Books and Tract List.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

FUTURE PROBATION.

Is that awaiting any of the unrighteous? A 160-page pamphlet by Wm. Heim Moorcraft. This work was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid for ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for any who are interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send ten cents to this office for a copy.

"HEAD THINGS OF THE KINDNESS OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 5cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, with gamut for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conant," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Heward, and printed in Restitution, April 22, 1895. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the Restitution of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "The Restitution," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "The Restitution."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Mountaineer's Prayer.

Gird me with the strength of thy steadfast hills!
The speed of thy streams give me!
In the spirit that calms, with the life that thrills,
I would stand or run for thee.
Let me be thy voice, or thy silent power,—
As the cataract or the peak,—
An eternal thought in my earthly hour.
Of the living God to speak.

Give me of the brook's faith, joyously sung
Under clank of its icy chain!
Give me the patience that hides among
Thy hill-tops in mist and rain!
Lift me up from the clod; let me breath thy breath;
Thy beauty and strength give me!
Let me lose both the name and the meaning of death
In the life that I share with thee!

[Read at Gospel Hall, Plymouth, Indiana, September 6, 1896.]

Watchman, What of the Night?

"Watchman, what of the night." These words recorded by the prophet Isaiah, were uttered long, long ago, and have echoed and re-echoed all along down the stream of time, until this morning, we still hear the same echo, "Watchman, what of the night?" The Watchman answers, "The morning cometh, also the night."

We understand a watchman to be a soldier, or servant, a look-out man, one who in ancient times was placed upon the city wall to herald approaching danger, and we find by the study of God's Word that his children are called soldiers and servants, and are expected to be the heralds of coming danger, and as we believe the day to be far spent we may well enquire of the night. Night denotes darkness. Jesus said, "Men love darkness rather than light; because their deeds are evil," and Paul says in Eph. v. 12, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful work of darkness, but rather reprove them." Paul was a noble defender of truth, and a fearless reprover of evil. He ever stood by the truth, as you and I must do if we would be an overcomer.

Another statement of Paul's was, "They that be drunken are drunk in the night." In those days it took a much longer time to make a man drunk on wine than it does to-day. We now find them reaching that stage very early in the morning, and at all hours of the day we see them reeling in our streets. O think you! has not the intoxicated man reached the very depth of moral darkness, the awful midnight of sin? Look at that man, created in the image of God, he for whom Christ died. O think of the depth to which he has fallen and pity his lost condition, for Jesus says, "No drunkard hath eternal life."

Rouse, Christian soldier, gird on thine armor of light! Awake to battle and rescue the perishing! They are all around you. Think of the helpless children and heart-broken wives, think of the numberless places within our own city where this deadly curse is poured out to our fathers, husbands, sons and brothers. But this is not all the terrible sin that surrounds us, their name is legion. Timothy enumerates them something like this:—"Lovers of their ownselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce despisers of them that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." How true. How we love pleasure, and how easy to convince ourselves that there is no wrong in this or that pleasure. Let us be on our guard, lest we deceive ourselves. We remember that Moses was not permitted to enter the promised land because of speaking unadvisedly. Also the servant only put forth his hand and touched the ark but he fell dead. God's dealings with his children have ever been yea, yea, and nay, nay. Our conduct will either be pleasing or displeasing to him. Surely these be days of evil in which we live. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

Add to this dark picture the massacre of the thousands of Armenian Christians, the fearful destruction of life and property by cyclone, cloud-burst, fire, hail and wind-storm, and we have a picture dark enough to make us realize that we have reached the last day perils. Let us therefore endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, for no man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life. He only strives to please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. Yet, he is not crowned except he strive lawfully. Let us study to show ourselves approved of God. Workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth, in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves.

The day is far spent, the night is at hand. Already the watchman is calling the slumbering virgins to awake out of sleep and prepare their lamps, and keep them burning. But so long hath the Bridegroom tarried few believe in his return. But let us watch. The Nobleman has taken his far journey and he bids us watch therefore, for we know not the hour of his coming. It may be at even, or it may be at midnight, or at cock-crow or in the morning that I will come but be ready, have your lamps trimmed and burning, and be not one of the foolish virgins, your vessels emptied of oil, but have an abundance of it.

What do we understand the oil to be? I have been taught that it was the Word, but if the lamp is the gospel, how can the oil be the same thing? We that are house-keepers know well that they are two distinct things. We may polish and clean our lamps as much as we please, yet it is perfectly useless as a light until it is filled with oil. But let us take the lamp that is filled with oil and touch the match and we have the light. So you and I may know and understand the gospel, and yet if our lives and works are not conformed to it, it will be just as unprofitable to us as the lamp without the oil. But if we take the lamp, the gospel truth, and have the oil of charity which Paul tells us is the bond of perfectness, illuminated with the spirit of Christ we are well equipped for the journey of life, and will be able to let our light shine.

This calls to mind some of the blessed Savior's words when he walked with men, and witnessed the evils of life and felt the power and influence of the temptations that assail the child of God. He said, "Take heed therefore, that the light that is in thee be not turned to darkness." Sad thought indeed! That there is danger of our light becoming darkness. The light of the body is the eye and if thine eye be single thine whole body shall be full of light, but if thine eye be evil thy body is full of darkness, and how well we know by experience the truth of the statement, for when we allow our eyes to feast upon the vanities, pleasures and social evils of life, how we learn to love them, and soon we become envious, covetous, discontented with our lot, our light is becoming dark. O child of God! Keep thine eyes full and thine heart from covetousness, let us place our treasures in heaven for where our treasure is there will our hearts be also. Let us fill our hearts and lives so full of busy work for the Master, that we shall have no room for evil. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty to the pulling down of strongholds. If we take upon us the whole armor of God we shall be able to stand, for it is God that worketh in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. But do all things without murmuring or disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless the sons of God, without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation among whom ye shine as light in the world, holding forth the Word of life. Jesus said to Thomas, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," and to Martha, he said, "I am the resurrection and the life," therefore, if we hold forth the Word of life, it will be the old, old story, that we have loved so long. Yes, the same old, old story of Jesus and his love. Old yet ever sweet and new, and the more we hear and learn the more we love it, the more precious it is to our souls, and we like David can say, "As the hart panteth for the water brook, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God. When shall I come and appear before God?" This is a solemn question for you and I, this morning, for it may be at even he will come. Then the books that hold the record of our mortal lives will be opened, your name will be there, my name will be there, and what will the record be? Shall we be able to stand the test? Shall we hear the "Well done," or will it be "depart?" If our hearts condemn us not then we are truly blessed. Have we in the strength of our God, gone forth to battle with sin, and flesh and the devil, and have we found him all sufficient? Yes, his mercy endureth forever and he says, I will instruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go. I will guide thee with mine eye. May our prayer be, "Create in me a clean heart O God, and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy spirit from me." Let us worship God in the beauty of holiness, presenting our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto him which is our reasonable service, ever looking unto him for grace and strength to do his will in all things. Soon we shall behold the King in his Beauty. The Bride hath made herself ready, the Bridegroom is here, the marriage supper is past and Jesus reigns. Let the whole earth rejoice and may it be yours and mine to sing the new song. "Thou art worthy to take the Book and open the seal thereof for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and nation, and hast made us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." I want to be there, dont you? O how sweet it will be to have our tears all dried by his own loving hand, and hear him say, enter into rest, your warfare is o'er, you have fought the good fight, you have overcome, now you shall suffer no more, for the former things are passed away, and behold, I make all things new. Weeping endureth for the night, but joy cometh in the morning.

An Admonition.

Christianity teaches man to be independent and think for himself—to decide what is right and not regardless of the opinions of the so-called wise and great. Christ demands self-reliance. His disciples are destined rulers expected to form character, (under the hard trials of life,) that fit them for his work.

Those who conform to the world can attain no superiority over the weak, and must rise in no way capable of assuming authority. The Christian must learn to estimate man at their true value, and not as the world values them. The mind is the only true measure of the man.

It has been said, with much truth, that the world never knows its greatest men; for circumstances consign them to obscurity; Satan is dominant, and keeps them where they cannot obstruct his plans.

Once in a while God in furtherance of his aims raises up some man like Abraham Lincoln, his servant, but we need not therefore overestimate his powers, or regard him necessarily as a heaven-born statesman or intellectual giant, for God chooses the weak and foolish of this world to confound the wise and powerful.

Commonly it is taught that virtue, honesty and so forth will ensure success, and the love and veneration of mankind, as a fact the reverse is usually the case.

Most of the great and successful that dominated the world (to judge by history) seem to have been unmitigated scamps, who either were born to power, or achieved it by all sorts of scheming and wickedness, the virtuous and weak serving as their victims. For the most part history is a record of the career of celebrated robbers and murderers intoxicated by lust and unsatiable ambition.

The value of human opinion is shown by the preface to the English Bible, where the Christian translators devote a page to the fulsome laudation of James I. who is described by Mr. Bissett, in common with other historians, as being, "in every relation of life in which he is viewed, equally an object of aversion or contempt." And there was; until lately at least, a special service in the English Prayer book, and a day set apart, especially to thank God for the restoration to power of that worthless scamp Charles the II.

Many of the nobility actually boast of their descent from the profligate mistresses of former kings, and blazon the bar of bastardy in their escutcheons as something to be proud of—others spring from the swashbuckler, cut throats and unscrupulous vassallions that composed the vagabond hordes of William the Conquer or, and other pests and drones that idleness and rapine cast loose on society.

Aristides was banished, as one man expressed it, because he was tired of hearing him called "the Just"—and Socrates was poisoned by his countrymen to get rid of his moral sermons, and the would-be reformer has always been trodden under foot.

In our land the scum rises to the top, and we elect him to high places that he may misrule our cities and oppose all efforts to promote moral or social improvement, and we disfranchise our women for fear their lot in the main would be cast for the suppression of vice, while the vicious or ignorant are given the ballot. No man can retain popularity who refuses to flatter and cajole the public, by ignoring the evil that they see, and promising the wicked that it will be well with him. "Surely thou hast set them in slippery places."

Some are placed in authority by the power of evil, to uphold Satan's kingdom, or that wealth and unbridled lust may lure them to perdition, or spread sin and misery broadcast through the land. Others are unfaithful stewards who have used the Lord's talents to gratify their own desires and enslave their fellowmen.

The Christian who goes with the crowd is yet blind. He fails to realize the great truths of Christ—that the pomp, and power, and glory of the world is vanity, or, as the translators might have more clearly (if vulgarly) expressed it, "Humbug," if they had known the term. The fear of the Lord is only the beginning of wisdom, and the Christian who would find the knowledge of God must apply his heart to understanding, must "cry out after knowledge and lift up his voice for understanding,"—must "seek for her as silver and search for her as for hid treasures."

The majority of Christians "get religion," join a church and conclude they are already saved. They make no effort to "seek the Lord." They say they have him already, for the Spirit tells them so. Yet they have not found wisdom, for they hate knowledge, and do not choose his counsel, which tells them to study the Scriptures, to "meditate therein day and night, that thou may observe to do according to all that is written therein." "Take fast hold of instruction, let her not go, keep her, for she is thy life." Enter not into the path of the wicked and go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass by it, turn from it and pass away."

So far from "giving themselves wholly to them," the majority probably seldom read or hear the Scriptures except during an hour or so one day in the week; they object openly to searching the Scriptures or meditating therein lest they cause discussion, or lead them to mistrust those traditions of men that they learned in youth. They say it is not necessary to seek for wisdom as for silver, that it is better to believe as a little trusting child, and that "some day we'll understand"—forgetting that it is only "the wise who shall inherit glory," and that shame shall be the promotion of fools," for "he shall die without instruction, and in the greatness of his folly he shall go astray."

God gave us the Scriptures that they may make us wise unto salvation through faith which is in Jesus Christ, and "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." We can not have faith in a thing that we know nothing about, and the position of the ordinary mass of professing Christians is exactly the same as that of the unprofitable servant who took his Lord's talent and bound it in a napkin, and buried it in the ground. They take the Lord's Word and bury it where it is of no use to them any more than if it were the Koran or Rig. Vedas.

The result is they are "in all evil in the midst of the congregation and assembly." The sinners have enticed them and they consent, they walk in the way with them, join their clubs and lodges and associations. They are "banding themselves" with the worldly and "associating" in the brotherhoods and trusts and secret societies with those that fear not God. They invite their co-operation, and "cast in their lot among them and all have one purse." to build up their Churches and send forth agents to spread their false doctrines. "They have left the guide of their youth and forget the covenant of God." "Associate yourselves, oh ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces—take counsel together and it shall come to naught—speak the Word and it shall not stand, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Why Called Soul Sleeper?

The belief in a few of the following Bible truths, causes a class of people to bear the nick-name "Soul Sleeper." Man is naturally mortal and death is a sleep. Immortal life is a precious gift of God, and not a natural possession. On the resurrection morning the sleeping saints will be resurrected to immortal life and the living "changed."

Let us see a few places in the Bible where death is called sleep. 1 Cor. xv. 51, says, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." 1 Thess. iv. 13 to 16 says. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that you sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the Word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep." 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, says, "And if Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins; then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Verse 20 says, "But now is Christ risen and become the first fruits of them that slept." (That is, the first person that was ever resurrected to immortal life). Job thought death was a sleep. He says (vii. 21), "And why dost thou not pardon my transgressions and take away mine iniquity for now shall I sleep in the dust." Job xiv. 12, says, "So man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more; they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep." Where does Job say he wants to be hide. "Oh, that thou wouldst hide me in the grave that thou wouldst keep me secret until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time and remember me?" Job asks the question: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

The question at the present day would be, If man die shall he live right on? In Job xvii. 13, he says, "If I wait the grave is mine house, I have made my bed in the darkness."

David was a man after God's own heart, and in Acts xiii. 36, we read, for David after he had served his own generation by the will of God fell asleep and saw corruption. But this will not be a perpetual sleep. Oh no, in Isaiah xxvi. 19, we read, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise, awake and sing ye that dwell in dust." And in Dan. xii. 2, we read, "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

"The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go into silence," so reads Psalm cxv. 17. Why do the dead praise not the Lord? Because Psalm vi. 5, says, "In death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" Hezekiah knew he could not praise the Lord when he died, for in Isa. xxxviii. 17-19, he said, "Behold for peace I had great bitterness, but thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption. For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee, they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living shall praise thee, as I do this day." The inspired Word of God says, in Psa. xlix. 20, "Man that is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish." In the same chapter it says again, "Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not, he is like the beasts that perish. Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them." And in Eccl. iii. 18, 19, 20, it reads "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the son. of men that God might manifest them and that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them, as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, for all is vanity, all go unto one place (do they all go to heaven? Oh no), no one of the dust and all turn to dust again." In Eccl. ix. 5, 6 we read, "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished."

In verse 10 it says, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest."

In Psa. cxlvi. 4, we are told where the man goes, where the breath goes, and where the thoughts go. Let us read it carefully and see if either the man, the breath, or the thoughts go to heaven. His breath goeth forth, he returneth (to heaven? no) to his earth, in that very day his thoughts (fly away to dwell in the skies? no listen) perish." So if men go to heaven when they die, heaven is thronged with people who do not praise the Lord, and who have neither love, hatred, or envy, neither wisdom nor thoughts, for this is the condition a man is in as soon as death claims him. Yes, death is only a short sleep, because we expect to be awakened at the resurrection and judgment, but after that, any that have to die the second death, there will be no awakening for them. No, the second death will not be a sleep out of which you need expect to be awakened. "For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Let us be ready, so if we fall asleep we can say like Job, O, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time and remember me.

LAURA FREELS.

Christ and the Scriptures.

Nothing keeps our doctrinal system in such ripe proportion, or gives such real dignity to our spiritual consciousness, or such power to our confusion of faith, or such help for deep repose in our inmost, deepest being amid the cares and bustle of life, as communion with Christ in his Word, where mind and heart, intelligence and devotion, seek him and find him together. He has his special secrets for those who are at the pains to come and ask for them. And he not only teaches but comforts, "Great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." Psa. cxlx. 165; and it is because they love him. —Bishop Thorold.

Make no Christian living your standard of what is right in faith and practice, however high his name, his rank or his learning. Let your creed be the Bible, and nothing but the Bible, and your example Christ and nothing short of him.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations the restoration of Israel: the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the right-eous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

WE wish to call attention to those who send for any of the books advertised under the head of "Aids to Bible Study and Mission-Work" to send direct to Brother Wiley Jones, Manchester, Va. THE day is nearing when the glorified saints shall be able to sing, "Oh, grave, where is thy victory?" They will then have triumphed over death. With such a prospect in view we may well ask the Apostle Peter's question over again: "What manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" We do wisely if we let the doctrine of the Anointed One have a practical effect upon our lives,—so moulding our characters that they may become more and more like the divine Pattern, so that we may ultimately be accounted worthy to partake of his divine nature—partakers of him.

"THE Bible doctrine of a future life exhibits a contrast to the vague, and contradictory theories propounded under the sanction of the Great Religious systems of religion among Gentiles. It has the merit of being at once definite, simple, reasonable, and in the highest degree attractive to people of unprejudiced and well-balanced minds; and it is unassailable on any method which science or culture can suggest. It may moreover be stated in a few words. Our contention is, that the Scriptures nowhere countenance the idea that man is naturally related to a future life, but on the contrary that he is a creature of the dust, and under sentence to return to dust because of sin, and that God has placed the sole means of his deliverance from this condition in the hands of the Lord Jesus Christ. This strikes at the root of the popular tradition.

WE read in 1 Thess. iv. 16, that the dead in Christ shall rise first. By reference to the context it will be seen that the comparison is between the righteous dead and the righteous living, and not between the righteous dead and the wicked dead. The Thessalonians seem to have been mourning the death of some of their number in a way that indicated a fear on their part that the deceased on their part had lost something by dying. Paul assures them that this was a mistake. "We who are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (or go before) them who are asleep, for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then (or second) we who are alive and remain shall be caught up," etc. Paul simply teaches that the dead are restored to life and perfected before the living enter upon the inheritance, and that therefore the dead lose nothing by dying. "Wherefore," says he, "comfort one another with these words."

THE angel promised Mary that the Lord God would give to her Son the throne of his father David, and he should reign over the House of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. But this is not all. He will be monarch of all mankind. All the thrones and dominions of men will crumble to nothing before him,—he will grind them to powder. All earthly dominions will pass away, for it is the intention of the God of heaven to set up on the ruins of those represented by Nebuchadnezzar's pulverized image, a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and we are told that the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all those kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. The object of this kingdom is to reconcile the world to God, and to abolish all evil, and make all things new. It will be the time of regeneration. Matt. xix. 27-29. Righteousness will prevail, and purity will abound; while war will cease to desolate the nations of earth, and security will be everywhere experienced. Then God's name will be exalted and the oppressor crushed. Then the poor will be cared for, and righteous laws will cause the universal triumph of right. The knowledge of the Lord will in that day cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Hab. ii. 14. But this glorious epoch will only be the introduction to a more glorious time, for it will usher in the age when The last enemy, death—shall be destroyed, and God shall be all in all. 1 Cor. xv.

[illegible] Heaven, all the immortality, be a possession of all men, why do the Scriptures present it as a matter of hope? (Titus i. 2, and iii. 7) and promise? (2 Tim. i. 1; and 1 John i. 25) and exhort believers to seek for it (Rom. ii. 7) and lay hold of it? (2 Tim. vi. 12, 19.)

If the record be that "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. (1 John v. 11), and "he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life," (v. 12), is it not perverting the Scriptures to say that all men must live forever?

If the Bible says "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. xviii. 4), how can the soul be deathless, as taught by the clergy?

If "eternal life" or immortality be the "gift of God through Jesus Christ," (Rom. vi. 23; John iv. 10) how can it be the natural birthright of all men?

If all men possess a life which will continue forever, why did Jesus say to the Jews, "that they might have life?" John x. 10.

If God "gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," (John iii. 16), how can any one obtain that life excepting through Jesus? And does it not nullify the mission of Christ to say that all men possess everlasting life?

The Gospel of the Kingdom. A Reply to "The Christian Oracle," No. 26.

Dear Sir:

In continuing the subject from the point where I left off, I remark that the Lord God regarded Abraham's question a very proper one, and proceeded to answer it, as follows:—"Take me a heifer of three years old and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle dove, and a young pigeon, and he took unto him all these and divided them in the midst and laid each piece one against another, but the birds divided he not. And when the fowls came down upon the carcasses, Abraham drove them away. And when the sun was going down fell upon Abraham, and lo, a horror of great darkness fell upon him." The next words must have astonished the faithful Abram: "And he said unto him, know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them, and they shall afflict them after 400 years!!!" And also that a nation whom they shall serve will I judge,—and afterward shall they come out with great substance; and thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace.

A DEEP SLEEP

THOU SHALT BE BURIED

in a good old age. But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again; FOR [now comes the reason for thus dealing with Abraham's seed according to the flesh] FOR the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full. There is no answer to Abram's question yet. It only deals with his descendants, and he learns they will be slaves to foreigners 400 years before they can occupy the land. He sees, too, that the present owners of the land will not be dispossessed for that length of time. But to the sacrificial victims,—they were and it came to pass that when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace and a burning lamp that passed between those pieces. This was a sign that could not be mistaken. The victims he had slain, and watched, and defended so long, were at last consumed by fire from heaven. By this he knew that HE HIMSELF would inherit the land. But he learned the truth also, that he would

DIE FIRST AND LIVE AGAIN

in order to inherit it. Hence the words of Heb. xi. 13. These all died in faith not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off." Bethink me that you will have to do something more than "glance" at this matter before you can extract yourself. It will not do to claim that it was really promised to Abram for his descendants, and that they inherited it after the 400 years expired, according to the promise, for they did not inherit it forever. They do not inherit now. I do not deny that there were promises made to them concerning the land: but they were

CONDITIONAL PROMISES.

Those made to Abram and the One Seed, Gal. iii. 16, were unconditional, absolute, contingent upon nothing. The Israelites to (nation 1) occupancy of that land depended upon obedience; and that explains their expulsion from it. Hold that they never inherited it [illegible] Chron. xix. 15, he says, "For we are and sojourners as all our fathers were." This takes in Abraham and all his subsequent fathers. And all because the everlasting possession under the promise was a long way off; and secondly, because it is only Abraham's seed faithwise who will ever thus inherit it. I ask again, did the tribes thus inherit the land? No. God says the land shall not be sold forever." Why, Lord?

STRANGERS BEFORE THEE,

"FOR THE LAND IS MINE."

But, Lord, didst thou not give it to these tribes for an inheritance forever? He answers: "For ye are strangers and sojourners with me." They were tenants of his—"Sojourners with me." He would not allow them to sell it; it was his. They could in no case sell it for more than fifty years. See Lev. xxv. 23-29. But you say you are going to prove by Ezek. xxxii. 24, Abraham did inherit the land. But, Sir, I do not see how you can quote that passage for such a purpose, except from a concordance and without reference to the context. It says: Son of Man, they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel, speaks, saying: [What do they say? They say.] "Abraham was one, and

HE INHERITED THE LAND:

but we are many: the land is given us for inheritance." That's what they say: but are they reliable witnesses? Do they bear good characters? Do they speak the truth? Let the word of the Lord answer: "Wherefore say unto them, thus saith the Lord God, ye eat with the blood, and lift up your eyes toward your idols, and shed blood.—and

SHALL YE POSSESS THE LAND?

Ye stand upon your sword,—ye work abomination, and ye defile every one his neighbor's wife; and shall YE possess the land?" The answer is no! And the statement that Abraham inherited the land is not true, for it is exactly contrary to the statement of the Spirit in Stephen, already referred to. You now attempt to prove that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob inherited it by the following quotation, "And God Almighty bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest be a multitude of people, and give thee to thee and to thy seed with thee; that thou mayest inherit the land—[of thy sojournings—margin] wherein thou art a stranger, which God gave unto Abraham." You see the last clause of your own text disproves your claim. If Abraham had inherited what God gave him by promise,—he would have left his inheritance to Isaac, and Isaac in turn would have left it to Jacob,—but, lo, they were

THE BLESSING OF ABRAHAM

STRANGERS IN THAT LAND.

I will now close by proving by Gen. xxvi. 3, that God had not performed his promise to Abraham in Isaac's time. "I will be with thee; I will bless thee (Isaac), for unto thee and unto thy seed will I give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I swore unto Abraham.....and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Every promise is a promise of future good. And the Word of the Lord for it, he had not yet performed his oath to Abraham,—neither has he done so in this year of our Lord 1896.

Report of Meeting.

Dear Fellow-workers:

You will rejoice with us, with the church at Millbrook, Michigan and with the angels in heaven, to know that the Lord has again shown his love and mighty power in bringing many dear souls into a saving knowledge of the truth. On August 12th we both left our home (after on my part a six months silence in preaching) for Millbrook, and expecting to remain there more than four or five days, but God knew better than we did, what he wanted us to do, and the days passed by amid much interest, many Bible talks and readings, until three weeks had been counted off and twenty-five names written in the Lamb's Book of Life. The morning we left a Mr. and Mrs. Southwick came four miles to be buried with him, our immortal Lifegiver, reaching the water before seven o'clock. As Sister Southwick came up out of the water she grasped my hand with a look of perfect peace and satisfaction beaming from her eyes and exclaiming, "O, I am so glad!" Well might she shout for joy, for were not the angels rejoicing in heaven, the heavenly smile of approval resting upon them, and they resting in the blessed assurance of a passport into the soon coming kingdom, if they walk the life of children of a King. One of the brethren who took the name of Christ upon them, threw away their tobacco, one broke away from the accursed drink habit, all have erected the family altar in their homes. The young people organized their own meeting and all seemed to start out in earnest for the kingdom, realizing with Paul, that it is through much tribulation we enter the kingdom. They have girded themselves round about with Divine help, so that when the trials come they will not be shaken, but stand firm that they will not be ashamed before him at his coming. One dear sister had desired baptism for two years, all that time walking in fear and trembling, struggling on with aching heart, and failing health. She said with so much earnestness, "If I obey do you suppose it will take away this heart-ache?" Yes, dear one, obedience gives rest and peace, and by your obeying others will be led into the truth. "I'll go," she said, and the next evening she rose for baptism, and one week from that time, (a week after we had left) her husband accepted the gospel and the Elder was sent for to come and baptize him, he making the twenty-fifth soul baptized into Christ, several others came back to Father's house who had taken the name by baptism before, but had for some time been careless.

We are now at Niagara Falls, coming here at the repeated request of the brethren. There is much work to be done in Michigan, but the Macedonian Cry comes from all around, "Come over and help us," and so we are here to help. May God help with his own mighty power to bring many hearts near to him in obedience to his Word. Pray to this end brethren, we are so weak, and unable ourselves to do this blessed work but God is the same loving, willing helper and worker. In him we trust.

Yours, in the vineyard of the Lord.
R. W. & M. A. WOODWARD.

Dear Restitution:

Brother John Poore of Tempe, Arizona, has been holding a series of meetings here. We hired a tent for the occasion and pitched it at 34th Street and Central Avenue, because most of our people live in that direction. Brother and Sister Lampher, Brothers Gibson, DeYoung, Wagner and Smith assisted in the meetings. The tent was never crowded but comfortably full, and as much interest shown as could be expected in that part of the city, being sparsely settled and the Advent conference going on at the same time.

Brother Poore preached powerfully on the "Testimony of the Spirit in the Word," "The Nature of Man," "The Resurrection," "The Restitution," "The Coming of the Lord, and Signs of the Times," and "The Sufficiency of the Scriptures," etc.

We enjoyed his visit immensely and praise God for it, as we do not often hear such preaching. He goes for a week to Pasadena, in the Advent tent, where it is hoped he will do much good.

Yours in Christ.
E. D. MCCLEES.

Excursion to Columbia City.

Friday Oct. 9th, low round trip tickets will be sold via Pennsylvania Lines to Columbia City from Plymouth, Ft. Wayne and intermediate ticket stations for the Republican Mass Meeting; return coupons valid Saturday, Oct. 10th, inclusive.—Oct. 10.

Conference Report.

The conference at Lamark, Illinois, opened as per call, on Friday evening Sept., 18, 1896, with preaching by Brother J. F. Wilcox, from the 14th chapter of Exodus, a faith that will induce service. On Saturday forenoon we met and again heard from Brother Wilcox out of the precious Word. After report of Evangelist D. M. Hudler was read and accepted, he having preached 252 discourses and three funeral sermons together with his receipts and expenses, and after accepted on motion it was unanimously agreed that D. M. Hudler remain in Illinois as Evangelist. Churches at Antioch, Adeline, Pleasant Valley and Lamark obligating themselves to his support. East Plum River and Union not making any decisive answer. The conference authorized the secretary to issue to J. F. Wilcox a certificate to act as an evangelist, for the Church of God in Illinois, at his will to go and preach the gospel. We had preaching on Sunday morning, afternoon and at night, and thus ended one of the most enjoyable times that we have had for many a day, there having been a good attendance of brethren from abroad, each being renewed in his faith.

J. M. GLOTFELTY, Sec'y.

Editor Restitution:

The Church of God met at Bitter Creek, Sumner County, Kansas, and enjoyed a splendid meeting conducted by Brother L. E. Conner. Many friends from a distance were present and all seemed to enjoy the intellectual feasts which Brother Conner always has prepared for his hearers. He is not only eloquent and able but willing to do all he can for his Lord and Master. Under his preaching five individuals stepped out on the Lord's side and complied with the required conditions.

The business meeting was held on Saturday Sept., 12 and among other business the conference decided to hold the next quarterly conference in the early part of Dec., at Oxford, Kansas. The yearly conference is to be held again next fall at Bitter Creek.

Brother M. L. Adams of Oklahoma was present and also Brother T. E. Adams, both of which assisted in the meeting.

Brother I. S. Miller was again elected president of the conference and received a vote of thanks for his past service.

We hope that all were cared for and not only enjoyed the meeting but that they are better men and women for their having been with us during our services, and may we all ever live near the blessed One whom we serve.

Yours in hope.
I. S. MILLER, Pres.

Report of the Annual Conference of the Church of God in Indiana held at Argos Ind., Sept. 18-20, 1896.

It is our pleasure to report another good meeting and we trust much good may have been done or may come from the seed sown. The weather was favorable and all felt it was good to be there.

The business meeting was called Saturday A. M. by the president J. F. Wagoner. The secretary being absent no report of the last meeting was given. Bro. F. L. Austin was chosen secretary pro tem.

The treasurer reported amount on hand at beginning of quarter $49.92, paid out same for evangelistic work with no receipts up to date.

On motion all the officers were re-elected for the ensuing year.

The conference granted a letter of commendation to Bro. Chas. Fish of Argos to act as minister.

It was moved and carried that a committee of two be appointed by the chair to wait upon parties having obligated themselves in matters pertaining to Bro. G. W. Smith of Marmont. The committee appointed were Bros. Frank Boggs and Charley Fish.

It was further ordered that an appeal be made by the president through THE RESTITUTION to the brotherhood to replenish the evangelical fund. Conference then adjourned.

The meetings were quite well attended throughout, quite a number being present from abroad. There being seven from Rensselaer, among them was Bro. F. L. Austin and wife, also Bro. Joblin from Cleveland, O.

The ministers present were Bros. J. F. Wagoner, M. Joblin, J. L. Wince and F. L. Austin.

Bro. Joblin did most of the preaching presenting the truth with an earnest zeal and original fact, yet fraught with a spirit of love enlisting the strictest attention of all present, and it seemed that no one could hear and not realize the responsibility that rests upon them.

One sister came out and was baptized on Saturday. May she trust him for grace in every time of need and be faithful to the end. The meetings were interspersed with social and prayer services, which are a great aid and promoter to success of all religious efforts. On Sunday morning a cheering letter was read from our dear Bro. Willey, which will be published in THE RESTITUTION.

May the heavenly Father sustain and keep us all is our prayer.

J. F. WAGONER, Pres.
A. C. ROBERTS Sec.

Letter Read at Argos Conference.

Dear Bro. Roberts Sec'y:

And to all those who through a love of truth, as it is in Christ, in Conference assembled at Argos, I send this greeting, that you may know of my continued remembrance of you in all your meetings. I should have enjoyed meeting with you, and of speaking face to face of the joy and hope which we have in common, through a knowledge of God, and of the great and precious promises which through his love he has made known unto us. But as I am not permitted to meet with you, I send this greeting with much hope, that this reunion of those of like precious faith, may be a blessing, and that new zeal and trusting confidence may be rekindled in the hearts of the veteran soldiers of the Master. And moreover that through your loyalty and love for the Captain of our salvation, that some loyal heart may be induced to enlist under the banner of our King.

My dear brothers and sisters in hope, the Lord has been good to me, and since I had the privilege of meeting with you in June at old Antioch, I have had the pleasure of spending one first day with our dear brother and sister Geo. M. Moyer at Clarksville, Iowa, and of listening to him as he fed his little flock the bread of life from God's great store house of truth. And again, (thanks to the protecting care of our dear heavenly Father) I was permitted to spend Sunday Aug. 23, with our dear Brother and Sister Halstead at Andover, South Dakota. What a joy to hear his voice once more as he spoke the words of truth and hope, to that loving, loyal band of faithful followers. Oh, how forcibly it brought to my mind the power of his gospel through his preaching, which opened my mind to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. These meetings are but a foretaste to that Grand Event, when we shall all meet to part never more in our happy Eden home. May the dear Lord sustain us in every trial, that we may be found ready when he comes.

I wish to add one word for Bro. Halstead. He is getting old and is contemplating a visit to Indiana during the winter, thus avoiding the cold weather of Dakota. Should he come to Indiana he would be glad to visit any of the churches in that State who might give him a call. He loves to tell the old, old story.

Your Brother in hope,
J. H. WILLEY.

Never put much confidence in such as put no confidence in others. A man prone to suspect evil is mostly looking in his neighbor for what he sees in himself. As to the pure all things are pure, even so to the impure all things are impure.

Poetry.

"Ask, and it Shall be Given You."

He loves to answer prayer, though not, it may be,
In just the way that we should think the best;
But in his own prospective, perfect judgment,
He gives the blessings, and withholds the rest.

Then let us trust him, let us take the comfort;
O, let us lean upon our Father's care!
Life may seem dark at times, events mysterious,
But once at home, all shadows vanish there.

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 13.

First Proposition:

Resolved; The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

A TRIP TO HADES.

A wierd journey is before us. To the ancients, the land of spirits was a desolate realm, where weak and puny shades were listless and unemployed save as they roused themselves to greet a new comer.

But Jesus brought that life to light and under our faithful and competent Pilot we may venture in full confidence to survey the spirit world.

Three orders of intelligent beings are known to us; God, angels, men.

God is a spirit, he is here, but invisible, for he is not material. He alone has immortality. Angels and men are creatures who have a beginning, while to God there is none, therefore he alone has life in himself not derived from another. Angels being spirits cannot die, Luke xx. 36, for spirit is deathless.

A moral distinction divides both angels and men into two classes, let us begin and end our survey with the good sandwiching the evil. The good angels do the will of God, Matt. vi. 10, encamp around the good, Ps. xxxiv. 7, and minister to the saved, Heb. i. 14. Eighteen appearances of angels are recorded, one half being in the New Testament. The mountain or the plain may be full of them, but we are unable to see them, 2 Kings vi. 17. They excel man in power and in wisdom. It is probable that every child and every true lover of God has a guardian angel.

But some angels sinned. They were cast down into darkness into Tartarus reserved unto the day of judgment when they are to be cast into the lake of fire. They are in chains, but chains have length, hence they appear on earth. Their chief is called the Devil, (the evil,) Belial, Satan, Beelzebub. He is a murderer and the father of lies. He is the adversary of God and man.

Jesus told the Pharisees that they were the children of the devil. When they die who have served the devil here, they become unclean spirits or demons. They seek rest and in Jesus' day often entered into men. Unfortunately translated devils these spirits of wicked men are confounded with the wicked angels.

This word had a growth with a little different application in the New Testament.

At first daimon meant a knowing one. It was applied to Aristotle and to Thucydides on account of their intelligence. Then it was applied to the spirits of the dead because they had become acquainted with the secrets of another world.

Hesiod, the oldest known Grecian poet wrote, "The spirits of mortals become demons when separated from their earthly bodies."

Plutarch quotes the above and endorses it, "The demons of the Greeks were the ghosts and genii of departed men."

Josephus in the 6th and 8th chapters of the Wars of the Jews gives the current belief of the Jews. "Demons all the spirits of wicked men who enter into living men and destroy them unless they are so happy as to meet with speedy relief."

Lardner, says of the first two centuries of the Christian Era, "The notions of demons or the souls of dead men having power over living men, was universally prevalent among the heathen of these times and believed by many Christians." See lectures and addresses by A. Campbell, pages 381, 386. Did the writers of the New Testament endorse this view? With a slight change they did. The demons of the New Testament are always unclean, never good!

(a) Demons are distinguished from diseases, Matt, viii. 16. We cast out spirits and healed all the sick.

(b) Demons were called deaf and dumb, Mark ix. 25,

(c) Demons believe, Jas. ii. 19, and confessed Christ, Matt. viii. 29, though in fear.

(d) They are marked out by sex, Acts xvi. "He came out of her," at Paul's command.

(e) Babylon is represented as the habitation of demons, Rev. xviii. 2. These are the spirits of its former inhabitants not diseases, nor insane persons, nor metaphors.

(f) Demons consult and plan, Mark v. the demons going into the swine, Luke xi. the unclean spirit takes back with him seven other spirits.

Some Biblical scholars hold that between his death and resurrection Jesus preached to the spirits in prison, 1 Peter iii. 19. The time of the preaching is not clear, that the spirits were in prison is beyond question.

The blasphemy against the Holy Spirit was saying that Jesus had a demon, Mark iii. In that place the Lord admits that satan has a kingdom, that there are spirits under satan who enter into men, that he (Jesus) casts them out and binds and spoils satan.

The existence of a kingdom of evil spirits is thus emphatically declared by the Teacher. The greatest sin possible has its basis in that fact.

On a vacation journey one cannot write the geography of sheol as accurately as is desired. Let the above impregnable argument suffice for the present.

GEO. T. SMITH.

REPLY NO. 13.

DEMONS.

The reader will observe that the caption to Eld. Smith's paper, is: "A trip to Hades." He says: "On a vacation journey, one cannot write the geography of Sheol as accurately as desired."

Of course not, you had better wait until you return and when in a quiet, reflective mood you will be better able to give a geographical description of your "trip" and the country.

What is a devil? We have daimonion from daimon, a deity, a god."

See Deut. xxxii. 17: "They (Israel) sacrificed unto devils, not to God: to gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not."

See Psa. cvi. 35, 37. They were mingled among the heathen and learned their works: and they served their idols, which were a snare unto them—yea, they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils, (idols) and shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the devils (idols,) of Canaan."

Says Paul, 1 Cor. x. 20, 26, "The things which the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to devils (idols,) and not to God."

In the time of Plato, the pagans deified the imaginary ghosts of dead men, which doctrine the Jews embraced as they were prone to embrace evil from the people with whom they mixed, Psa. cvi. 35, 37. For proof of these things see the historical citations from Josephus and other authors in Eld. Smith's paper. The prevalence of a belief, does not prove its truth. Error is frequently the most popular, as it was in Noah's day.

Idols composed of stone and wood were called devils. Christ called Peter "satan," and speaking of his disciples said, "Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?"

None of these devils were spooks of dead men. Eld. Smith's historical citations show how these spooks came to be created, and became both good and bad demons, the teaching came from the dark benighted minds of the pagans, from whom they derived their instruction and ghostology.

A person afflicted with some form of nervous disorder, was supposed to be controlled or possessed by a malignant spook.

A lunatic was one possessed by a moon devil. See Matt. xvii. 22, "Lord have mercy on my son, for he is a lunatic, and sore vexed. Jesus rebuked the devil and he departed out of him."

He rebuked the influence or cause which deranged the childs mind (brain). There was something wrong with his brain, is the common sense of it. I think there would be something wrong with the brain of a person who would argue that he expelled some dead man's crazy spook from him.

Matt. xii. 22, "Then was brought to him one possessed with a devil blind and dumb and he healed him." Christ healed the one that was blind and dumb. He did not cast out of him the ghost of some blind and dumb man who was dead. That theory lacks common sense, and is extremely heathenish.

There was also the maniac among the tombs. When Christ healed him "he was in his right mind." He acted like men do now who have a disordered brain. Spook business cuts no figure at all. He cured others of epileptic fits. The people of those days thought it was the work of "hobgoblins," etc., which they learned from heathenish pagans.

Enlightened people of this age, should know better than place confidence in such ignorant superstitution, and rise superior to it.

Christ's conformity to the popular way of the people expressing themselves, did not commit him to a belief of their delusive fictions. He gave an apparent recognition to Beelzebub the god of the Philistines, when he said, "Ye say that I cast out demons through Beelzebub: If I by Beelzebub cast out demons by whom do your children cast them out?" He did not denounce him as an heathen fiction any more than the idea that spooks of dead men were in them tormenting them as devils. It amounted to no more than a mere accommodation to the prevalent ideas of the people.

ANGELS.

Eld. Smith has considerable to say about angels. I don't know what connection it has with the question under discussion, they are a different order of beings. It may be that he thinks that they are spooks of dead men. Immaterialists do teach their children to sing:

"I want to be an angel,
And with the angels stand."

In books and on grave stones we see pictures of plump little cherubs, with feathery appendages, which are used to propagate the delusion.

Angels are spiritual beings, and are deathless. They are true samples of what spirit beings will be when raised from the dead.

Abraham saw what he thought was three men approaching him. He extended his hospitality toward them, and gave them bread and butter, milk and veal to eat, "and they did eat." Gen. xviii. 2, 5.

Lot did the same for what he thought was two men, "he made them a feast, and "they did eat."

The father of Samson extended hospitality to what he thought was a fellow-man, "And knew not that he was an angel of the Lord." Judges xiii. 15.

Says Cornelius, "A man.. stood before me in bright clothing." Acts x. 30. They had the form of men.

Angels are samples of what the blest and holy will be, when they become spirit beings. See Luke xx. 35, 36.

These angels as we have seen, were real substantial beings. They could sit down and eat a square meal of bread and butter, milk and veal.

The ghosts of immaterialists, cannot do this, they amount to nothing more than an apparition, a delusive fancy, an illusion, a spectral shade, a fantastic dream, an air-castle, an etherial ghostly vision, a nonentity, "thin air" appears substantial when compared with this dreamy nothing! nothing!! nothing!!!

LIVING SOUL.

"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life (neshamah chaiyim—the breath of lives,) and man became a living soul (nephesh chaiyah.") Gen. ii. 7.

Men and beasts are made of the same substance, and have the same breath of life, Neshamah has reference to the vital air used in common by man and the animal creation.

Says Pettingell, "It seems to be nearly, if not quite, synonomous with the word ruach, which is more frequently employed to express the same idea. Chaiyim is the plural of the word chai or chaiyah, meaning life."

There appears to be nothing peculiar to man in the fact of the communication of this breath of life to him, for the brutes themselves are represented as having the breath of life in their nostrils also, as in Gen. vii. 2, where the same words, with still greater emphasis, by the addition of ruach are employed as follows: "All in whose nostrils was the breath of life (neshamah ruach chaiyim—the breath of the spirit of lives)—died."

The phrase nephesh chaiyah, translated in this passage 'living soul,' certainly designates nothing peculiar to man, for it is equally applicable to beast, ten times in Genesis and twice in Leviticus.

Rev. T. Pye Smith says: "Some of our readers may be surprised at our having translated nephesh chaiyah by living animal? There are good interpreters and preachers who confining in the common translation 'living soul' have maintained that here is intimated the distinctive preeminence of the man above the inferior animals, as possessed by an immaterial and immortal spirit. We should be acting unfaithfully if we were to affirm its being contained or implied in this passage."

Says Dr. Lange: "The expression, 'living soul' as used in Genesis is often taken to indicate an order of being superior to the brute, and is the text of many an argument to prove the immortality of the soul. The incorrectness of this assumption will be readily seen by referring to Gen. i. 20, 21-24, and elsewhere, in which passages the words translated 'living soul' are applied also to the entire lower creation."

In Revelation we read "every living soul in the sea died." In No. 5 Elder Smith says: "The loathsome fish with living souls can soon be landed if Elder Wilson will kindly give us the meaning of the word 'soul' as he has found it in the Bible." They have been given repeatedly, but have not seen "the loathsome fish" landed yet. Try again.

WHERE ETERNAL LIFE MAY BE FOUND.

How foolish to argue that a desire for immortality is an evidence of its possession. Paul says: "What a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" The desire ceases when the object of the desire is attained. The fact that man desires immortality is a clear evidence that he does not possess that which he desires. The existence of a desire may prove a possibility of its being attained, but it is by no means a guarantee that it will be attained.

What is immortality? It is the antithesis of mortality. The word mortality is derived from the Latin root "mors" death, and means "deathfulness." Job says: "Shall mortal man be more just than God." In this passage inspiration describes "man" (not a house for man) as being "mortal" liable to death. Im, signifies "not," and when placed before the word "mortal" means not mortal, or liable to death.

In your study of nature, Eld. Smith, have you discovered any thing wherein there is the breath of life, but what is as yet mortal? What does nature teach you? Study nature, Eld. Smith if you find the revelation of God in the Old Testament Scriptures is more than you can handle. Alas! where does nature teach the immortality of man?

If Eld. Smith can accept the New Testament as authority, he will be compelled to admit that eternal life is something to be obtained through Jesus Christ, and is not an inheritance by nature.

John x. 20. "I am come that they might have life."

1 John iv. 9. "That we might live through him."

John v. 26. "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life."

John xi. 25. "I am the resurrection and the life."

John x. 28. "I give unto them eternal life."

1 John ii. 25. "Hath promised us eternal life."

Rom. vi. 23. "The gift of God is eternal life."

Titus iii. 7. "The hope of eternal life."

Jude xxi. "Looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life."

Col. iii. 4. "Your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

W. H. WILSON.

Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Allow me to say something on one of the greatest delusions of the last days. After all the positive teachings of the Bible on the subject of Jesus Christ being the Son of God, we have to be confronted with the teachings of men that that grandest of truths, has to be set aside, and that the Christ, the Son of the living God, is now found out to be the son of Joseph. Now, I will give proof from the great eternal Father, and from the angel Gabriel. Luke i. 31, 32: "And behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a son and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest." * * * Peter, John and others also give us proof. In the first place I will give the names of the sons of Joseph. Matt. xiii. 55, "Is not this the Carpenter's Son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren James, and Joses, and Simon, and Jude?" These are the four sons of Joseph. Now, we want the proof from a reliable source. Let us commence with our dear Father in heaven. When his blessed Son was immersed by John in the river Jordon. Matt. iii. 13 to 17, "And lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: And lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." God said this Jesus was his Son. I cannot, I will not, I dare not, say this was the son of Joseph. Oh, Father in heaven, where is the world drifting to?

Again Matt. xvii. 5: "While he yet spake, behold a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him." Was this all a mistake? Has the dear Father in heaven deceived us? No, the deception is not in him. Matt. xvi. 15, 16. Now, let us hear from Peter. Christ asked him a pointed question and that question was answered by inspiration, for Christ said so at the same time. Let us hear the question and answer, and when we are asked the same question, let us give the same answer. I for one will. God being my helper. "He (Jesus) saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said, ("You are mistaken, I am the son of Joseph?) No, no, not him. "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed [illegible] unto thee, but my Father in heaven." There, I told you Peter was inspired. He did tell that grand truth. God told [illegible] on the Mount of Transfiguration. I believe those that teach Christ is the son of Joseph have got their revelation from flesh and blood. Again let us hear John in his first epistle. John vi. 11-12, "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Now, what think ye Josephites, have you got life in a son of Joseph? I would not give you one farthing for your hope of eternal life. Once more 2 John iii. Read it. There is the Father, and Jesus Christ the Son of the Father. Then the Christian's Christ has a living Father. Those that believe that Joseph is the father of their Christ have no living Father of their Christ.

I write in earnest, my dear brethren, for in travels my I find the brethren drifting off into those vain speculations, and as they endorse them they become cold and indifferent in the things concerning the kingdom of God, and want to spend the most of their time on their pets. If I meet a man that believes in universal salvation, he won't or don't want to talk on any other theme, and just so on the other hobbies. Let us look well to our standing. Let us build on Christ, the solid Rock. All other foundations are faulty.

J. S. HAVEN.

Adorning.

"That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things." Titus ii. 10.

Brother, Sister, have you carefully read this second and third chapters of Paul's Epistle to Titus? If you have not do not fail to do so, and by so doing profit by the Apostle's exhortation to Titus to adorn the doctrine of God, the doctrine which you have accepted as the true gospel of God, of Jesus Christ. We must adorn that doctrine in all things, not in a few things. If we be teachers we must "speak the things which become sound doctrine," exhort the aged men to be "sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith," etc., the aged women likewise, the young men to be "sober minded." If it be the preacher's duty to exhort to do these things, then it is the duty of each and every child of God to obey, and the preacher also as an example, if he would in the fullest sense "adorn the doctrine of God in all things."

That doctrine teaches us to "look for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," and if we would hear the call on the resurrection morn we must have so lived that we have adorned the doctrine, or, what means the same, if we have "overcome."

Let each one who has "obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine" stop and ask himself or herself the question: "Am I living an overcoming life each day; am I adorning; am I worthy to be called and chosen when the Savior shall come?" Let us drop these contentions about things that are unessential to salvation and devote some of the valuable space in the paper to articles on practical Christianity.

Has each one who has gone down into the water been buried and rose to a new life, forsook that old life of wrong-doing? Are you pure in mind and purpose, and living a self-sacrificing life, or do you live only for the gratification of earthly pleasures as before? Are you leading a daily life of prayer, and "pray without ceasing," not only on bended knee, with your life companion by your side, but by thought, deed and action, or is it as before observance when no thought of prayer was in your hearts? David and Daniel prayed three times each day. It is the medium by which we draw near to God and which strengthens us to overcome temptations.

Knowing that the latter days are upon us and that our Savior will soon come, what manner of men we should be in holy conversation and righteousness. "They which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works," say Paul (Titus iii. 8) "These things are good and profitable unto men."

If our Savior should come and find us running after the things of this life—voting for some mortal man, when our doctrine teaches us that only the righteous rule of Jesus Christ as King of kings can bring that peace and prosperity which all humanity desires—will he hunt us out and give us a crown? No. Unto them that look for him only will he appear a second time without a sin offering unto salvation. Vote for our Savior by adorning your lives each day with self-sacrifice, righteousness and prayer.

MRS. D. HOWARD.

"TO CHRISTIAN WOMEN EVERYWHERE."

I want to ask the privilege of writing freely to you of the thoughts that arise in my heart.

If my words seem poor and weak, you will receive them kindly for Christ's dear sake, for I believe that they carry not the suggestion of my own mind, but an invitation from him. We all love to read of those women who came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun seeking their crucified Lord, and found their risen Savior. Thank God, the women who love and worship Jesus Christ now are not a few, but a multitude.

We may not gather from every land and nation to meet in visible presence, but we can meet in spirit; therefore, I want to ask you to join a prayer-watch concerning the coming again of our dear Lord. We know not when the time is, therefore we are told to "watch and pray," and to be ever looking for that "blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." So I ask that we may in spirit gather together, at the rising of the sun, to offer our petitions. Surely if we do this faithfully, he who gave those early faithful friends a vision of angels, who appeared to them in his risen glory and beauty, will manifest himself unto us also. What sweet lessons in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, he may teach us! Surely he will give us messages of hope and consolation to his battle-worn soldiers—to his patient sufferers—to the weary and discouraged ones of earth. So shall our hearts be drawn into a glad waiting for his return; and the sad earth be made to bloom and smile beneath the promise of his coming. If you cannot observe the hour of sunrise (though I hope you will if you can) will you not offer your petitions with your morning prayer? Will you not show this letter to friends who are near you, and send it to some distant friends, especially, to the missionary in whom you are most interested. Would that it might in some way reach every Christian woman in the world! Would that each one would make these simple words a part of her life of prayer! "A morning prayer-watch for Christian women, viz:—"That the Church may be ready to meet her Lord. That we, and those we love, may at Christ's appearing be found in him. That God will send a mighty out-pouring of his spirit on all mankind.—Offer for all and especially for his dear children the following, "O God, who hast prepared for those who love thee such good things as pass man's understanding, pour into our hearts such love to thee, that we loving thee above all things, may obtain the promises, which exceed all that we can desire, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." Mal. iii. 17; Titus ii. 12; Peter iii. 1; Mark xiii. 6, 7.

Hesaias.(Isa. C. V.) Chap. 63.

1. Who is this one who hath come from out Edoom, with redness of outer-garments from Bosor? So timely-beautiful with flowing-robe, in might with strength? I am discoursing righteousness and a judicial-procedure that belongeth to an instrumental-salvation.

2. Why are thy outer-garments red and thy under-garments as though from treading a wine-press?

3. I am full of one that hath been trodden, and of the nations there is no man with me; and I have trodden them in my anger, and I have crushed them like earth, and I have let their blood down to earth.

4. For a day of repayment hath come unto them and a year of reasoning is present.

5. And I looked to see, and there was no responsive-helper; and I contemplated and no one intervened, and my arm hath delivered them, and my anger stood by.

6. And I have trodden them down in my wrath and led their blood down to earth.

7. The mercy of the Lord I remembered, the virtues of the Lord in all the ways in which he repayeth us; The Lord is a good Judge unto the house of Israel; he bringeth upon us according to his mercy and according to the plenitude of his righteousness:

8. And he hath said, Are they not my laity? Can offspring set aside? And he hath become unto them salvation;

9. From all their tribulation: Not an elder nor an angel, but he himself hath saved them because he loveth them and is sparing of them; He hath redeemed them and taken them up, and exalted them all the days of the animate-age.

10. But they have distrusted and provoked his sanctified spirit; and it hath been turned into enmity toward them; he hath warred against them.

11. And he hath recalled to mind age-lasting days; Where is he who conducted the shepherd of the sheep up from out the sea? Where is God in them, the Sanctified Spirit namely?

12. The One who led Mooses by the right-hand? He made water strong before his face to make for himself an age-lasting name.

13. And he led them through an abyssmal depth like a horse through a waste-place; and they did not toil wearily;

14. And like domestic-animals across a plain: spirit from the Lord came down and guided them; In this wise didst thou lead thy laity to make for thyself a name of glory.

15. Mayest thou have returned from out the heavens, and mayest thou have seen from out thy sacred house and from out thy glory; Where is thy zeal and thy strength? Where is the plenitude of thy mercy and of the feelings of thy pity, that thou hast withheld them from us?

16. For thou art our Father; Habraam did not know us, and Israel did not recognize us; but thou, O Lord, our Father, mayest thou have delivered us; From a beginning is thy name upon us.

17. Why didst thou let us go astray from thy way? Why didst thou harden our hearts so as not to fear thee? Mayest thou have returned for thy bond-servants' sake, for the sake of the tribes of thine inheritance.

18. That we may inherit a little of thy sacred Mount.

19. We have become as we were from a beginning, when thou didst not rule over us, nor was thy name called upon us.

CHAPTER 64.

1. If thou shouldst open the heavens, trembling from thee would lay hold of mountains and they would melt,

2. As wax from before the face of fire melteth; and fire would consume the adversaries, and thy name would be made manifest with the adversaries. From before thy face nations will have become terrified, whenever thou mayest do the glorious things; Trembling from thee will lay hold of mountains.

4. From the animate-age on we have not heard nor have our eyes seen a god except thee and the works which thou wilt do to those who wait for mercy.

5. For it will meet with those who do the right and they will have remembered thy ways. Lo, thou didst become wrathful and we were sinning; Therefore were we led astray;

6. And we all became as it were unclean; like a rag of one who sitteth apart was all our righteousness, and we were cast off like leaves because of our transgressions. In this wise will a wind bear us away;

7. And there is no one who invoketh thy name, and who remembereth to intervene for thee; because thou hast turned away thy face from us, and thou hast given us up because of our sins.

8. And now, O Lord, our Father art thou, and we are clay, all of us works of thy hands;

9. Be not exceedingly wrathful with us and in due time mayest thou not have remembered our sins; and now mayest thou have looked upon us, because we are all thy laity;

10. A city of thy sacred place hath become desolate. Sioon hath become like a desert, Hierousaleem for a curse.

11. Our sacred house and the glory which our fathers eulogized hath become burned with fire, and all our things of renown have fallen in ruins.

12. And notwithstanding all these things thou hast refrained, O Lord, and kept silence, and hast humbled us exceedingly.

COMMENT.

The 60th chapter is a vision of the new Hierousaleem and a glimpse of the glory of its inhabitants. How closely it agrees and correlates with the apocalyptic vision of John the Evangelist. With differences of detail the essential features are the same. Where then is the heavenly city to be? Here upon the earth or up in the mythical heaven? Is all this to be but eating and drinking and living a given place and land, as being the nations of the earth must? figurative language to be spiritually interpreted into nothing but psalm-singing, harp-playing and the waving of palm-branches to all eternity? I prithee not. Will not the sun and moon still be shining upon the earth here at that time, but their light rendered unnecessary here in this particular place by reason of the greater light of God's infinite glory? And is this not all typified in the pillar of cloud by day and fire by night which led God's people of old? Observe there is a royalty and a laity here spoken of besides "the nations" who are to acknowledge this loyalty and serve it as "bond-servants." The laity too are "all justified ones." Are "the nations" at this particular time here referred to also justified ones?

The 61st chapter is so clearly Messianic in its import and has been so emphatically endorsed in all the years and vicissitudes of Christianity, and having the imprimatur of Christ himself upon it in the familiar statement of the Evangelist. "This day hath this Scripture been fulfilled in your ears"—that no special comment perhaps is needed except to say that any fulfilment of a part of the prophecy herein contained implies an ultimate fulfillment of the whole, and that the Christ stopped as he did in the middle of a paragraph merely to indicate that only so much of the prophecy had been thus far fulfilled.

Commentators have tried to make out that all the rest of this wonderful prophecy must be taken as Eastern metaphor and must be interpreted "spiritually" as they put it, and starting with this premise, they argue that ecclesiastical and hierarchical Christianity as it has been in the past and is now being exemplified is the fulfillment here foretold and to be looked for. I wo[illegible]though.

The 62nd [illegible]pter is the Christian herald's rapture and embodies the great theme of the gospel as would the overture to a concerto of a great master of music—the exaltation of Sioon namely and the glory of Hierousaleem and the world as a consequence—"Mother Sioon," the mother of all the new humanity and all the earth—"the hope of Israel" in a word—Paul's hope, our hope if we have any well-grounded hope from the teachings of the Scripture Old and New.

The thought of the whole chapter while clothed in highly poetical language is nothing if not practical and in fact material and mundane. To my mind it is hypostasis not hypothesis, and the language of faith is always the language of hypostasis.

Read the chapter again with this thought uppermost in your mind and see if new light does not illuminate you.

Chapter 63rd is so familiar in its general import to every student of the Bible that beyond emphasizing the generally accepted fact of its Messianic significance. I shall say little except to call the reader's attention to the differences of translation when compared with the C. V. and R. V. The form of expression, as will be observed, is decidedly dramatic as far as the 7th verse. From the 7th to the 15th verse the subject-matter is didactic and a review of God's leading of his people in the past—as veiwed from God's standpoint. From the 15th to the 19th inclusive we have a Messianic votive-prayer instructive in the highest degree—and with this the chapter ends, but not the prayer.

The 64th chapter is a continuation of the votive-prayer with which the 63rd chapter ends or rather an individual and national confession of sins and justification of God's providential judgments and dealings with his people as far as the 8th verse, where the invocation is resumed and the petition for mercy repeated in view of their desolate and humiliated condition as described in the 10, 11 and 12 verses with which the chapter and the petition ends.

Announcement.

The 10th Annual gathering of the Church of God, of the Northwest Conference will be held at Scholls, Oregon, commencing Oct. 16, and continued over Sunday, Brethren from abroad, if they will inform us to that effect, will be met at the National Hotel, Portland, at one o'clock Friday. And now brethren, let me admonish you as a Sister in Christ, one who is looking and waiting for the Savior to come and claim his own, let this gathering be one to be remembered. "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no one shall see the Lord." Let no root of bitterness spring up between us whereby we might loose our birth-right. The time will soon come when such gatherings will be of the past. I often look back and think of those that were with us in our first conference. Where are they? Some are sleeping here at Mountain Side, some at other places, some are scattered, and like sheep have gone astray. Yet we feel to thank God that we have some old pioneers yet here at Scholls and in Vancouver, Washington, and our ranks here have been filled up by new recruits, for which we praise God the Father.

ALMIRA BROOKS, [illegible].

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Michigan, will convene (D. V.) at Coats Grove, Barry Co., Michigan, Friday evening Oct. 16th, 1896, and continue over the following Sunday. There are three trains each way daily at Coats Grove, by the C. K. and S. Railway. Going North reach Coats Grove at 7:38 a. m., 4:00 p. m., 10:20 a. m. Going South reach Coats Grove at 8:25 a. m., 4:40 p. m. 12:35 a. m. If there are any who wish to be met at Hastings they will please drop a postal to Bro. A. K. Richardson, of Coats Grove, Barry Co., Mich. There will be one or more good speakers to preach the gospel of salvation. It is not often that we are permitted to assemble in one body to shake hands, to cheer, and encourage one another, so let as many of us as can by as ideal all worldly cares for a few days and attend this conference, doing all in our power, both individually and collectively for the advancement of his cause. The brethren and sisters of that place have earnestly requested that the Conference might be held there, feeling that by our united effort much good might be done. All will be given a most cordial welcome. My prayer is that we will soon meet in the kingdom of God.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Gentle Words.

It take a long days of golden sun,
And many a drop of rain,
To start one flower from winter's blight,
To bud and bloom again.

It comes from out a trusting eye
We cause a tear to steal,
A hundred words of warm-set love
May not the anguish heal.

Then hurl no hasty, cruel shaft
To give another pain,
Let gentle words, like raindrops, swell
Cold hearts to life again.

Time of the End.

It is generally taken for granted that the time of the end is a short period of years immediately preceding the advent.

For some considerable time I have not been satisfied with this position, as it did not to my mind meet the requirements of the testimony.

The question arises, what is to be understood by the phrase, and what end is Scripturally contemplated?

It seems to me that only one answer can be made to this question, and that is the end of Israel's down-treading, which is coincident with the end of Gentile times. Israel is to be in a state of dispersion, and Jerusalem is to be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentile Supremacy is fulfilled, or comes to the end.

The time of the end therefore, is to be understood as pertaining to an epoch in the world's history when the Lord Jesus will be engaged in the work of delivering Israel from Gentile oppression, and in the mean time darkening the heavens of the Gentile world.

The second appearing of Christ is incidental to this period of time and yet it is necessary to consider that two comings are related to the time of the end.

First he comes as a thief, "in such an hour as you think not" to raise the responsible dead,—in fact to summon into his presence all the living and dead ones who are amenable to his authority by virtue of their having been made the recipients of his favor; and entrusted with his goods, even the true riches.

Second, he comes with clouds and every eye shall see him, in that he makes himself manifest to the world in power and great glory. These two comings must be kept distinctly in view while we are reading the prophetic testimony, else we are liable to great confusion. The resurrection of the dead ones, possibly may occur before the time of the end, or co-incident with its beginning, but the manifestation of Jesus and his saints afterward will surely be the most startling event of that time.

TIME OF THE END YET FUTURE.

While there is much transpiring in the world at the present time to indicate that the day of the Lord is incoming, yet it cannot be Scripturally affirmed that we are living in that wonder-working period termed the time of the end. The fulfillment of prophecy is a standing miracle to the wise, of all generations,—also a token of consolation. But the consummation that converts faith into fact, and the unseen things of hope, into visible realities is reserved for the time of the end.

WHEN DOES IT BEGIN?

In Dan. xi. 40—45, mention is made of the events that indicate with certainty its beginning. "And at the time of the end the king of the south shall push at him (king of the north) and the king of the north shall come against him (the king of the south) like a whirlwind with chariots and horsemen and many ships and shall overflow and pass over." etc The greater part of Dan. xi. is devoted to a prophetic history of the king of the north and of the south as related to Israel and their land. Egypt is always the king or kingdom of the south, but for over two thousand years Egypt has not been an identified kingdom. In the days of Augustus Cesar it became a province of the Roman Empire, and in the 7th century it passed under the Mahometans and at this moment it is nominally under the Sultan of Turkey. Before the time of the end is current Egypt as the king of the south must be revived, and in all probability become the civil head of the Mahometan world. The Sultan's palace may be transferred from the Dardanelles to the banks of the Nile, and being occupied by the king of Egypt, Cairo and not Constantinople will become the seat of empire for all the Mahometan nations. Egypt will then be fully revived as the king of the south, and the time of the end at hand.

This work pertaining to Egypt is now rapidly going on. England for some years has been in Egypt building up and restoring. She has already made great progress, and at this moment she is conducting a campaign for the purpose of subjecting the Soudan, and bringing all Upper Egypt under rule and dominion of the Khedive.

Jehovah is using Great Britain as the instrumentality for preparing not only Egypt for its latter day mission, but also for closing the preliminary work necessary to the colonization of Israel in their own land. Events to this end have not yet fully materialized; but sufficient has already transpired to warrant us in looking for speedy developments in this direction.

With Egypt as the king of the south revived and in her place the way is open for the fulfillment of the prophets words,—the pushing or hostile demonstration against the king of the north, at the time of the end.

JEWISH TRIBULATION.

The time of Jacob's trouble will culminate at or in this critical period, and just at the moment when there is "no one to help," the Lord himself comes to the rescue and smites the king of the north near Bozra the capital of Edom, Isa. lxiii. 5. This is doubtless why "Edom and Moab and the chief of Ammon escape out of his hand," See Dan. xi. that is out of the hand of the king of the north.

DARKENING OF THE SUN AND MOON.

That there will be great physical disturbances and perturbations at this time is evident from certain Scriptures, and particularly Zech. xiv. where the Mount of Olives is said to be divided, and moved out of its place by an earthquake. Nevertheless I am inclined to think that the darkening of the sun and moon, and the falling stars is a figurative representation of the political and ecclesiastical revolution that follows immediately after the days of Israel's tribulation are ended. Space will not permit to give the reasons for this conclusion in this paper.

TIME OF TROUBLE.

The time of the end initiates the coming struggle for the Empire of the east, and in fact for the world. Israel for a time will be in great distress, but their deliverance will be as speedy and completed as it will be unexpected and disastrous to their oppressor. "At that time shall Michael stand up the great prince which standeth for the children of thy (Daniel's) people and there shall be a time of trouble such as there never was, since there was a nation, even to that same time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered." Dan. xii. 1–3. In connection with this particular time, of deliverance to Israel as a nation there occurs some other events that will be still more astounding to a faithless generation of the Adamic race,—viz the awakening of dead ones, some to the life of the age, and some to the shame and contempt of the age. The life of the age will be an exalted and glorious existence for those accounted worthy of it. Concerning this class it is further declared "they that be wise shall shine as the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

Here, then, is a firmament that will never be shrouded in darkness, and here are stars that will never fall from the heavens, as a "fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when shaken by a mighty wind." The old heavens and earth will have passed away, their sun and moon will never be darkened and a new order of things will have taken their place.

In conclusion permit me to say how thankful we should be that our Creator has condescended to make known to us his purpose—sharing with us a knowledge of future events, and how appreciative we ought to be of his Word. Moreover, how vigilant we should be to educate ourselves to think and feel in harmony with what he purposes to do in this earth and with the Adamic race.

Great things—precious things await those who are fitted and made worthy of them. "They shall walk with me in white because they are worthy." It is not a question of building up a church—a cause or a name in the earth, but rather a question of salvation. We cannot afford to overlook this fact, nor have our minds distracted and divided as to things pertaining to the reforms and schemes of men in these modern times, who seek in vain to better the condition of men without the wisdom of God.

GEO. MOYER.

Patriotism.

No Christian, philosopher, scientist or true philanthropist is bound by the narrow limits of patriotism, for these work for humanity at large, and seek responsive minds regardless of race or nationality.

No historian, poet, ethical teacher or public instructor can rise above mediocrity, or found a broad reputation who works for a section as against justice and truth.

The word patriot is not found in Scripture. Jesus left his own people when refused and turned to the Gentiles, i. e. foreigners.

No Christian has learned wisdom until he can imitate Christ, and rise superior to racial or national prejudice.

Patriotism is founded on ignorance and selfishness. As generally understood it is an obstacle to human welfare that Jesus sought to abolish—"Get thee out from thy country and from thy kindred," was God's mandate to Abraham. Moses was exiled to Midian. Joseph was separated from land and kindred to teach the first principle to broad humanity. The parable of the good Samaritan illustrated the lesson, and in one day the negro or the Chinaman would have replaced the Samaritan.

Neither Washington nor Lincoln were mere patriots, they combatted in the cause of the suffering of all tribes and nations. Not merely for a small section; it would be unjust to assume they would have upheld their native soil in a wrongful cause.

Patriotism segregates men into warring clans with opposing interests and engenders animosity, and uncharity.

Lee was a true patriot. He deserted his colors and the government he had sworn to uphold, simply because he preferred the place of his birth. The same principle would have compelled him to betray the Confederacy in the interests of his own State and that, in turn, had the interests of his native town demanded his services. It was not a case of right or wrong with him, but simply of location.

"My country (state or city) right or wrong" was the motto that induced Stonewall Jackson (a professing Christian) to uphold slavery as against the Christian edict, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The man who boasts that he has always voted his "straight party ticket" is a self-confessed traitor, because he has sold his birth-right into the hands of a party, and necessarily votes at times for undeserving candidates, and as the franchise is conferred on the supposition that every citizen will vote only in the interests of the general welfare, after conscientious consideration, he really deserves to be disfranchised for betraying his trust.

The tendency of patriotism is to reduce men's sympathies to narrow limits, even restricting means. Christianity on the other hand strives to broaden men's charity, until it recognizes the fraternity of all God's children.

All outside the patriots' charmed circle are beyond the pale of his sympathy, all within are to be upheld even at the sacrifice of honor and justice.

The lodges, secret societies and sects are the logical result of this process. Our country, our state, our city, our lodge, the inner circle of that lodge, and lastly the individual himself is the descending scale of this system.

Christianity reverses the process and teaches self-sacrifice in the interest of others, as the primal step. "Love your enemies," bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you." Is a law that would disrupt the secret societies of the world if practically enforced.

Men confederate in lodges and unions not to benefit society at large, but to promote their personal selfish interests.

The working men's unions do nothing for those outside, but are, on the contrary, their most uninteresting opponents, and never fail to rest them from their positions whenever possible. This is, with them, a necessity of self-interest, and alone is sufficient to brand them as unchristian—it may be business, but it is not Christianity, and hence the edict, "Lay ye not a confederacy to all them to whom this people shall say (i. e. suggest or propose) a confederacy." They trust in the arm of the flesh, and not in the arm of the Lord.

The profier of the lodge is a direct appeal to the most selfish interests of men; its good offices are entirely confined to the brotherhood and promises them support (often unjust support) against all outside combination.

The Israelites were commanded to look afar off from the heathen among whom they sojourned.

We have disobeyed the command and taken the heathen to our hearts, and exalted them to places of honor and trust among us, and the result is we have not benefited them morally, but have ourselves deteriorated and partaken of their sins. We have sold our birth-right for a mess of pottage. We have sown to the wind and now begin to reap the whirlwind, and it is probable our forefathers would be the foremost in condemning us.

The duty of the Christian is clear—hold aloof from all such ways, trust in the Lord and walk in the old paths; some day the long-suffering of the Lord will be ended, and his vials of wrath will be emptied to the dregs on this stiffnecked and rebellious people.

"My son, walk not in the way with them; refrain thy foot from their path; for their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood."

"Trust in the Lord with all thy heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him and he shall direct thy paths."

"Turn not to the right or to the left; remove thy foot from evil."

"The wise shall inherit glory, but shame shall be the promotion of fools."

H. T. BAKER.

Election Problems.

"At the present time there is much excitement over the political election, and much interest is felt in the outcome of the campaign. And as politics is the science of government it is even right that Christians should feel an interest in the administration of the government under which they live. Yet, while this is so, it is an easy matter to yield to the excitement of the campaign controversy, and thus have the higher and better interests of the Christian life eclipsed by the exciting occasions through which the country is passing. It should be the Christian's aim to engage in nothing that would endanger his spirituality; every other consideration should be held secondary. David said: "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem." While Paul admonishes that prayers be made for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

There is an "elect lady" in which the children of God may and should engage with all their might, and strive hard to win. The Apostle Peter exhorts us to "make your calling and election sure." So there is a position to which we may honorably aspire, and may also secure it, and if we do this we shall never fall; but we shall have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Thus far we have followed closely the words of the Sabbath Advocate which I presume all will agree are [illegible] and timely. Now for a few pr[illegible]estions.

Did not t[illegible]overnment consent to de[illegible] of God, and many of his [illegible]because they were good, and [illegible]d they testified that the works thereof were evil? Did not Jesus say unto the chief priests and captains of the temple who were to come out to take him, "This is your hour and the power of darkness?" Did Jesus or his apostles ever deign to affiliate with the so-called civil authorities who were ever ready to punish and condemn them to death? Why has God seen fit to represent the civil governments of earth by cruel and ferocious beasts? And has not God's people, the ancient worthies suffered untold miseries and martyrdom at the hands of those blood thirsty beasts? Read Hebrews eleven. Has not your own observations and recent investigations proved to a demonstration that our own beloved government is rotten to the core? It is generally admitted to be corrupt and rotten and getting worse and worse. Then, how can you, my brother, think of working with and for Cæsar and the world, and not be of the world? Is our calling and election secured? But says one, the Christians ought to lay hold and try to renovate and purify the political atmosphere. Pshaw! They have been doing what they could at this, and no light house yet in sight. And I would as soon think of pouring out a bucket of pure clear water into the big muddy to purify its waters. Can we follow Peter's instructions and thus make our "calling and election sure," and at the same time work hard day and night to insure the election of some political aspirant to a big round lot salary of fifty thousand dollars a year, while the toiling millions groan and suffer for bread and clothing? Then how can we tell which string to pull to make peace and plenty? Millions are pulling and toiling and praying, not for the "peace of Jerusalem," not for God's kingdom to come, but for the success of the party. Can we invite Jesus to accompany us to the secret lodges and to the polls? If not, let us not go. The churches are all fast drifting away from their first love, and have become pleasure lovers, and lovers of money. Remember what Paul says of these things. The great cry is money, more money, and more fun and pleasure.

While the wise man advises us to get wisdom, the principal thing, "and with all our getting get understanding." Jesus has warned us over and over against the danger of seeking and striving and fretting after the things relating to this life. Where our treasures are, [illegible] hearts and our affections will be also, and out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks. Paul says that he glories in the cross of Christ, which crucifies him to the world, and the world to him. And I would to God brethren, that we could all say as much, and tell the truth.

A lonely traveler.

T. E. ADAMS.

Exhortation.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. Without natural affections, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." 2 Tim. iii. 1-5.

What a vivid picture of our times, covetousness, human greed is one of the prevailing passions of our day. The question now is, not, "Is this business honest and legitimate," but "How much money is there in it?" Or how much pleasure is there in it? "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." We are in the midst of a pleasure loving age. The railroads and steamboat facilities are such that by a regular arranged system any desired pleasure resort can be reached, and the large churches even in our cities when the Sunday excursion is announced will be nearly emptied of its pleasure loving worshipers, even among those who believe the precious promises, and are looking for the return of the Bridegroom. In many instances there is great lack of true devotion, and genuine love of worship. Add home visiting on Sunday to the love of other pleasures and we have the two greatest drawbacks to the advancement of truth. They little realize the great wrong they are doing, and will say boldly, "It is no one's business whether I go to church, stay at home or visit. "Ready (or stubborn) high-minded lovers of their own selves," bent on having their own pleasures, even though the church should go down in their midst, they are visiting, gossiping, finding fault with the minister, wondering why the meetings are not more interesting, and why the speaker has not more earnestness in his work. Could they but realize it they have visited the life out of him. He has often prepared fine sermons, that have taken perhaps hours of work when they were sleeping. Inspired with a love of truth, and to meet the needs of his congregation, he starts for church, meeting with a few earnest ones. Asking where brother or sister —— are they not coming today? No, they were just driving out as we came along, and said they were going to Mr. C.'s today. Where is the Deacon. O, they had company; and brother and sister K. were tired and stayed at home to rest. The minister's spirits begin to sink—he came from home almost sick, feeling but determined to do the Lord's work. He ascends the pulpit, heavy-hearted, enthusiasm all gone, looking out upon empty seats, he is ready to go home and send in his resignation. Is it no one's business, dear ones, whether you have visited and gossiped, or helped hold up the banner of the cross. Yes; it is God's business, and you as a part of the body of Christ will have much to answer for when we all stand before the Judge, and the book of life is opened. O, let us all awaken from this sound sleep, so unconscious of danger awaiting us, how the words will ring out, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended and I am lost." "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man." Then let us give all diligence to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity (love). If these things be in us and abound we shall never fall. But an abundant entrance will be ministered unto us into his everlasting kingdom. O, let us ask ourselves the question seriously, Will it be said of us in that auspicious day, that final decision from which there is no appeal, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord."

Yours working for the good of mankind.

B. W. WOODWARD.

The dark cloud, while it scatters the lightning and spreads abroad the tempest in its course, refreshes the burning earth, and makes it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater. Affliction, which rises not from the ground, but cometh, like the cloud, from heaven, afterward yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto those who are exercised thereby.

The day of sunshine soon will dawn—
Bright day that knows no night;
Earth's shadows all will vanish, fade,
Before the glory-light.
Oh, look away beyond earth's mists,
Beyond this life of care,
And view by faith the "summer land,"
The golden city fair!

Are as pebbles in the sea.

"THE word of God is a sufficient witness to itself.

VICE stings even in its pleasures,—but virtue consoles even in pain.

A MAN must be thoroughly convinced of unbelief before he can truly believe.

NEWTON says zeal without knowledge is like expedition to a man in the dark.

READER, do you realize that you are living in the consequences of past actions, and that our future depends upon present actions?

"THE Wise man says, "Men do not despise a thief if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry. Surely hunger can never be experienced by an incorruptible immortal soul.

"Unless a man has trained himself for his chance, the chance will only make him ridiculous. A great occasion is worth to a man exactly what his antecedents enable him to make of it."

GOETHE said:

"What I don't see
Don't trouble me;
And what I see
Might trouble me,
Did I not know,
That it must be so."

"IF God even numbers the hairs of our heads,—if he takes notice of hair, than which nothing seems so lifeless and worthless that we cut and throw away—a mere appendage or fringe, what notice must God take of our thoughts and actions."

"Truthful how superb is the treasure!
Teach us, Lord, its worth to know;
Vain the hope and short the pleasure
Which from other sources flow.

"Praise to him, by whose kind favor
Heavenly truth has reached our ears;
May its sweet reviving savor,
Fill our hearts and calm our fears."

SAYS the apostle, "The love of Christ constraineth us," to love. The laying down of his life was the Son's declaration of the Father's righteousness. His resurrection from the dead is the Father's declaration of his Son's righteousness, that God may be just and the justifier of them that believe." Rom. iii. 25.

WE recently found a paragraph which said respecting prayer, "It is not truth nor philosophy to say that prayer alters nothing, that the laws of nature are fixed, and that entreaty cannot change them. The laws of nature are fixed on purpose to be for the granting of prayer. Any man can use the laws of nature to grant the requests of his child. Does he say that God who made those laws cannot do as much with them as he can?"

2. Regeneration.—"It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." John vi. 63; John iii. 5, 6, 7; Acts ii. 38.

BRETHREN and Sisters all,—Events with trumpet call summon us to our post with every faculty awake, and every energy engaged. Amidst the din of business, of politics, of science and of fashion,—amid jests of laughter, the eloquence of orators and the clamor of parties, our voices will not be heard unless we speak loudly,—nor listened to unless we speak earnestly; we shall make no headway against error and irreligion unless we put forth all our strength. The banner of light will be overborne and trampled down if we do not exert ourselves to hold it aloft.

THEY tell us matter cannot think, and yet the London Spectator tells the following true story:—"A collie in Scotland that I knew well, was in the habit of fetching from his master's room, slippers, cap, keys, or anything he sent for. One day he was sent on the usual errand and did not return. His master followed and found that the door of the bedroom had blown to, and made the dog a prisoner. Some days later he was again told to fetch something, and, as the wind was high his master after a few minutes delay, followed him. He found him in the act of fixing the door firmly back with the door mat, which he had rolled up for the purpose: and having taken this precaution, the prudent animal proceeded to look for the slippers. This same collie, when walking with me, ran in front and rang the door bell of the house to which I was going, so that I had not to wait when I arrived there."

"SOME people think there is nothing in the world so hard as that they are not so high [illegible] now as they used to be. "What is the trouble, friend: can't you walk down the [illegible]?" "Oh yes." "Can't you procure [illegible] to eat?" "Oh yes." "Ha[illegible] shelter?" "Yes, I have." "[illegible]ss?" "Well, yes." "Can't you [illegible]ng comfortably?" "Yes; but they used to live in a four-story house, and move in higher society, and my children are not where I intended they should be." Mum! If God is your Father, all things are yours, wait awhile. You can afford to stand in the valley now, with uplifted head."

THE Nobleman is still absent in the far country, but he has left us his name. The gospel must be preached in the name, and the believer baptized into the name, He is the Head of the Body, its representative, its mediator and intercessor. Believers live under his covenant. Being baptized into his death they become intimately connected with his testament; they are dead and their life is hid with him in God. Do we fully realize that God's official look is on Christ, only, and that we are baptized into Christ as the true ark, and must remain shut in till the indignation be overpast. What a thought! the imperfections of the Christed ones are covered by the Christ!

"CHRISTIANITY is earnest life-work. As electricity permeates steel, so it permeates every department of life. It gives an impulse to every noble quality. It makes toil honest and cheerful. It gives courage in sorrow and fortitude in affliction. It makes a new man of the old. It throws meaning and grandeur into every act of duty and benevolence. It makes men tender-hearted and kind. It makes the careworn and weary patient. It makes the Judge Just, the merchant honest, the servant faithful, the student diligent, the wealthy generous, the poor industrious, the strong helpful; and besides all this, it lights up the heart of the dying saint with hopeful flashes of immortality and eternal life. Reader, what more do you want?"

To wait is to rest in expectation of some person or thing, or event. Stand near a central Depot in a large city and you will see men hurrying and sweating, and looking at their watches, and shifting their satchels from one hand to the other, and then trying to run a few yards. They are not waiting for the train. They are hoping the train will wait for them. Go toward the ticket office and you will see others who were ahead of time. They have purchased their tickets and are calmly waiting. They are ready. As soon as the gates are opened they walk in and take a seat in one of Nahum's chariots and are soon rolling on toward their objective point. Reader, are you waiting for Jesus? That means are you ready to meet him.

A GODLY person is by no means exempt from the danger of suffering by the crimes of others. Even his good-of heart may raise him enemies. The Godly man's instructions may be defeated by perverseness, and his kindness rejected by ingratitude,—he may languish under the infamy of false accusations or perish reproachfully by an unjust sentence; he is subject like other mortals to all influences of natural evil; his harvest is not spared by the tempest, nor his cattle by the murrian, his house flames like others in a conflagration; nor have his ships any peculiar power of resisting hurricanes,—he bears about him the seeds of disease, and may linger away a great part of his life under the tortures of rheumatism or gout at one time groaning with anguish, at another dissolved in listlessness and languor.

"THE penalties attached to the violation of natural laws are invariably and immediately executed. Fire will burn, and water will drown. Look out, loved ones! You have no right to pray the Father to save you from the result of wilful folly. While you trust him for things beyond our power we must do our part and use the understanding and the manhood we are endowed with. Put your shoulder to the wheel, instead of calling on Jupiter to help. If there be no recognition of the will and power of manhood by God, there can be no true covenant relation. Each party must do his part. "They that honor me I will honor."

"THE thinkings of the flesh based upon self-love would be very glowing and plausible were it not for the "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Self-love is so very natural. But the photograph of what God would have self to be, is in the Word. Let the Word shine inward, giving the image of the future perfected self, so that beholding, as in a gloss the the glory of the Lord, we may be changed into the same image from glory to glory as by the Lord. This was beautifully illustrated in a discourse at the Indiana conference recently by Bro. Wines. When the search light of the Word is turned on, self-love becomes very odius.

POPULAR teachers say that a crown is given when the immortal soul appears in heaven. It is written "that when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory!" Col. iii. 4.

POPULAR teachers say that Christ comes to us at death, and then we go home to him in glory. It is written "that the quick and the dead will be judged by Christ at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. iv. 1.

POPULAR teachers say that instantly after death the soul appears before the judgement seat of God, thus destroying the cardinal truths of Scripture as contained in Rev. 11: 15—18. It is written that when Christ shall come in his glory, then will he reward every man according to his works. Matt. xvi. 27; Rev. xi. 18.

POPULAR teachers say that Christ has gone to sit upon the throne of his glory in heaven. It is written, that those who overcome shall sit down with Christ in His throne, even as he overcame and sat down with his Father in his throne.

If and How.

If God "only hath immortality" how can you believe that man is immortal? 1 Tim. vi. 15–16.

If man is mortal, how can he be at the same time immortal? Job iv. 7.

If those who desire eternal life are to seek for immortality by a patient continuance in well doing, how can it be in possession of all men? Rom. ii. 7.

If eternal life is the gift of God, how is it possible for it to be the natural outfit of all men? Rom. vi. 23.

If immortality is not put on until the resurrection of the dead, how say some that man is in possession of it before he dies? 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54.

If you believe that man dies and wastes away, how can you believe the serpent's lie, that "Thou shalt not surely die?" Job xiv. 10.

If none can keep alive his own soul, how wicked it is to affirm that we have a never-dying soul to save? Ps. xxii. 9.

If David more than a thousand years after his death had not ascended to heaven, how can he be in heaven now? Acts ii. 29, 34.

If there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest, how goest thou to heaven, and how sayest thou:—

"And when my voice is lost in death,
Praise shall employ my nobler powers?"
Eccl. ix. 10.

Scripture Axioms Respecting Money.

1. Giving is the easiest way of getting. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."

2. God is the sovereign proprietor of money. "The silver is mine and the gold is mine."

3. We are accountable both for our own and for that intrusted to us by others. "What hast thou, that thou hast not received?"

4. Judgement is required in the distribution of it. "Do good to all, but especially to the household of faith."

5. There are few mischiefs that are not remotely or intimately connected with covetousness. "The love of money is the root of all evil."

6. Money ought not to be made to minister to self-indulgence, while the interests of religion can be promoted by means of it. "Woe to them that live in ceiled houses, while the Lord's house is not built."

7. The poorest man may give a something with acceptance. "This poor widow hath given all she had."

8. Persons of real worth are sometimes destitute of money. "Then John answered, Silver and gold have I none."

9. True enjoyment is not to be found in wealth. "He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver."

10. Every man should punctually discharge his pecuniary debts. "Owe no man anything, but love one another."

Ecclesiastes ix. 7–10.

We take it that we have before us in this chapter directions for a joyous life of one who has chosen God for his portion. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy,—and drink thy wine with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy works. Go thy way—enjoy thy mercies while you have them. Melancholy is a libel upon religion. What ground for melancholy has the man or woman who has a lively hope anchored within the veil? He rejoices even in the midst of heaviness. A sinner has no right to complain and the saint supported by divine strength, favor and consolation has no reason to complain. He looks upon these temporal blessings as coming from God, and really has the largest enjoyment of earthly blessings, because it is hallowed, sanctified enjoyment, so to speak. He alone has the true means of enjoying creature comforts who is accepted of God in the beloved. No ones religion makes him gloomy. If a professor is gloomy it is caused by a lack of religion. If the gospel is glad tidings we must not belie our profession by hanging our heads like bulrushes. We should ever cherish a spirit of thankfulness for present blessings, and in order to cultivate that spirit we should take account of the mercies flowing in upon us from day to day. I think Solomon must have written the rule in the 9th verse with a most poignant pang, in the recollection of his own awful violation of the rule to "Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest, all the days of the life of thy vanity,—that is all the days of his mortal life,—a single undivided love,—so contrary to the unrestrained lust he had indulged.

The next rule is one to stimulate vital energy. There are works to be done,—difficulties to be overcome, talents to be traded with,—the whole might to be engaged. In truth, man's wisdom in this fleeting, transitory state consists in cheerfully using present comforts and diligently attending to present duties. Every moment brings its own responsibilities, and the rule for discharging them is this: "Whatsoever thine hand findeth to do do it with thy might." Obviously some limitation is implied. What we are admonished thus to do must be in its nature lawful and right. The hand might find to do what God has forbidden. And this, instead of being done with might, must not be done at all. That which occasion calls for in the line of duty and of providence, is the thing to be done. And this direction finds its place in the apostolic code—Not slothful in business, Rom. xii. 11. But I think the main sphere for this important rule is work for the future, the working out of our own salvation. Phil. ii. 12. The purchase price binds us to work under the most constraining obligation; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are God's. So that the body is not the irresponsible thing it is represented. The fact is we cease to be our own from the moment we are bound to God. And here in his work is where our might is needed,—all our might; might flowing from the fountain of might. There is no allusion here to great things to be done at some future time. It is present energy,—the work of the present moment,—the instant sacrificial,—the whole hearted service. Would it not be well to make this a daily text? set it before us every morning—the first hour—What have I to do today? What duty? What work of love? What talent to be employed? What service does God call me to do to-day? What will thou have me to do? The more rigorous the exercise the more strength. Every step supplies the strength. The way of the Lord is strength to the upright. How is it communicated? Why, they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. Said our Great Example, I must work the work of him that sent me while it is day. Here was doing with his might—the motive was also the same,—"The night cometh when no man can work." "There is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest." We cannot do our undone duties then.

Passing Events.

From all appearances the end of the Turkish dominion is close at hand. Since our last article under this head was compiled from European papers, events have developed rapidly in the East. All over the Turkish Empire there is discontent and rebellion, and the Sultan is powerless to stop the anarchy in his territories.

First and foremost among the changes that will take place when the Ottoman Empire ceases to exist, will be the release of Palestine from the heavy and iniquitous hand of the bribe-taking Turks to Pashas. Then the land so long trodden down will become fertile again. The Jew will have a chance to live in the ancient land of his race.

That Turkey's end is near is apparent from the remarks of the leading papers of the day. The Times says, "Scenes like that of last week inevitably lend as the Ambassadors plainly told the Sultan, to endanger his empire."

The Daily News declares that Europe is face to face with the deposition of the Sultan, and the partition of Turkey.

The Standard urges that the representative of civilized nations could not have done less than they have done. At the same time those who are urging Russia to make an end of Turkey, might be leading her into a position of great peril, and preparing for Europe horrors worse than the massacres in Constantinople.

The Manchester Guardian says the reforms will never be carried out so long as the Sultan perceives that the jealousies of the powers prevent them from acting in accord. An entente cordiale between Russia, France and England, if such be possible, affords the only solution for the Macedonian question, indeed for the far greater question, the preservation of the peace of Europe. Peace of Europe indeed! This peace will very soon be broken, and such a war as will take place as few probably are little aware of.

The Daily News says: Prince Lobanoff with a cynicism which was at least candid, pronounced that Russia had nothing to do with the Christian subjects of the Sultan in Armenia. He doubtless reflected that it was a great way from St Petersburg to Van, that the day of reckoning would be long in coming if it ever came, that it mattered not to the high and mighty of the earth whether 20,000 or 30,000 Christians perished in Asiatic Turkey. But there are higher rules than those of diplomatic precedent, and there is a mightier potentate than the Emperor of Russia. The structure upon which Prince Lobanoff so laboriously worked has gone down like a house of cards. Future is written large upon the counsels of a purblind selfishness, and the conceit of Europe is the laughingstock of the honest humble folk who still believe in the moral governments of the world.

Some of the powers, notably Austria, in their desire to prevent the collapse of the Turkish Empire proposed a naval blockade if Crete in order to cut off supplies and reinforcements from Greece, with a view to facilitate the suppressive measures of the Turks. But Lord Salisbury has positively refused to join in any measures which have for their object the maintainance of the Turkish Empire excepting those which would radically reform its administration. Bolstering up Turkey is now ended. Her doom is pronounced, her end is near.

Truly the events of the past month have been full of hope to those who are looking forward to the return of the Lord Jesus. They know that previous to his return the Turkish Empire has to be ended, there are to be wars and rumors of wars and troublous times, men's hearts failing them for fear, not knowing what is next to appear on the earth.

Said the Master, "When ye see these things coming to pass, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." The servants of God can rejoice and look to the near future for the realization of their hopes, when the shadows of the long night of misrule shall have passed away.

No matter how small sin may appear in the beginning, it touches, by way of opposition and conflict, every attribute of the Divine character.

Report of Meetings.

Dear Restitution:

Bro. D. M. Hudler began meeting at the Union Church, on Thursday evening, Oct. 1, and preached to a small congregation; and on Friday night and Saturday night to a full house on "The Nature and Destiny of Man," holding his hearers almost spellbound one hour. On Sunday he gave them an interesting sermon on "The Kingdom;" in the evening a sermon on "The Necessity of Preaching both to the World and to the Church, lest its members fall back into lethargy and forgetfulness, and thus become fruitless and finally loose their reward of eternal life." The house at night was crowded to suffocation, all knowing that it was Bro. Hudler's farewell sermon. He had the best of attention and good order all through the meeting. Bro. Hudler has been with us for three years and is a worthy brother, and an able speaker. For a while East Plum River, Union Church and Pleasant Valley will not have regular preaching.

S. P. RENNER.

Editor Restitution:

Bro. R. A. Humphreys has been with us here at Hammond, La., holding meetings for ten days. The attendance was mostly small, but we are thankful that there still a few who are not too much tied up with the traditions of the churches to listen to the gospel of the kingdom of God; and we are all glad to know that one young man and his wife decided to come out on the Lord's side, and were buried with him by baptism into his death: that like as Christ was raised up from dead by the glory of the Father, even so they also should walk in newness of life. There are others who are searching the Scriptures to see if those things are so, and we hope that before long they too will decide to cast their lot with the little flock.

Yours waiting for the Master,

ALBERT SIGLE.

Editor Restitution:

Bro. John Foore of Tempe, Arizona, recently visited San Diego and preached some discourses, bringing together a number of God's children who are in harmony with the first principles of the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ, and who are looking for eternal life through the Life-Giver as a result. These believers have consolidated and hold meetings every Sunday at 11 o'clock A. M. in Grand Army Hall, where a very profitable time is spent, and from which we expect through God's blessing much good shall come.

Yours Fraternally,

HENRY NEALE.

Editor Restitution:

Church of God at Niagara Falls, N. Y. comes to you with greetings. Eld. B. W. and Mary A. Woodward have just closed a series of meetings of over three weeks, preaching the last sermon Sunday evening, Oct. 11th. Much good has been done in numerous ways. One sister put on Christ by burial in baptism. The seed, the gospel of the kingdom, has been well sown. Our heavenly Father only knows when and where. Paul planted, Apollos watered and God gave the increase. "Ye that make mention of the Lord keep not silence." Isa. lxii. 6. Brother and Sister Woodward have not kept silence, but have planted, others will water, and in due time God will show the increase. We have been built up spiritually and Scripturally, the meetings have benefitted each and every one, and we have felt it was good to be there. They have a happy way of getting the brethren and sisters to work in social meetings by prayer and testimonies. Just before their arrival we helped a brother put on Christ by baptism and feel assured the Lord is with us, though we have much opposition from the same class of people, who persecuted our Lord and Master. He said if they will persecute me, they will persecute you also. They enmonly persecute with their tongues, but God will make it abound to his honor and glory. It will be the means of making others see we stand on Scriptural ground. Bro. and Sister Woodward's vigorous and Scriptural talk induced the brethren and sisters to get together and organize the Church of God here on a good Scriptural foundation. Two elders, two deacons, secretary and treasurer were elected, and we start with thirty-eight names from about here and abroad. Several brothers and sisters from different points of the compass were met for the first time, making us think of what the Lord said to Elijah, "I have left 7,000 that have not bowed their knee to Baal." We regret the departure of Bro. and Sister Woodward to their home, if they were able to remain a little longer we feel assured some of the outside prejudice could be rubbed off. Our prayers and love go with them, and if we may not meet again, may we all be able to meet together in the kingdom is the prayer of the little flock at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Yours in the Master's service,

FRED GREENE.

Poetry.

Life's Pilgrimage.

In dim, uncertain, winding ways
Our feet are oftimes led;
On husks and food that give no strength
Our souls are oftimes fed.
The wild, unceasing din of earth
Disturbs the inner calm;
The wormwood and the gall pollute
The honey and the balm.

The darkness and the gloom are felt,
The weariness and pain;
And thirsty souls long for the full
Of promised "latter rain."
This mortal life is not all joy
The perfect is to come,
When saints behold with beaming eyes
Their long-sought "harvest home."

Communicated.

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 16.

First Proposition:

Resolved: The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unwinding state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

Paul visited Paradise. What he saw and heard was wonderful. He identifies it with the third heaven. 2 Cor. xii.

Paradise was in existence while Paul was on earth. Moreover, Paul believed that a man could see and hear while he was outside his body. One who believes Eld. Wilson's theory must practically say that Paul was talking through his hat. For in that chapter Pauls shows that a man may be outside the body, that when outside the body he is transported to Paradise, that there he can receive strange and abundant revelations, then return to the body. Read the chapter, then tell me if you believe it and the theory that the spirit of man is his breath, and his soul dies with his body.

In Rev. vi. 8. Death went out to slay men. Hades followed. They divided the spoil. Death took the body, Hades the soul. In xx. 13 these two disgorged, gave up the dead in them. In i. 18, Jesus says he has the keys of death and Hades. Jesus will conquer both. Then will be heard the victor's song. 1 Cor. xv. 55, "O death, where is thy sting?" "O Hades, where is thy victory?" This is taken from Hosea, and its fulfilment is predicted in Rev. xx. 14, for death and Hades are to end.

How beautifully these representations harmonize with the sober warning given by Jesus (Matt. x., Luke xii.) that God could do what man cannot, i. e., destroy the soul. To this class belongs Peter's statement Acts ii., that the flesh of Jesus did not see corruption, nor was his soul left in Hades, and Jesus saying distinguishing between his spirit and his dead body. "I will raise it."

Then consider the promise of Jesus to the penitent thief, and believe if you can, that Jesus and Paul could talk of Paradise as real and existing, but the negative has been called of God to correct their error. Then Luke xvi., where Jesus proves that that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination before God. The estimation of men extends to the end of life, Jesus sweeps aside the veil and for a moment discloses the unseen. There the rich man has become a beggar, Lazarus is blessed.

The negative explains Matt. x. 28 as meaning that man can kill the soul life, but not the eternal life. God can destroy the eternal life. How could God destroy the eternal life for a man who did not have it? The negative has consistently and Scripturally said that the unbeliever does not have eternal life. So God could not destroy eternal life in him. Yet those are the very ones whose soul he will destroy after the body is destroyed. They are the ones who fear man rather than God. "Fear not them who kill the soul, but fear him who can kill the eternal life," is what Jesus said, or meant? A child understands Jesus' saying, but no man can comprehend the interpretation afforded by the negative. How could eternal life be destroyed in hell? Eternal life is a condition, not a person, nor a thing.

There can be no advance in investigation if no attention is paid to important answers to arguments, while the arguments are repeated as if never answered. The negative quoted passages showing that the wicked are to be destroyed. The affirmative answered "destruction is not annihilation, the tree cut up by the root and burned is destroyed as a tree, but not a particle is annihilated. The lost sheep and the lost son of Luke xv., are both said to have been destroyed, but neither was annihilated, nor even physically dead. The negative pays no attention to this Scriptural example, but repeats texts which speak of the destruction of the wicked and assumes the very point in dispute, i. e., that destruction means annihilation of conscious existence.

So with demons. The weak and the inadequate answer to the strong testimony from the world of evil spirits is that it was lunacy, and Jesus accommodated himself to the errors of the people. That is he taught them that he was casting out demons, when he did not. The apostles did not find it out, but the negative has, and so corrects our Lord and the twelve. But the affirmative showed that it could not be lunacy, if we have confidence in the New Testament.

How could seven demons be in one person, if it were simply a disordered brain. How could a legion, at least two thousand, be said to be in one man, and leave him and enter into swine, if it were merely that he was insane? Would lunacy be called "he" as evil spirits are? Matt. iv. 24, 8:28 Jesus healed lunatics, but he distinguished between them and those possessed of demons, and those who were sick.

To ride over such plain teaching of the Word in order to uphold an unprofitable theory is not the way to secure the blessing of God.

Notice the effort to escape from Paul's desire to depart and to be with Christ. Let us read it in the revised version. "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." But if to live in the flesh—if this shall bring fruit from my work, then what I shall choose I know not. But I am in a strait betwixt the two, having the desire to depart and be with Christ; for it is very far better; yet to abide in the flesh is more needful for your sake. Phil. i. 21-24, Paul makes a distinction between himself and his body, which he here calls the flesh. He abides in the flesh. He may depart from it. So he writes to Timothy "the time of my departure is come." Then he would be with Christ. "To depart" is used in verse 23 as a synonym for "to die" in verse 21. This was the expectation of an inspired apostle who had been caught away to Paradise.

Now comes the negative to gravely tell us that Paul was mistaken, that he would not be with Christ one moment sooner by dying than by living, for he would not be with Christ for over 1,800 years anyhow. More than that, if the negative could have whispered to Paul, he would have told him, you are more with Christ while in the flesh, than if you die. For Paul said that Christ lived in him, he enjoyed working for Christ, but when he died according to the negative and the half truths of the Old Testament, Paul would not know anything. He would be in the same condition as Nero, unconscious.

How does the negative wrestle with this verse? Why he represents Paul as not knowing which to choose, having Christ to return in judgment and the end of the world, or to live awhile longer. It is about as far from the truth as a man could get while keeping his eye on it. The verb for "to depart" means "to return" also. Very well, we read "the spirit shall return to God who gave it: so Paul's desire was to return and to be with Christ who sitteth on the right hand of God. To escape the force of this plain Scripture it is made to read, "I have a desire for Christ's returning and being with Christ," what can be a more absurd and arbitrary?

My dear readers of THE RESTITUTION, do you feel safe in upholding a theory which is in so many places obliged to find another meaning than the words clearly reveal? Is not this wresting the Scriptures? Peter knew some who did that to their own destruction. Are not the fallacies of this theory plain to you? It takes the Old Testament as main authority; it accepts its sayings literally when Paul says the letter killeth, the spirit giveth life, it takes the holy truths of the Old Testament, (a book God did not send out to the world, and which is not versed by itself, by Christians for it is imperfect,) and uses them as the whole truth; it fastens its eye on a primary, or inferior meaning of the word (e. g. spirit) and refuses to consider the deeper teaching of God's Word. "Anything as a dogmatic assertion is possible. Any theory is possible as a volition as something we elect to believe, shutting our eyes to the plainest facts without considering, or even listening to the arguments of those who may disagree with us, but this is not rationality, it is bigotry, as often too the bigotry of unbelief as of belief."—The Essential Man, p. 26.

Life in the New Testament is more than conscious existence. The young ruler had position, wealth, health, morals, yet Jesus looked on him as dead.

"If thou will enter into life." So death is not always physical [illegible] nor is it ever annihilation. Again and again this plain truth has been pointed out, yet the negative calmly ignore it and pile up texts to prove that eternal life is conditional, which no one denies.

The same blurring of distinctions appears in the attempt to meet "Though I give my body to be burned." Evidently "I" own and can control the body. If I say "I am tired" I mean my body. If I say "I am sorry" is the "I" my body? Now the negative takes some Scriptures where "I" refers to the body and makes them apply to the spirit so as to appear absurd.

I think it is more than absurd, it is wicked. It is not the way to teach God's truth.

The negative objects that we teach the Satanic delusion, "Thou shalt not surely die." Jesus teaches it. "If a man keep my saying he shall never see death. John viii. 51: xi. 26. Jesus knows. He has abolished death. 2 Tim. i. 10. What we call death, God calls a departure. It is called a sleep, but never alive, 1 Thess. v. 10.

GEO. T. SMITH.

REPLY NO. 15.

"THOU SHALT NOT SURELY DIE."—JESUS TEACHES IT.

The above caption is quoted from the following paragraph found at the close of Eld. Smith's paper:

"The negative objects that we teach the Satanic delusion—'Thou shalt not surely die,' Jesus teaches it."

Had Robert Ingersoll made the above statement, I should not have been surprised, but I can hardly believe, my senses, that a professed Christian minister should do so. The statements "Thou shalt not surely die," and "Thou shalt surely die," are contradictory the one to the other, and involve the veracity of one of the parties making the statements, and Eld. Smith says, Jesus the Son of God "teaches" the statement of the serpent: "thou shalt not surely die."

JESUS DENIES THE CHARGE.

John viii. 41: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there was no truth in him, when he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar, and the father of it."

The above is Jesus' estimate of the one who said "Thou shalt not surely die."

Eld. Smith quotes as an evidence that Jesus taught the serpent's lie, John viii. 51: "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." The death he will never see by keeping Jesus' words, is revealed in Rev. ii. 2: "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." No one escapes the first death.

He says, "Paul visited Paradise * * * He identifies it with the third heaven." Eld. Smith locates Paradise and the third heaven down in hell (Sheol). Then Paradise is below instead of up. So we should say go down to Paradise. People dig down into Sheol. He quotes 2 Cor. xii., as proof that Paul went to Paradise. There is not the least shadow of a hint that he did anything of the kind. He had some visions, and in one of them, he saw a man caught away to the third heaven. If you would throw away your spook business, you would never think of putting the third heaven down in Sheol. Peter speaks of the third heaven as follows:

1. Those "were of old," before the flood.

2. Those "which are now."

3. "The new heavens and earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

His mind in vision contemplated this, and not a ghost heaven in sheol.

With regard to being in or out of the body, the contrast is between the absence from the body of this death or mortal body, and present with the Lord in the "third," the new heavens and earth, with his glorious and immortal body, which we will have when we reach the third heaven state. With regard to seeing and hearing wonderful things, an immaterial ghost has no eyes to see, or ears to hear, having neither "body or parts."

There is nothing to Eld. Smith's statement representing me to say that eternal life can be destroyed. I say God can deprive a person from obtaining it. There is a difference between depriving a person of eternal life and destroying eternal life.

There is nothing more in his statements about annihilation. A person may be burned up, but matter still exists, but in a different form, and has different attributes. The person don't exist any more.

With regard to demonial possessions there is not a single one mentioned in the New Testament, but [illegible]

[illegible]

TO THE READERS OF THE RESTITUTION.

Eld. Smith has propounded two questions for you to answer. They are as follows:

1. "My dear readers of THE RESTITUTION, Do you feel safe in upholding a theory which is in so many places obliged to find another meaning than the words clearly reveal?"

2. "Is not this wresting the Scriptures?" Seeing he has asked you these questions I want you to write and answer them. Speak out plainly. This is addressed to the readers as a whole.

What do you think of the last paragraph in Eld. Smith's present paper?

I love the readers of THE RESTITUTION, they are a Bible people. They stand squarely on the whole Bible, the Old and the New Testaments alike. They have no confidence in the Satanic delusion. Let us hear from you, beloved in the Lord.

RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

This parable is based on a tradition of the Pharisees. Josephus, who was a Pharisee, recognizes the tradition he learned of the Pagans, and speaks of "Abraham's bosom," and the fiery lake located in "an unfinished part of the world." Christ's use of the tradition to teach a lesson, did not commit him to the truth of it, any more than it did of his allusion to Beelzebub, the god of the Philistines, and other fictions to convey a lesson more forcibly to their mind by using something they were familiar with.

Eld. Smith wants you to understand it as literal language. For the sake of argument I will consider it in that light. We are told that the spooks who dwell in the fiery pit are "immaterial," are destitute of "body or parts," do not possess "inside," "outside," "extension," "space," "surface," or "weight," "has none of the attributes by which matter is described," consequently ghosts have no real existence except in imagination.

There is an air of materiality about the characters in this parable. They have bodily parts, which the spirits, Eld. Smith speaks of, have not. These have "eyes," "fingers" and "tongues," and therefore cannot be "immaterial" ghosts destitute of "body and parts." "Water" is spoken of as being able to cool the tongue of the character in the parable. Immaterial spooks have no tongues to cool off, not having "body or parts," and besides if they had, could material water cool immaterial tongues? The Hades Eld Smith speaks of has a partition running through it, one side he calls Tartarus, and the other Paradise. The partition must be transparent, because those in Paradise can see the immaterial ghosts tumbling about in raging billows of fire, howling, yelling, screaming, filling heaven and earth with unearthly screeches and blasphemy. Don't renders, don't you enjoy the prospect of going to such a beautiful Paradise? Running between the two as a "great gulf," "so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot." With a material person the "gulf" might be an insurmountable barrier, but why should it be with an immaterial spirit, which we are told can pass through space with greater rapidity than the lightnings flash? The supposed spirit of Lazarus could not get over this "gulf" to cool off the tongue of Dives' ghost.

In parables the thing said is never meant, as for instance in the Old Testament, we have trees talking, thistles trying to contract matrimonial alliances, corpses rising out of their graves to greet new arrivals. And in the parable of the rich man, Christ uses a fiction that the Pharisees learned of the Greek pagans. These parables all teach valuable lessons.

In the Old Testament fire is never in a single case connected with sheol. This covers a space of some 1,000

[illegible]

[illegible] of the Lord.

Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me.

And they shall walk with me in white.

Answer Them.

Parents run the risk of losing the love of their children who put aside their trivial questions as of no consequence. An interrogation point symbolizes the life of childhood. "Why?" and "what" are the keys with which it unlocks the treasury of the world. The boy's numberless questions often seem trivial, but the wise parent will never turn them off unanswered, if he can help it. It is his rich opportunity of touching. He is met half way, and there is all the difference between impressing truth on an eager mind and an uninterested one. The little fellow helping you at your work and pelting you with endless questions, may learn as much in a half-hour there as in a week when his body is a prisoner in the school room, and his thoughts are out of doors.

Not at Rest.

Why does the skeptic ever insist on talking about a religion which he says is a fable? Why does the stock-broker ever and unceasingly talk up a bad lot left on his hands? Why did foes of our Master refuse to be satisfied, until only the victim of their hate was crucified and buried, but a seal must be placed on his grave, and a guard to patrol the tomb night after night? They could not hush those mutterings of fear and remorse. There may be not a breath of wind, yet there comes to the silent ship resting on the silent ocean a ground-swell that ever rocks it, but not to repose. Thus men try to seal down their sins and lock the sepulchre that they cannot further disturb their peace, but all in vain.—Presbyterian.

A Trial of Faith.

The trial of faith is the sure way of increasing it. We ask for more faith, and God tries what we have, and that is his way of answering our prayer for its increase; he brings us to trials, so that we are compelled to look only to him for help. The life of faith is a wonderful life. Honored is the Christian who is called to live it; he is trained in this life to know more of himself, and more of the unchanging character, love, and tender watchful care of his heavenly Father. Has God so loved us as to give his only and well-beloved Son to die for us, and is it probable that he will withhold any thing that is absolutely needful for us? —Winslow.

Obituary.

At Enfield, N. J., (near Philadelphia, Pa.) on Sunday, Oct. 11, 1896, Katie, daughter of C. G. and Mary Ann Kersley, aged 3 years and 1 month. Katie was a bright, beautiful little favorite with all who knew her. Her death was terribly sudden and unlooked for, and a great blow to her parents. She leaves a brother and four little sisters, and many sympathizing friends to mourn her untimely fall under the fell stroke of the cruel enemy death. Her people are mostly of the Episcopal, or Methodist connections. Words of resurrection and life, by the writer. Also words of comfort by Rev. Mr. Henderson, of the M. P. Church, and Rev. J. D. Flansburg, of the Baptist Church.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep,
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the dread of woe."

Your Brother,
ANTHONY BRECH.

ther questio…
hton changes as our conception on his subject changes.

A denominational paper was exect some time ago, when in an editorial it said of pre-millennial doctrine: 'We ought not to proscribe it, it is to be tolerated, but we ought at the same time to know that it mounts to another cult. Of course, I believe it to be the ancient cult of the Christian Church.' I give this by way of preface lest any should say, Of what use is the discussion any way? If one has come to have decided convictions on this subject, it may help some other brethren to state one's reasons. Moreover with one who values truth above everything else, majorities count for nothing. Such a matter as this cannot be settled by a show of hands. Who believes it, and who does not of all the doctors decides nothing.

We all agree, too, that in such a study the only appeal must be to the Word of God. The word of the prophets told of his first coming in humility. That word was filled and with remarkable exactness. The same word of prophecy, continued, gives us all we can know of any appearance again of the same Lord. When a man begins by saying, 'I think' rather than appealing to the Word of God, he need not be listened to with any hope of finding the truth. When a man begins by saying, 'It goes against all of our notions,' it may be replied that it is very possible that all of our notions are wrong. When the difficulty is raised of understanding how all these things can be, as an objection to plain statements of the Word, it may be replied as a sufficient answer that it is not imperative that we should understand how all things will come together in the scheme of the future. We believe what is said. If we can see the particulars of the scheme by careful study; we will be glad; but if there are seeming difficulties, we will yet believe what is said, and wait for further light. When a man says, 'I believe, because I can understand,' he simply does not believe. He thinks he sees, and then it is sight, not faith. The rule should be—believe first, understand afterwards.

So I approach this subject, taking the Word as I find it in the progressive revelation from Genesis to the Apocalypse. I believe the Word is accurate. I do not study it as I study human literature—to criticise it, or expecting my philosophy can add to its wisdom. I do not study it as children study a cloud-land trying to make out various shapes according to fancy. If in the earlier books I only find an outline, I am content to let the intervening revelation fill in the picture. I expect it to be found accurate. If I am not able to fill all things together, I lay them aside till I see, perchance later, where they do not fit. But I do not pare the facts down for the sake of compelling a fit. I do not spiritualize for the sake of avoiding the need of a fit. I would study carefully, patiently, moreover listening rather than arguing, bringing a childlike spirit rather than my smartness to the Word of God. Lastly, I will have more confidence in the Spirit of God for interpretation than I do in the 'Zeit-Geist,' if anybody knows who that is. The Bible tells of a prince of this world. Doubtless he would like to interpret the Word for us.

I am interested in the 'how,' of course intensely; but, primarily, it must be not so much 'how,' but 'what.' That is, What do the Scriptures say? It is evident that this subject is not treated sparingly in the Scriptures. It cannot be relegated to obscurity as one of the doctrines that rests on but few passages. If the doctrine of the personal pre-millennial coming of our Lord is to be read out of the New Testament, it must be by such a wholesale change in definitions questioned whether it not ought be regarded as an essential part … the Christian religion.' Again, … must be admitted that this expe… was a prominent feature in … est proclamation of the go… materially contributed to its … He admits that if the primitive churches had been under the necessity of framing such a thing as a confession of faith, it would certainly have embraced this doctrine of the personal return of the Lord before the millennium. Then, in speaking of the middle of the second century, he says: 'The spirit of philosophical and theological speculation and of ethical reflection, which began to spread through the churches at that time, did not know what to make of the old hopes of the future.' That is, speculation took the place of faith.

Then he says of the same period: 'Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, became convinced that the victory of mystical theology, over what he calls 'Jewish Chiliasm,' would never be secure so long as the Apocalypse of John kept its place in the canon. He accordingly raised the question of the apostolic origin of the Apocalypse, and by reviving old difficulties and by ingenious arguments of his own he carried his point.' He also says that 'no doubts were ever entertained in the West as to the canonicity or the apostolic authorship of the Apocalypse.' Again he says, of the fourth century, that it was Augustine that made an end of millennarianism. It was Augustine that idealized the political side of the Catholic Church and put forth the elaborate teaching that the church is the kingdom of Christ and the city of God.

If you wish then to find the beginning of the present attitude of both the Catholic and Protestant Churches of today, as to the Lord's coming, you find it in Augustine. [And I believe it is rank heresy, judged by the earliest standard.] Of course, outward events led to that position—the professed conversion of Constantine and the worldly prosperity of the church as a political power. But the days of the fathers and the martyrs had passed. The simple faith of the first disciples of Christ had given way to the mystical theology that has ruled the church since. But Harnack says: 'It lived on, however, in the lower strata of Christian society, and in certain under currents it has been transmitted from century to century.' He closes his article by saying: 'This doctrine can only exist along with the unsophisticated faith of the early Christians.'

With that lower strata, if need be, and with that unsophisticated faith, gladly I place myself in bel… that our Lord will come personal… and that the glorious time for thi… and its nations, so abundantly … dicted by prophets and apostles comes and only comes after his glorious appearing. Therefore, that he comes not at the end of things earthly, but in the midst of things.

If some of these teachings do not appeal to us at first as correct, let us remember what a heritage of crooked vision is ours from the traditional dogmatism of the church for so long. It is by no means easy to peel off the layers of accumulated teaching that have come to seem to be a very part of our existence. It is not easy to read the Bible, as if it were ours for the first time. Much rubbish has accumulated about it. Much philosophy offers itself, made to our hand, as our guide, and by which we are asked to try every statement of the Word, even when we endeavor to read it with an open heart. May the Spirit of God give us all his own enlightenment as we study!

Our Lord's coming was predicted accurately. When wise men came from the East, and Herod was alarmed for his place, he asked the scribes to turn

Announcement.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of Indiana, will be held at Plymouth, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 12, 1896.

This meeting will be held in the new church building that has been built the past summer; and it is expected that Brother and Sister Woodward will be here, as the dedication will be at this time. An invitation is given to all brethren and sisters to attend this meeting. The Plymouth congregation are anxious that as many as can will come and aid in the "house-warming," as they are pleased after meeting in a little hall so many years, to have a house separate of their own. Come, all who can. It is the Lord's work we are engaged in, and let us be energetic in its advancement.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all Things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, OCTOBER 28, 1896. NUMBER 40.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Farewell!

Till life's illusive dreams are fled,
Till pillowed on the dreamless bed
Through joy and sorrow, sun and shade,
May God's protection be thy aid.
Farewell!

Farewell!
Till in the nearing Eden-land
We join Redemption's white-robed band,
From whose rapt lips are never heard
Tearful adieus, sad parting word,
Farewell!

Practical Christianity. No. 1.

The following is the substance of an address to the Bible class, at the Church of the Blessed Hope, Cleveland, Sept., 1896, based upon Rom. xii. 9-2, by Bro. H. C. Davis:—

"Let love be without dissimulation." A good definition of this is found in Peter's first Epistle chapter 1, verse 22. He expresses his thought about it as "Loving one another with a pure heart fervently." This was simply an echo of Christ himself, who taught the brethren to love as he loved, who willingly gave his precious life to save mankind from death.

Fervently is derived from a word which means to be "hot," "to boil "to swell with heat" indicating an intensity of emotion that manifests itself in a marked degree for other's good.

The Savior says in John xv. 13, "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Note that word whatsoever—it is very strong and comprehensive.

In the 1st Epistle of John iii. 16, the quality of the love is stated that brethren should manifest for each other in this life, "Hereby perceive we the love of God because he [Christ] laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."

"Beloved if God so loved us we ought also to love another." From the foregoing he who runs may understand what love without dissimulation is—and if in this apparently happy family we are not loving each other to that degree as exhorted by the Apostle we have something to learn.

"Abhor that which is evil." Abhor is derived from a word which means "to set up bristles," "to look terrible." It is another of those intense expressions characterising the extreme degree of opposition we should manifest towards evil. What about evil? It may be divided into two classes natural and moral. Natural is anything which produces calamity, disturbs the peace, impairs the happiness, or destroys the harmony of natural beings. Moral is any variation or deviation of a moral agent from the rules of conduct prescribed him by God. In this text I think it means both, so that the simple, unvarnished meaning is, for the children of God to oppose with all the intensity of their spiritual nature, and by every means at their command anything injurious to the household of faith. Are we members of one body of which Christ is the head? Can any brother then, do evil without the whole body suffering from it? The insignificance of the text is conspicuous. Let us each for ourselves examine this exhortion of the Apostle, then analyze our motives—make the application—and answer to our consciences, Guilty! or not Guilty!

"Cleave to that which is good." Perhaps we can catch the thought expressed in this clause by referring to Matt. xix. 5, "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother and shall 'cleave' to his wife.' If we can appreciate the tie that binds a child to his father and mother, and the separation from them when married to another, and the union established by the change, the illustration may serve to impress the mind with the forceful character of the word 'cleave'—so that the Apostle means, separate ourselves from evil, and marry the good, and what God has joined together let not man or evil put asunder.

"Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love in honor preferring one another." Peter says in his 1st Epistle ii. 17, "Esteem all men but love the brotherhood." It means, love each individual constituting the brotherhood, and more the organization made by the brotherhood; each have their separate claims upon us, and each demand all our love. Be subject one to another—i. e. hold ourselves in readiness at all times to assist each other. No divisions into classes, or casts must exist in the organization, but be clothed with humility. This love mentioned by the Apostle brings us to a common level, and the force of the text is that this level must not be disturbed in the sense of sundering the tie binding all together. Paul expresses the same thought in the 17th verse of the 8th chapter of 1st Corinthians, "Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend I will eat no flesh while the world standeth lest I make my brother to offend." The exhortation I think commends itself to the members of this brotherhood, making it the duty of each to study the "make up" of the other with a view of avoiding all things that do not promote harmony, peace, and good will.

"Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." I think a majority of the readers of this text understand the word business, as relating to commercial affairs, from the connection in which I hear it quoted the most frequently. Paul had reference to a proper activity in temporal affairs. I have no doubt, but I think his reference at this time was to occupations requiring manual labor, for in his farewell address to the Ephesian Church he says, "Yea, ye yourselves know that these hands have ministered unto my necessities and to them that were with me. "I have showed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, it is more blessed to give than to receive;" in a broader sense, be diligent industrious—no time for idle gossip, filthiness or foolish talking, nor jesting that you may not only have enough for yourselves, but sufficient surplus to assist others who may be needy; in fact, whatever you ought to do, be up and at it coupling with it (your work) the polar conduct of being red hot in spirit (for that is the definition of fervent) serving the Lord. I do not think the latter clause refers to purely Evangelistic effort apart from temporal affairs but to all effort, our life-work, whatever we may be doing, do it for the glory of God, that being the motive each hour of life until the end comes.

"Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribution, continuing instant in prayer." Rejoicing in hope is the act of expressing gladness for the hope of glory of God after the resurrection, hope being the foundation of the act rather than the object. I think the Apostle would have us in possession of that childlike character of faith which is acquired from a more intimate communion with Christ thereby gaining a better knowledge of him, for the better we know him the stronger will be our trust in and dependence on him.

Tribulation has its derivation from a word that means to thrash, to hunt. Paul knew from his personal experiences that the true Christian must suffer from persecution, afflictions, necessities and distresses, therefore his exhortation to be patient in tribulation, or "steadfast" in suffering. He also knew that strength would be required for suffering that there might be sustaining power, and that it could only be obtained by a life of prayer—unwearied prayer—praying instead of fainting, which is the exposition of continuing instant in prayer.

"Distributing to the necessity of saints given to hospitality." In Psa. xli. 1 we read "Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." Also in Hebrews xiii. 16, "But to do good and to communicate forget not" for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. The texts quoted imply two kinds of need that God's adopted children require, physical and spiritual; therefore the correct definition of the text "Distributing to the necessity of the saints" would be conducting ourselves as though the necessities of our brethren were our own, then apply the remedy according to the golden rule. Nor must we forget to "entertain strangers" for thereby an angel might be entertained unawares:" not from the standpoint of repaying an obligation already or to be incurred, but do it ungrudgingly, unselfishly, without the expectation of reward.

"Bless them which persecute you, bless and curse not." This is a quotation from the Savior's teaching as found in the 5th of Matt. 44th verse a portion of the "Sermon on the Mount." The teaching is, being one with Christ, the same love be manifested for those who persecuted him should animate his followers, as Christianity is a conquest of evil by good so the Christian in imitation of his Master should let love control all other emotions and overcome the persecutor by kindly attentions.

"Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." This is another form of expression for Christian sympathy—the philosophy is being members of our brotherhood, if one suffer all are affected. Through sympathy the tender emotions of Christ were quickly and easily aroused, and we are not without illustration from his own experience, for he rejoiced at the wedding in Cana, and wept with Mary and Martha in their bereavement. No tie binds us so strongly as sympathy—the affectionate enquiry after the welfare of each, the tender messages to those in distress, a cordial greeting as we meet in the pathway of life are all within the scope of this text, and I am glad to note that this dear family is actively engaged in the practice of his Christly virtue.

"Be of the same mind one toward another, mind not high things but descend to men of low estate, be not wise in your own conceits." Peter in his first Epistle 3 chapter 8th verse writes "Finally be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous." Jeremiah xlv. 5, "And seekest thou great things for thyself, seek them not! for behold I will bring evil upon all flesh saith the Lord, but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey, in all places whither thou goest." Isaiah v. 21, "Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight."

Humility with unity on a common level, seems to be the thought of the Apostle's exaltation among believers was denounced by Christ publicly and among the twelve. I presume the Apostle church suffered from contact with a worldly spirit as now. The minding of "high things" is the antithesis of humility, therefore not compatible with the "Divine Life" and the tendency would be to shun the reproach of the cross by avoiding companionship of the godly and finally to become apostate. An absolute surrender of self to Christ, his cross, and his life, is the only sure remedy for being wise in our own conceits.

"Recompense to no man evil for evil provide things honest in the sight of all men." Perhaps there is nothing more natural in this mortal life than the disposition to retaliate at receiving what we deem an insult or injury from another.

(Concluded next week.)

What was the Divine image in Man; How was it lost; How will it be Restored?

The Bible testifies that God is "upright," and that he made man "upright." Pro. xxv. 8; Eccles. vii. 20. The same Hebrew word here translated "upright" is in sight other places translated "righteous." See Num. xxiii. 10; Job iv. 5; xxiii. 7; Psa. cvii. 42; Prov. ii. 7; iii. 22; xv. 19; xxviii. 10.

From these facts we may infer that the Divine image was the original righteousness (or, uprightness) which Adam had before he sinned. But the main foundation on which I build this conclusion is found where we read of "the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness;" and of "the new man which is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of him that created him." Col. iii. 10, R. V.; Eph. iv. 24. Also the command, "Like as he which called you is holy, be ye yourselves also holy" 1 Pet. i. 15, R. V. Thus a state of "righteousnes and true holiness" is that into which the new or converted man "is being renewed" or restored. And that state is "after the image of" our Creator.

The renewing or restoring process is yet going on,—the believer "is being renewed" unto full knowledge ("exact knowledge," Bingham,) which is "eternal life" that excludes all sin, and is attained at the resurrection: for now I know in part, "but then shall I know fully, even as I also have been known." 1 Cor. xiii. 12, R. V. Jno. xvii. 3.

Through Adam the image was blurred, if not entirely lost: but through Christ it will be restored in the better and permanent form of a "Divine nature," even "like him" who is "the express image" of his Father's person. He will restore that which he "took not away." 2 Pet. i. 4; Phil. iii. 21; 1 Jno. iii. 2; Heb. i. 3; Psa. lxix. 4.

He will restore man to Paradise, and Paradise to man. The Lord's immortal "jewels" will have appropriate setting. Then, in the "foursquare and holy Jerusalem," will be fulfilled the prophecy typically expressed by Aaron's foursquare breastplate.

The Bible calls God "immortal and incorruptible" in CONTRAST to "mortal and corruptible" man. 1 Tim. i. 17; vi. 16; Job iv. 17. 1 Cor. xv. 53, 54; Rom. i. 23. But since it calls God "upright," and says he made man "upright," we can easily trace wherein the image and likeness consisted, and wherein it did not consist. Adam's king's profile is the same whether stamped in gold, silver, or copper coin; so is true righteousness the same, in all races and classes of mankind.

How may the Divine image be restored? The restoring process is shown by Paul's mission to the Gentiles,—"To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified." Acts xxvi. 18. This he did by preaching to them the gospel of the kingdom as our Lord required "in all the world." Matt. xxiv. 14. And we all in this gospel, "beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image from glory to glory." 2 Cor. iii. 18; iv. 6. And thus, by "growing in grace" and "going from strength to to strength," we may say with the Psalmist, "I will behold thy face in righteousness, I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." Psa. lxxxiv. 7; xvii. 15.

The Divine image was lost by two steps,—(1) Unbelief,—leaving God's truth for the serpent's lie; (2) Disobedience,—eating the forbidden fruit. "The end of those things is death."

The image must be restored by two steps of an opposite kind—(1) Belief, —accepting the gospel of the kingdom; (2) Obedience,—holding out "faithful unto death." "And the end everlasting life." Rom. vi. 21, 22; Rev. ii. 10.

Believers! By the last two steps we are making our pilgrimage to the heavenly country. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." Heb. xii. 2.

Unbelievers! Turn ye away from the broad road that leads to death. Do like the Psalmist who says, "I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies, I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments." Psa. cxix. 60, 61.

WILEY JONES.

The gospel teaches a communism which is unselfish; it says, "All mine is thine." But the world's communism is the very opposite. It says, "Stand and deliver. All thine is mine." And the difference is infinite.

When the heart is hot let the tongue be unbridled.

Dear Restitution:

I think any one who is not too prejudiced will see very plainly between Bro. Smith and Wilson's discussion who is right, and by doing so they will preach "life and death" instead of "heaven and hell." The 15th chapter of first Cor. should convince any earnest seeker as to the kingdom, also of immortality. Will some of the brethren write on the 2300 days of Dan. viii. 14: also the 70 weeks ix. 24.

Brother in Christ.

J. H. COX.

Dear Fellow-workers:

As a reader of THE RESTITUTION I wish for one to answer the questions propounded by Elder Smith in his last article (No. 15). I certainly do not "feel safe in upholding a theory which is in so many places obliged to find another meaning than the words clearly reveal." Most unmistakeably is "this wresting the Scriptures." And I feel it would be to my "own destruction," or the "destruction" of any and all who may participate in so treating God's Holy Word. Not willing to see any one be their own means of destruction, I, for one, feel like inviting Bro. Smith from further "wresting the Scriptures." I feel sure that all by this time are ready to admit that "the fallacies of this (Elder Smith's) theory" are "plain." Especially when we read these words in Article No. 15: "The negative has consistently and Scripturally said that the unbeliever does not have eternal life." Then "the soul or spirit of" the unbeliever does not "exist in a conscious, unending state after the death of the body," the resolution is opposed by both. If Elder Smith was doing this work with a hatchet instead of brains I should think he had made a miss blow and struck himself in the head, when he admitted the above. Brothers and Sisters of THE RESTITUTION, let us all unite and extend a cordial invitation to Bro. Smith to come over on the Lord's side.

Yours for truth.

F. L. ARCHER.

Dear Restitution:

I herewith send you a report of meeting held here by Bro. John Foore of Tempe, Arizona. Knowing of Bro. Foore's contemplated visit to San Diego, California, through the columns of THE RESTITUTION, I also noticed his expected arrival at Santa Ana, Orange Co., and opened up correspondence with him at that place. Also knowing Bro. Foore while living in the East, I was anxious to have him visit Pasadena. He and Sister Foore reached here on the 9th inst. In the mean time the brethren of the Advent Christians, who own a tent here, well furnished had expressed a wish to hear some one of our brethren preach on the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the future reign of Christ during the times of restitution, a theme which the A. C. people generally oppose and are woefully ignorant of. The A. C. brethren who are a mixed, unorganized body here, were just at the time of Bro. Foore's arrival without a minister. His coming was opportune, and he had perfect freedom throughout his meetings. He preached in all fifteen discourses to an intelligent audience, who brought paper and pencil, and took down the references; and Bro. Foore kept them busy for he told his audience to accept nothing without the witness was produced in evidence. His preaching covered the ground from the gospel of the kingdom to the final victory over death, to the destruction of this last enemy. Bro. Foore presented nothing but his Bible, and we who know him can truly say he is a workman who needeth not to be ashamed, to the Lord be all praise. The subject presented was food for all, the milk of the word to babes in Christ, and strong meat to old soldiers, so we can truly say it was meat in due season. It took about ten discourses to break down prejudice, afterwards Bro. and Sister Foore were invited to the homes of several of his audience, quite a number of whom expressed a wish for him to return to California in the near future. We trust good seed has been sown, at least a number are investigating and we believe the truth presented by Bro. Foore will have its fruition. I wish to write to THE RESTITUTION readers everywhere, but more especially to our Eastern brethren and sisters, the Macedonian cry goes out from this State of California, Come help us. I have often asked the question, why is this State so destitute of the truth? We have a climate to suit the most fastidious, living as cheap here as elsewhere, an intelligent population, churches and orders, of every known denomination and their numerous followers, but we claiming to be ourselves of Christ's body, also claiming more truth than others are not known in California. Only a few lovers of the truth scattered one or two in a place all over the State. It is no wonder we are hungering and thirsting for some of our preaching brethren to come and help. The territory is large, eight hundred odd miles of coast line, a large share of which is free from storms which are so destructive East, fine, fertile valleys, plenty of sunshine, homes of splendor, also homes of the poor, and to the last class are the rich promises of the gospel? Will you help to tell it to them? Some of our preaching brethren who wish to find a warmer clime whose health will not bear the exposures of eastern winters, could I think find a place to suit them in this State. The great difficulty is they want to know if they can be sustained, and this is one object of this writing. The people here are as generous as other places, but to get a start in the work. Can some of our brethren East who are employing a minister by the year, try and get along a few months alone, and send the preacher and the means to destitute places. I believe this reward would be enhanced in the future, besides let me ask you a question: Have you any evidence from the Scriptures of a right to employ a minister to preach for you by the year? I notice a number of calls in THE RESTITUTION for help for the hungry in spiritual matters, ungospel believers. We have no financial organism, education is much needed on that line, and now brethren and sisters, let us think over this matter of the Macedonian cry, asking help from him who knoweth all our needs. The times are ominous, soon the great Shepherd will call for the weary ones, and my prayer is, we shall not be found wanting.

Your Brother in hope of eternal life at the coming of the Life-Giver.

J. OGBURN.

Earth was at peace when morning stars were singing.
And when the sons of God with joy did shout,
When like a lover, votive offerings bringing,
Her Maker hung his starry banners out.

But since the star of hope went down in sorrow,
Full six millenniums have well nigh fled;
And still the worn earth waits a coming morrow,
When they shall live again—the myriad dead.

Bishop Hall: A charitable untruth, an uncharitable truth and an unwise management of truth, or love, are all to be carefully avoided of him that would go with a right foot in the narrow way.

A good man incarnates goodness. Goodness is a part of him. He cannot exist apart from it. The flower and its fragrance are one.

Don't despise the small talents; they are needed as well as the great ones. A candle is sometimes as useful as the sun.

They that understand the Scriptures well, are the ones most desirous to understand them better.

They that hear the counsels of the ungodly, will never want for ungodly counselors.

How can we expect a harvest of thought who have not had a seed-time of character?

Always act as if you believe God is present, and that you must give an account to him.

Those content with less degrees of comfort, are best prepared for, and most likely to receive greater.

STOCKHOLDER'S MEETING.

The Stockholder's of the Christian Publishing Association will meet at Plymouth, Ind., Nov. 14, 1896, at 1:00 o'clock P. M. to elect a Board of Directors and transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

THE WAY TO GLORY.

"By the thorn road and no other,
Is the mount of triumph won:
Tread it without shrinking brother,
Jesus trod it, press thou on."

EPICTETUS said, "If any one speaks ill of thee, consider whether he hath truth on his side and, if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee."

WE see the subject of a lecture by a woman in England was "Spiritualism the World's Redeemer." Could there be a more monstrous or blasphemous theory advocated?

"THE Greek, Roman and Protestant together, with all the heathen isms ancient and modern, agree and insist that the soul can live, not only without Christ, but in spite of him. And, as the body is an encumbrance to the soul, so is the Bible doctrine of the resurrection an encumbrance to the creeds of Christendom."

THE Church in Plymouth has been busy this year. They have built a neat little building in which to worship, instead of the hall that they have occupied for years They have it almost completed and will dedicate it with appropriate services on Nov. 15. 1896. All friends who can are invited to attend this meeting, and all others that may be appointed in the future.

"CHRIST'S resurrection is the pledge and source of a future life to all Abraham's spiritual seed, constituted such by faith and obedience to the gospel he preached before his death, and preached by his chosen apostles after his resurrection; in contrast to which stands the serpent's lie, the chief corner-stone of all the isms that afflict the world."

"Those who hold Paul's doctrine ought not to worship with those who do not. That would be holding with the hare and running with the hounds —a position of extraordinary difficulty. Would not such an one love the hounds better than the hare? When the hounds came upon the hare, where will he be? No, if I agree with Paul I will forsake the assembling of myself with those who oppose Paul's doctrine, although it severs the dearest ties. Only evil comes of compromising the principles of the truth.

SUNDAY, Oct. 18th was another red-letter day for the household of faith in Cleveland. We had the unspeakable joy of witnessing the obedience of faith of a dear one for whom we have long labored, and prayed; and Sister R. G. Pate is now a joyful trustee in the covenants of promise, and an earnest looker for him in whom all the promises centre. In addition to this we were privileged to have a visit from Sister Stella Faber, of Argos, Indiana, who evidently has a hope that makes her rejoice. It is refreshing to meet those from a distance who understand the language of Canaan.

Spiritual Growth.

We all know somewhat of the law of growth in the natural world, and in our opinion the same law pervades the Spiritual realm. During the period of growth a child must be fed proper food and plenty of it, to thrive and develope. A human being is organized with three grand mental departments,—the animal propensities the intellectual and spiritual or moral faculties. If a person gives himself up to the gratification of his animal propensities, those propensities feed their gratifications, and often develope into monsters of iniquity; and of course other departments of the mind must suffer yes, robbed, starved to death. He might be a clever workman while a very wicked and abandoned character; or, he may be quite a skilled artist under the same circumstances. Those two mental departments may be cultivated simultaneously. But in the nature of things the spiritual department would be starved out. it cannot be cultivated in company with the predominating propensities, because one is exercised for the present, the other for future, and tries to control the animal in order to properly feed the spiritual. This agrees with the man God, and with all our experience with men. But if the theology of the day be true, he is an inexplicable creature. If man has an immortal soul given him by God to do his thinking for him he thinks bad one day and good the next,—bad one minute and good the next; in fact he would have two or three souls to transact his business for him, so diverse are his thoughts and actions.

Let us now consider a person who by means of the Spirit of truth has undertaken to keep the animal down, and to even prevent the intellectual from running away with him, and absorbing his time, and strength, and mental power. He has been adopted into God's family, has accepted Christ as his pattern, has undertaken to observe all things whatsoever he has commanded. Having obeyed from the heart the conditions of pardon, he is justified, has peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. He is in the favor of God, has access to him through Jesus, the Great High Priest over the House of God. But has he attained to all the favor God in this life intends to confer upon his children? Why no; no, we say, although some act as if a mere justified standing before God placed one on the very top round of spiritual attainment, and as if they could not be more wise, or humble, or patient, or zealous,—as if they had been just grafted into the vine for their own sake, without regard to the glory of God. As if they were not expected to yield fruit from the sap drawn from the parent vine,—and as if oblivious of the fact that the Father is only glorified when much fruit is borne—and as if Paul's commendation of the Thessalonians was not true, when he told them that their faith grew exceedingly, and the love of every one of them toward each other abounded, —and as if Peter actually enjoined an absurdity when he admonished believers to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of their Lord and Savior, —and as if God himself mocked or trifled when he said, "The righteous shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall wax stronger and stronger." Job xix. 9.

So, while we should not despise the day of small things, we must not be satisfied with it. Greater things are attainable, and if we do not aspire after them, there must be something radically wrong with us. Our spiritual principles may be weak, but if they are divine principles, they will evince it by a tendency to growth. To us it is exceedingly interesting to note the many ways in which the Sacred writers speak of, or express this growth in divine life. They speak like babes, little children, young men, and those full of age who have their senses exercised by reason of use, to discern both good and evil; and of vegetable growth; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. They shall spring as among the grass,—as willows in the watercourses. They shall grow as the lilly,—they shall grow as the vine. And lastly it is illustrated by animal growth. Malachi says, "They shall grow up as calves of the stall." No creatures, perhaps increase so rapidly as these when fed and tended with a view to growth. We have sometimes been reminded of the truth of this beautiful figure by the spiritual minded. In a little while they have surprised all around them by their progress. So clear and full are their views of the things of God,—so established their hearts,—so simple and implicit their dependence upon God,—so decided in their separation from the world, and yet so concerned to be useful,—so spiritual in their conversation, and yet so free from all affectation,—so ready to do good and to communicate, and such a living sacrifice have they presented in their bodies and spirits; and have so adorned the doctrine of God our Savior.

But alas, too many have reason to exclaim, "My leanness, My leanness," how little progress have we made in divine knowledge, experience, practice, usefulness, though every advantage has been enjoyed. Yes; dull of perception, and slow of heart to believe. They cleave to the dust and grovel in it. All in that condition should be reproved. They are starving in a land of plenty.

Growth is not only commanded, it is promised. "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he giveth strength. Even the youths shall faint, and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength,—they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk and faint not." Isa. xl. 30, 31.

Beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord, it is our heart's desire and prayer to God, that now, in these very ominous times, you may put on real growth,—grow up into him who is our living Head in all things, and at last be found of peace, and have an abundant entrance into the kingdom. Trials may thicken and perplexities may multiply, but never fear, a well founded hope will steady you, and enable you to live above and beyond your environment. Put your whole trust in God. Remember that all who do business with him must do it on credit. Prov. xvi. 20. Trust him at all times,—in storms, in calms, in adversity, in reproach, in honor, in dishonor, in sickness, in life and at death. Depend on his wisdom for direction; on his power for protection, on his favor for salvation. Never put that confidence in yourselves which should be put in the Lord. Jer. xvii. 7.

Infinite are the blessings, and most precious the promises that abound in the Word of the Lord for those who put their trust in him. In the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength! What words of encouragement. Let us take hold of his strength as he invites us to do, and all will be well, whether the Lord come at midnight, or at cock crowing, or in the morning, and the language of your hearts will ever be, Come Lord Jesus quickly. Come.

For Our Children.

The Little Brook.

Have you got a brook in your little heart?
Where laughing flowers blow,
And blushing birds go down to drink
And flowers tremble so?

And nobody knows, so still it flows,
That may brook is there;
And yet your little drought of life
Is daily drunken there.

Then look out for the little brook in March
When rivers overflow,
And the snow comes hurrying from the hills
And the bridges often go.

And, later, in August it may be,
When the meadows parching lie,
Beware lest this little brook of life
Some burning noon go dry.

THE SOJOURN AT SINAI.

We have something very sad to write about this time. It surprises us very much as we read the lesson, (Ex. 32. chap.) No one would have thought that a people who had seen the lightnings and the smoking of Sinai and had heard the awful voice of God's great angel, saying, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image", could so soon have disobeyed, and turned away from God. But here they are— worshiping a calf! What do the little folks think of that? Moses had been up in the mountain a long time, forty days and forty nights Ex. 24:18. Deut 9: 9. All this time he neither ate bread nor drank water. God had just given him the two tables of stone. He had the patterns for the tabernacle and all its furniture and was ready to come down. The Lord saw what had happened. He told Moses that the people had made them a molten calf and had sacrificed thereunto, and if he would let him alone, he would consume them and make of him a great nation.

But Moses, besought the Lord not to be angry with his people, whom he had brought out of the land of Egypt with great power and with a mighty hand. If He should do such a thing, the Egyptians would say, He had brought them out to slay them in the mountains.

He begged of him to turn away from his wrath, and to remember Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, his servants, and the grand promise made unto them— "I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it forever."

"And the Lord repented, and Moses went down from the mount," with the tables of stone in his hands. Joshua was with him. He thought from the noise the people made in shouting that a battle was going on, but Moses said they were only singing.

The people had tired of waiting for Moses. For more than a month they had had no sign that God was with them. Their leader and mediator might be dead for all they knew. They felt as if they must have some token or likeness of God in their camp. They did not think the calf, itself, was a God; they meant it only as a symbol of the great Creator.

Yet in making it, they had violated the second commandment. And were in danger of lapsing into Egyptian idolatry. For the Egyptians worshipped the Apis or bull. How could Aaron be so wicked? He was afraid of the people. He did not have courage enough to tell them. "It is a wrong thing that you want me to do, and I will not do it." How many boys and girls are just like Aaron. I was asking a little boy today "why he went off to a neighbor's corn-field when he had been forbidden to go," and he replied "Percy said, 'Come go along' so I went." We must have courage enough to "stand for God and the right" no matter who asks us to take the side of wrong.

Moses did not want the Lord to be angry with the Israelites for their sin and yet when he came near their camp and saw with his own eyes what they were doing, "his anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hand and broke them beneath the mount."

Then he took the image and "burnt it in fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water and made the children of Israel drink of it," Could such a thing be done? Can gold be ground to dust? Certainly. It could have been turned into dust with a file. Moses may have known of some more rapid process. But why does it say he burnt it? Smith's Bible Dictionary says the calf "was probably a wooden figure covered with gold." Then the Israelites had to drink the ashes and the gold too.

They had "likened their maker to the graved ox," and Moses shows them how little it is like the Mighty Jehovah in that it can be so easily destroyed. He meant also to teach them another lesson: it was this—if we sin, we must take the consequences. The penalty that God had affixed to idolatry was death. (Deut. 13: 6–17. Ex. 22: 20.) And death it was for three thousand of the disobedient ones were slain by the Levites at the command of Moses.

The thing was right, because it was done in obedience to God's law. The hands of those who had sinned, had been against their sons, against their brothers, and against their neighbors. (Margin of 29th verse.) You know how loathsome idol-worshippers become and how miserable they are.

Every one who does wrong is against other people. His influence goes to make them sinful wretched and ruined.

What did the broken tables mean? A broken covenant! A people cut off from God! What hope could they have? How could they be saved? Moses is still their Mediator. He comforts them. He says, "You have sinned a great sin but peradventure I shall make atonement for your sin." He went up to God. He asked that their sin might be forgiven. He "felt as if he would suffer anything, lose all, rather than that the people, should be cut off." He is ready to lay down his life for their sakes, for he prays God, if he will not forgive them, to blot him out of the book that he has written. This "does not mean," Mr Monro Gibson says, "the book of eternal life, but only has reference to the custom of keeping a register of the inhabitants of a place, from which the names of those who die are removed."

Do you think of Jesus here? Moses was willing to die for his people. Jesus did die to make an atonement for them.

Moses did not succeed in getting full forgiveness for the nation. "Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book." "In the day when I visit I will visit their sin upon them," is the answer.

But we must stop now. In our next lesson we will talk more about it. You can, in the meantime, read the 33rd chapter.

Nebraska Conference Report.

The Eleventh Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska was held at the park in St. Paul from Sep. 11th to 21st as previously published.

The Business Meeting was called to order by the president at 10 A. M. on Saturday. The congregation sang a hymn and Brother Almus Adams prayed that God's blessing would rest upon us in the transaction of the business of the conference. The minutes of the last meeting were then read and approved after which the president appointed the following committees for the conference:—

Committee on Resolutions.—Eddie Arthand, John Mehrens, Rena Gordon.

Auditing Committee.—C. F. Story, Riley Arthand.

Ushers.—Oscar Williamson, Riley Arthand.

Bell Ringing.—J. F. Trissell.

Committee to look after grounds.—R. P. Story, Bro. Horn, J. Williamson.

Committee to look after lights.—S. A. Story, Fred Eddy.

Programme Committee.—Sister R. A. Shaw, C. F. Story, Alice Mehrens.

Moved and seconded that we adjourn till 10 o'clock Monday morning for the transaction of general business. Motion carried.

Monday Sept. 14, 1896.—Meeting called to order at 10 A. M. by M. D. Newell. It was moved and seconded that Sister Bertha Johnson be appointed Secretary pro tem. Motion carried.

Moved that Brother Adams be allowed to take the conference tent at ($6.00) six dollars, the same to be allowed on the amount due him. Motion seconded and carried.

Moved and seconded that Bertha Johnson be elected Corresponding Secretary. Motion carried.

Moved that a committee be appointed to help Sister Johnson draft a letter, a copy of which she shall send to each family in the state, belonging to the church, to impress upon their minds the necessity of their help in carrying on the work: also that Sister Johnson may have the privilege of employing some persons to assist her in writing the letters. Motion seconded and carried. Bro. Adams, Sister Shaw and Bro. R. P. Story were appointed.

Moved that the president appoint a delegate from each of the churches represented to notify their secretary to send the names and addresses of their members to Sister Bertha Johnson of Blair. Motion seconded and carried. Moved that Brother Oglevie of North Branch, Kansas, be admitted to this conference. Motion carried.

Moved that this conference grant Brother Oglevie a license to preach for the year. Motion carried.

Moved that we adjourn till 4 P. M. Motion carried.

Meeting called to order at 4. P. M. by Brother Newell. Letters were then read from the churches at Freedom, Gordon, Blair, Ainsworth, Bassett and Moorfield in this state and from the churches at Tyler and Fair Haven in Kansas. The letters contained reports of the work that was being carried on at the different places, and also their votes for the persons they desired to have fill the offices the coming year. There was also a letter from Brother A. J. Eyelauer, and Brother W. L. Crowe, who were holding a meeting in Sac City, Iowa. They encouraged us to go on in the work and trust in God, assuring us that if faithful we should receive our reward.

We then proceeded to the election of officers. The votes of the different churches were read and counted. Those elected were as follows: Pres. M. D. Newell, Sec. Rena M. Gordon, Treas. John Mehrens, Evan. Almus Adams. Remarks in regard to the advisability of electing an Assistant Evangelist. Moved that we accept Bro. J. G. Haupt's kind offer to work without pay. Motion seconded and carried.

Moved and seconded that Bro. Wm. Stevens of South Frontier be appointed Vice President of the conference. Carried.

Moved and seconded that we adjourn. Motion carried.

Tuesday, Sept. 15, 1896:—Business meeting opened at 10 A. M. by song and prayer. It was moved that some in each congregation be appointed to take up a collection once a month for the next Annual Conference expense fund. The motion was seconded and carried. Bro. John Mehrens said that if the next Annual Conference was held at Blair, the church there would bear nearly, if not quite all of the expense.

The following motions were then made and carried:

1st, That we as a Conference accept Bro. John Mehren's offer, and use our influence to have the churches cast their votes accordingly.

2nd. That a committee of three be appointed to see what the people of Blair are willing to do towards paying the expenses if held there, and report at the June Conference. Bro. G. W. Mehrens, Sister Effa Johnson, and Sister Carrie Free were appointed. A resolution was then made and adopted as follows:

Resolved:—That the church at Blair be tendered the thanks of this conference for their generous offer for the next Annual Conference expenses.

Moved that the church at the place at which the conference is held be allowed to vote verbally on the persons whom they desire to have fill the offices. The motion was seconded, but lost.

Moved and carried that we adjourn.

Wednesday;—Business meeting opened at 10 A. M. by Scripture Reading. Minutes of the last meeting were read. The following resolution was then read and adopted.

Resolved:—That this conference recommend the organization of a Sunday school in every locality where there are enough brethren to maintain one.

Moved and carried that Sister Alice Mehrens be elected Sunday School Organizer.

A letter was then read from Bro. and Sister Farley of Crowley, Louisiana. Both are earnest workers and are striving to be worthy of a home in the kingdom.

The following motions were then moved and carried:

1st. That Sister Moore of South Frontier be appointed to find out what churches have social meetings and what have not; and to urge those who have not to organize one; and also that Sister Moore write a short letter to each of these churches once a month to be read in their social meetings to encourage them, and to help in keeping up the interest.

2nd. That all the officers of the conference shall keep an itemized account of their expenses, which shall be paid by the conference, and they shall report quarterly.

3rd. That we adjourn till Thursday morning.

Thursday:—Meeting called to order by the Pres. at 11 A. M. The constitution of the tract society was then read.

Moved that Sister Emma Smith be elected as Sec. Pro. Tem. of this association. The motion was seconded and carried.

Moved that the secretary be empowered to get one dozen ministerial certificates, and that the applicants for such certificates get them from her by paying what they cost her. Motion carried.

Moved and carried that we adjourn to the call of the president.

Saturday.—Meeting called to order by the president at 11 A. M. Reading of the minutes of the last meeting.

The constitution of the tract society was read once more and the secretary, Sister Smith, reported a membership of eighteen.

Moved and carried that we adjourn to the call of the president.

Meeting called to order by the president at 4 P. M.

The Auditing Committee gave their report of the evangelist, secretary and treasurer as follows—"St. Paul, Neb. Sept. 19, 1896. Annual Report of Secretary, Treasurer and Evangelist.

Total amount received by evangelist, $397.31.

Amount received on back pay $39.42.

Amount donated by evangelist $21.08¾.

Less half pay for Nov. 1895, $20.83¾.

Total received on this year's labor $376.58.

Amount still due the evangelist $123.47.

Total expense $23.28.

Total amount received by assistant evangelist $22.00

Total amount paid Brother Myers, $20.00

Total received by secretary and treasurer $439.31.

C. F. Story and R. E. Arthand, Auditors."

Moved and carried that the essays read at the conference be published in THE RESTITUTION.

Moved that we adjourn sine die. Motion seconded and carried.

The rainy weather during conference week interfered to a considerable extent with the enjoyment of the meetings, still we enjoyed some blessed meetings together. We were strengthened in the faith by hearing the gospel, as it was preached in all its purity by the ministers present, and we were encouraged by seeing three more accept the truth, and go down into the watery grave and rise to walk in newness of life. The preaching brethren present were, T. G. Burtlett of this place, J. R. Oglevie of North Branch, Kansas, J. L. Herriman of Ainsworth, J. G. Haupt of Dakota City, Almus Adams of Arapahoe, and G. M. Myers of Belle Plaine, Iowa.

How much we enjoy these meetings with those of like precious faith and how quickly the time passes away. It seems that we just get acquainted and begin to enjoy the meetings fully when we must say "good-bye." What a sorrowful time this is and how it makes us long for the time to come when we shall all meet in the kingdom of God. Then there will be no more sad partings, no sorrow, and no crying, all these things will have passed away. May that glad day soon come and may we one and all be ready for it is the earnest prayer of your Sister in Christ.

RENA M. GORDON.

Poetry.

Watch and Pray.

So hath Christ left us, with the sacred charge,
"Watch, watch, and pray!"
In life's great garden we can roam at large,
But still we may
Not lie at ease, but work while it is day.

Yea! we must watch, and while we watch must pray,
Lest we, too, fall;
Temptations hover strangely o'er our way;
God knows them all,
And saves from danger those that on him call.

When next Christ comes, in all his glorious power,
Let him not say,
"What! could ye not watch with me one hour?"
Perchance this day
May witness that return! Then, "watch and pray!"

Smith and Wilson Discussion Number 16.

First Proposition:

Resolved; The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body. Smith affirms. Wilson denies.

When we have shown man his body, soul and spirit, that these are to be preserved until the coming of Christ as the apostle prays, 1 Thess. v. 24: where we follow under inspired guidance the body to earth, the soul to Paradise, or the third heaven, Luke xvi. 22 and xxiii. 42, 2 Cor. xii. 2-4, and the spirit ascending, Eccl. iii. 21, returning to God, xiii. 7, received the Father, Luke xxiii. 46, Acts vii. 59, among the spirits of just men made perfect, Heb. xii. 23; when we are taught that the wicked are turned into hell, Psa. ix. 17, their souls destroyed, Matt. x. 28, their spirits seeking rest and finding none, Luke xi. 24, tormented, Luke xvi. 23, in Hades so that where Jesus is they cannot come, (for they died in their sins) John viii. 21, while the disciples could, John xiii. 36, Phil. i. 23, it does not seem necessary to prove that the punishment thus shown to fall on the souls of the wicked is unending. In the nature of the case it must continue. If we say that the heart revolts at the idea of spirits of men suffering eternally for the sins of this brief life there are a number of answers. It is not merely for the sins of this brief life. Sin continues over there. God will save every soul that can be saved. He is doing that now. The probability is that the gates of the city of love will remain open forever, the difficulty will be that man will love darkness rather than light. The difference between the Unitarians and Universalists has been defined thus: the first believe that man is too good to be damned, the latter hold that God is too good to damn anyone. They, with Eld. Wilson, neutralize everlasting punishment. In all three cases isn't it a lack of faith in God's wisdom, his ability to do right? Is it not an unwillingness to allow the plain Word of God to supplant th ir theories?

The backbone of the theory of the negative is broken when it is seen that death does not mean annihilation. A Christian is dead. Col. iii. 3. Sinners are dead, yet can hear, Jno. v. 25 and pass from death to life.

Even the physically dead are alive. Jesus says so. The patriarchs are alive. Luke xx. 38. God is not a God of dead men, but of living. He is the God of Abraham; hence Abraham is alive. Paul teaches the same. What we call death is to the New Testament saints sleep, "that whether we wake or sleep, we should sleep together with him." 1 Thess. v. 10.

If physical death means an annihilation, how could God destroy the soul after the death of the body? Matt. x. 28. That destroying is to cast into hell. Luke xii. 5.

In Matt. xxv. 31-44 we have the sentence pronounced which shall seal human destiny. In that not a word is said of extinction of being. As I understand it, the negative teaches that the wicked Cesars, the apostle, and the babes slain by Herod, have from the moment of death till now known nothing. They rest from their labors. Then the resurrection, all will come forth. The apostles will be on the right hand, the babes and the monsters of iniquity will be on the left. They will be snuffed out, be as though they never had been. Can you see any justice in that? Sending the innocent children into fire prepared for the devil and his angels. The punishment for one dying at five or six years being the same as that of a hardened wretch. The Scriptures teach degrees of punishment, Luke xii. 48, few stripes and many. The punishment is said to be everlasting. Then the subject must endure. In Rev. xx. 10 it is said that the devil is tormented forever and ever. If he endures, why should not his companions in sin. There is not a word said to imply an end. The wrath of God abides on the wicked. How can he, if he does not exist?

"Destruction," "perish," and that class of words do not mean annihilation. Suppose a fire wipe out a Wisconsin village, burning some to death. Letters, or reports to newspapers, would use language found in the Bible. "Dust returned to dust and ashes," "destroyed," "perished," "of whole families annihilated," "burned up root and branch," "men trend down their ashes," "are no more," and yet no one who wrote or read would suppose that the soul or spirit was included. Not unless he held the unscriptural theory of the negative.

To recapitulate all the square conflicts between the negative and Jesus would take more space than we have.

The negative feels that if he can call a truth pagan that settles it. Abraham was a pagan. Job ditto. Luke and Cornelius the same. Paul quoted from pagan authors. He told pagans that they were sons of God. The New Testament was written in a pagan tongue. Sometimes in order to hit an argument he could not meet, he would snatch a bottle of cathcus, or say it was pagan when it was not. Josephus was not a pagan. He was pagan when it was the chief witness as to the belief of the Sadducees, and the meaning of the word "demon." He helped in one of the most conclusive arguments as to the existence of the spirits of the wicked men after death. To escape its force the negative, paying no attention to the arguments laid down to show that it could not be lunacy, dogmatically asserted that it is lunacy. The sacred writers say it was not. A man might be a lunatic and have a demon too; a demon could make the possessed man act like a lunatic, or make him deaf and dumb, but Jesus and the twelve probably knew what they were talking about. Jesus never taught nor endorsed error. He spoke of Beelzebub as one of the names of Satan, just as it was current among the Jews. To say he endorsed error is to stain his name. He gave his apostles power to heal all manner of diseases, and to cast out demons. When they came back and reported that even the demons were subject to them in Jesus' name he said, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." The demons said "Art thou come to torment us before the time?" No case of lunacy there. The demons besought him not to send them into the abyss. Luke viii. Seven demons or a legion of demons were in one person. The negatives cases in that a complication of diseases. So the apostles healed diseases and healed demons. If we can change the New Testament every time his theory limps he can prove anything. Acts xvi. records a case of a woman with an unclean spirit. She could tell fortunes. Lunatics do not foretell. "He came out of her." Jesus and the apostles never speak of disease as "he." Why should Dr. Luke when writing of a case which happened years before? The doctor was at Philippi, he knew the circumstances, and did not need to bend to the prejudice of Theophilus and all the rest of us.

Prof. Huxley teaches that Jesus and the apostles were mistaken as to demoniacal possession, infidels have always said so, but Pharisees of Jesus' day gave a different explanation.

It is rather tough on a man to be obliged to say that Jesus endorsed error, and led his apostles to believe that they cast out demons, when he knew that they did not. The wild interpretations of Scripture necessary to sustain this Sadducean theory ought to convince any normal man of its error. Jesus says plainly, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Jno. xi. 26. Because Satan told a lie, telling Eve that she should not surely die if she disobeyed God, it does not follow that Jesus' saying is untrue.

Paul adds that Jesus abolished death, bringing life to light. So he speaks of departing, his body he calls a tent. 2 Cor. v. 1, his death a departure to be with Christ. What we call death, Jesus and Paul call sleep. He that believeth on the Son of God shall never die. The body is not the real man. It falls on sleep, but the believer never dies.

The negative overrides these emphatic teachings to say that Jesus meant "He that believeth shall die once, but not the second time." You can choose.

The probability is that Jesus knew. As the stars fade away in the light of the sun yet shine on, so our friends. The outward man perishes, it is mortal, while the term "mortal soul" is avoided by the sacred writers, and the spirit if called "incorruptible" by Eld. Peter, 1 Peter iii. 4, all we see is temporal, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever.

Jesus rebuked the ancient Sadducees, he said Abraham was alive, they said he was dead. When God says anything, that ought to end it for every one who wishes favor from heaven. But the answer of the negative, though he has not written it yet, would be, "God calls things that are not as though they were." 1 Cor. i. 28, and so he speaks of Abraham as alive. But God does not do so, the passage does not say nor mean that, such a statement makes Jesus use as truth that which is false.

So Paul says plainly, 2 Cor. xii., that he was caught away to the third heaven, to Paradise. How desperate the theory which makes out that Paul was caught away to the new heavens, which are not yet created.

It is marvelous how many times this theory has to bring in a forced, unnatural and violent interpretation of the Word. It is a pity that such kind hearted men should hug a theory which violates the highest teaching of the Master so often.

Some time they must see that they have been propagating error all these years. If their theory were not in such direct conflict with the Bible, it would strengthen the hands of the wicked. Men are bad enough as it is, but if they thought that there is no hereafter, merely a sinking into unconsciousness how much more reckless they would become. To preach this theory is to explain away much that Jesus said, it is not to preach the gospel. With kindest regards to all our readers I leave the subject for your decision before him who said, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

GEO. T. SMITH.

REPLY NO. 16.

A short time since Eld. Smith intimated that I entertained a belief that "innocent" children would receive the punishment awaiting ungodly people, to which I entered an emphatic denial. After such denials I was more than surprised I was grieved, to find the following in Eld. Smith's present paper speaking of Herod, and the children slain by him, he says: "At the resurrection all will come forth. The Apostles will be on the right hand, the babes and the monsters of iniquity on the left. * * * Can you see any justice in that? Sending the innocent children into fire prepared for the devil and his angels." Such a doctrine is perfectly infamous, it is revolting in the extreme. No person on earth has ever heard me advocate such a vile abomination. Eld. Smith knew I did not believe it, seeing but a short time has elapsed since I replied to his former insinuation. I will say once for all, no one will be raised to suffer "the second death," except those who are worthy of it. The "innocent," either young or old will not be raised to suffer the "second death." What purpose could he have in trying to fix such a revolting doctrine upon me? My opinion is, that he feels he has failed to prove his proposition, and seeks to cover his failure by raising a prejudice. In the proposition he engaged to prove that "The soul or spirit of man exists in a conscious unending state after the death of the body." Without fear of successful contradiction I say that not a single reader can put his or her finger on one passage of Scripture that he has quoted, which affirms the present immortality of either the soul or spirit. The reason is, they are not in the Book to be cited.

THE DEVIL TORMENTED FOREVER.

He quotes Rev. xx. 10, and gives that as an evidence of immortality of the devil and whatever is cast into the lake of fire. Eld. Smith does not seem to realize that the words "forever," "everlasting," etc., are used some 200 times in a limited sense. All lexicographers of any note admit that it is thus used. The passage in Rev. xx. is one of them. A similar passage to this is found in Isa. xxxiv. 9, 10.

Speaking of Idumea, it says, "The land thereof shall become burning pitch—it shall not be quenched night or day. The smoke thereof shall go up forever; from generation to generation it shall lie waste. None shall pass through it forever and ever." That prophecy has been fulfilled. That "forever" is now in the past. When these words are used in a limited sense, they simply measure the length of time the object spoken of can last.

In Rev. xx. the circumstances surrounding the passage show that it is symbolical and temporary. This is evident from what is cast into it. The beast is cast in representing a civil system; can that burn, and suffer torment? The devil is also cast in, which is called in the Scriptures the red dragon, this interpreters say is pagan Rome. Think of burning and tormenting that pagan system.

The false prophet is cast in, representing a false religious system, what nonsense it is to talk of casting political and religious systems into a lake of fire.

It shows upon its face that the Scripture is a symbol of destruction, making an end of what is cast into it. The wicked are also cast in. The explanation of the symbol is placed at the end of texts speaking of the lake of fire. "This is the second death." There never will be a resurrection from that death. They shall remain in the congregation of the dead."

"Death" is cast into the lake. "Hell" is also cast in. Can death and hell be burned and tormented? Before "hell" is cast in, it gives up its dead, and hell being destroyed there is no hell to send them back to. In this hell (hades) Eld. Smith has his place of torment, and paradise also. What will become of them when hell is cast into the lake of fire?

The "forever" connected with the lake of fire, ends with the close of the "day and night" period. The time will arrive when there shall be "no night there," and at that time, pain, sorrow and crying will also end. Hence, no such thing as the imaginary infernal hell of torment can exist beyond that period, because the forever, limited by "day and night," ends when there shall be "no night," "no pain," "no sorrow," "no death."

I will give a few samples where the word forever is used in a limited sense.

"Shew bread be an ordinance forever."

"Serve (his master) forever." "Leprosy shall cleave unto thee and thy seed forever" "be your bondmen forever." "Stones be a monument forever." etc.

Eld. Smith speaks of punishment being graded, few or more stripes. That is correct, but it all ends in being "punished with everlasting destruction." 2 Thess. i. 7. Is punishment graded in the infernal regions where they are supposed to be roasted throughout all eternity?

Eld. Smith intimates that I "neutralize everlasting punishment," and am unwilling to let "the plain Word of God supplant my theory. The plain Word of God says everlasting punishment is" "everlasting destruction." "Shall be punished with everlasting destruction." 2 Thess. i. 9. I reverentially bow to it, and accept every word of it, but I absolutely reject the pagan notion of endless torment. That is not Bible.

As to the word "demon," the Bible classes every adversary, no matter what it was, as a devil, at one time Jesus called Peter Satan. Judas was also a devil. It is not limited to disease, or supposed spooks. I have not space to review Eld. Smith's remarks about devils in this paper. They are too nonsensical to bear criticism.

Eld. Smith says, Paul calls "death a departure to be with Christ." He positively does no such thing. The word translated "depart" in the Greek is "return." The grammatical analysis of the text confirms the word "return," as in harmony with the original.

John iii. 13: "No man hath ascended up to heaven."

John xxiii. 33: "Whither I go ye cannot come."

He says, Paul says, "he was caught away to the third heaven." Paul says he had a vision about some other man being so caught away. It was not a matter of fact, but only a "vision," a kind of a dream. Eld. Smith's evidence is found in dreams, visions, specters, etc. The Old Testament was too much for him, he tried to throw that overboard.

The Word of God is the thing to tie to, there is something satisfactory for the mind to grasp.

Eld. Smith quotes "whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die," as though that proved the deathless nature of man. It has reference solely to the living believer who may be living when Jesus comes to raise the dead. "He that liveth," is in contrast with he that is dead. They "shall never die," being changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." Every child of Adam except those die. To say it is the spirit that don't die is a fallacy, the Bible never in a single instance ascribes immortality to either soul or spirit.

SOULS ENTER THE GRAVE.

Psa. xvi. 10: "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell."

Isa. xxxviii. 17: "Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption."

Job xxxiii. 18: "He keepeth his soul from the pit.

Psa. xlix. 15: God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."

Acts ii. 31: "His soul was not left in hell."

SOUL DIE.

Matt xxvi. 38: "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death."

Jas. v. 10: "Shall save a soul from death."

Ezek. xviii. 4: "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

Rev. xvi. 3: "Every living soul died in the sea."

Ezek. xiii. 9: "To slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live."

Isa. liii. 12: "He hath poured out his soul unto death."

Psa. lxxviii. 50: "Hespared not their soul from death."

Josh. x. 28: "He utterly destroyed them and all the souls that were therein."

THE WICKED SHALL CEASE TO EXIST.

Psa. xlvi. 12, 14, 20: "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish."

Isa. xxvi. 13, 14: "Thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish."

Prov. xxi. 16: "Shall remain in the congregation of the dead."

Psa. xxxvi. 10: "For a little while and the wicked shall not be, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be."

2 Pet. ii. 12: "But these as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, * * * shall utterly perish in their own corruption."

2 Thess. i. 9: "Shall be punished in everlasting destruction."

THE WORD IMMORTAL OCCURS ONCE AND IMMORTALITY FIVE TIMES IN THE BIBLE.

1 Tim. ii. 19: "The King eternal, immortal, invisible."

1 Tim. vi. 15: "The King of kings, the Lord of lords; who only hath immortality."

2 Tim. i. 10: "Brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

Rom. ii. 6; "Seek for glory, honor and immortality, eternal life."

1 Cor. xv. 53, 54: "For this corruption must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

And when "this mortal shall have put on immortality," etc.

ETERNAL LIFE NOT A PRESENT POSSESSION.

1 John ii. 25: "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life through Jesus Christ."

2 Tim. i. 1: "According to the promise of life."

Titus i. 2: "In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie promised before the world began."

Titus iii. 7: "Made heirs according to the hope of eternal life."

Rom. ii. 6: "Seek for glory, honor and immortality, eternal life."

Gal. vi. 8: "He that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."

FUTURE LIFE DEPENDS ON THE RESURRECTION.

Dan. xii. 2: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

Psa. xlix., "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."

Isa. xxvi. 19: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust."

Phil. iii. 10: "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

UNCONSCIOUS STATE OF THE DEAD.

Eccl. ix. 10: "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest."

Psa. vi. 5: "In death there is no remembrance of thee."

Isa. xxviii. 18, 19: "The grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee, they that go down to the pit cannot hope for thy truth."

Eccl. ix. 5: "The living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything."

Psa. cxlvi. 3, 4: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish."

MAN MADE OF DUST.

1 Cor. xv. 47: "The first man is of the earth earthy."

Gen. ii. 7: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground."

Job xxxiii. 6: "I also am formed out of clay."

Gen. xviii. 27: "I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am dust and ashes."

Psa. ciii. 14: "He remembereth that we are dust."

Job x. 9: "Thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me into dust again?"

SOULS CAN BE DESTROYED.

Psa. xxxv. 17: "Rescue my soul from their destructions."

Psa. lxiii. 9: "Thou that seek my soul to destroy it."

Acts iii. 23: "Every soul that will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed."

This ends the debate on this topic, but it will be continued on the subject of the Pre-millennial Advent of Christ, and the signs of its near approach.

W. H. WILSON.

Is the Book of Revelation a Mystery?

With the book of Revelation "which God gave unto his Son to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass," before me I find it a great book, I find it is a book which all other Biblical books end and meet. Without it, most if not all the future would be a mystery. While many say the book is a mystery in itself, if it contains only mysteries, that which man cannot understand, read or hear, why did he say, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy?"

1. It sets forth the second coming of our Savior, and makes it too plain to be a mystery.

2. If it is a mystery in regard to the reign of Christ with his saints, Matt., Luke and 1 Cor. are also a mystery, and not only this but also the coming of Christ.

3rd, If it is a mystery concerning the resurrection of both the just and unjust, all the books before it are full of mysteries.

4. If it is a mystery concerning the second death, why not call the books before it a mystery when the words die, death, dead, etc., occur only twenty-five hundred and eighty-two times in the Bible.

5. It cannot be the destruction of this earth which is a mystery, for the other books would also be a mystery on this subject. You will find 2 Peter and Rev. xx. in harmony on this point.

6. It surely could not be the new heaven and new earth that is a mystery to us, because it is mentioned once in Revelations and three times in the books before it.

7. Next comes that great mansion. We find that Abraham looked for a city, away back in his time before this revelation was given to man, nor even the New Testament. Today we know how wide, long, how many gates, how many walls, and what they are built of and goes so far as to tell us who can enter its gates, and who are to walk in the light of it. It even tells us of the tree of life, and what the leaves are for, and who may have a right to the tree of life.

Now we do not find it so great a mysterious book after all. We find the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelations are in harmony with each other, and that the book of Revelations forms the final consummation of all things of which all other Biblical books end and meet.

Blessed are they that do his commandments." Dear reader, have you obeyed them, are you walking in the ways of the Lord? If not, today is the accepted time. Come and take of the water of life freely. May the Lord help you to come.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

JOHN H. COX.

THE power of feeling for animals realizing their wants and making their pains our own, is one which is most irregularly shown by human beings. A Timon may have it, and a Howard be devoid of it. A rough shepherd's heart may overflow with it, and that of an exquisite fine gentleman distinguished man of science may be as utterly without it as the neither millstone. One thing I think must be clear: till a man has learnt to feel for all his sentient fellow-creatures, whether in human or in brutal form, he has not yet ascended the first step towards true civilization nor applied the first lesson from the love of God.—Frances Power Cobbe.

The evidence of true holiness is hatred to, mourning over, and forsaking of sin.

"The Second Coming of Christ." No. 2.

Heb. i. 6, according to the Revised Version, says, that the first born is to be brought again into this inhabited earth. "Every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him." Rev. i. 7. I need not multiply passages. These are very plain. If your theory of the Bible allows you to play fast and loose with them, then we know where we stand, and what is and what is not the controversy between us.

II. But what are the evidences that he is to come in the midst of the ages, and not at the end of all time? All the prophets tell of a redeemed earth—redeemed nations, the palingenesis, a millennial time, the last term, of course, taken from the Apocalypse. The Scriptures reveal two things,—an age and an event. The age—of glory for this earth, the event—the coming of our Lord. Which precedes? Is the world under present conditions and with the present preaching of the gospel to gradually grow into the millennial glory, and Christ to come after that; or does the Word teach that the reverse is true, and that this dispensation we are now in is parenthetical, elective, preparatory, full of import in the plan of God, but by no means the kingdom promised? Much in the work to do; in the work we omit; and in our expectations and the spiritual attitude of the disciples depends upon the answer we are constrained to give to this question. It certainly is not an idle question.

There are many lines of argument that should make this plain. Let us indicate but a few:—

1. Disciples are told all through the New Testament to watch for his coming as imminent. By imminent, of course, I do not mean sure to come soon, but liable to come, nothing else to be waited for, nothing else revealed as an object of hope. That seems to have been the attitude the Christians were to be in waiting, expecting, looking for the absent Lord, faithful in doing what was committed to them to do, during his absence; because he might return in their day to call them to account as to their stewardship, not the judgment day of the world, but an accounting day for his brethren.

So, in Titus, the coming is called "The Blessed Hope." Of the Thessalonian Christians it is said that they "turned to God from idols, to serve a living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus (his earthly name again) who delivereth us from the wrath to come." And the Greek word here means "to wait up to;" no word could be stronger. A word equally strong is used in Phil. iii. 20: "For our citizenship is in heaven; from whence also we wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation that it may be conformed to the body of his glory."

I need not multiply passages of this kind. We are exhorted to watch and to wait for his personal coming; but that cannot be done on the theory that he comes not until after the thousand years is complete. The theory must be wrong as it nullifies the command. Practically it has nullified the command wherever it has had sway. The church has ceased to look for the coming of the Lord. If he were to come today, Christendom would be unutterably surprised. The fact is, he is not wanted.

Then, there has followed, as a most natural consequence, a perversion from the command to look for him, to a command to look for death. And so it comes about that it is thought to be very pious to look downward into the grave, to meditate on death, and so many of our hymns ridiculously close with reflections regarding the bier and the tomb. To offset that, there has been of late an attempt to give the lie to the Bible, and call death a sweet angel. A whole mass of heathen philosophy has been appealed to, and no end of sentiment, to try to cover up with roses the narrow house. The Christian way is "the blessed hope," the "upward look."

Extremely little is said about death in the writings of the New Testament. Let me stop right here to repel the distortion that makes death and the Lord's coming synonymous. One of the most essential things I believe is to get the dust of habit out of our eyes on this subject. The fact is that the two are at opposite poles. In death we look down. For the Lord's coming we look up. In one we weep, in the other we rejoice, as when dear ones come home. Death is a separator. The Lord's coming brings reunion. Death is an enemy. The Lord's coming brings to us the best friend. Death is the evening of life. The Lord's coming is a glorious morning. The Christian is totally delivered from thinking about death. It is as if it were not. It is as the epitaph on Dean Alford's tomb runs: "The inn of a traveller on his way to Jerusalem." He makes little of it, but everywhere he is to look for the Lord's coming. [Don't you see, if death is the Lord's coming, then to be Scriptural you must preach on it; urge people to meditate on it.]

II. Let me give you but one more line of thought now to show that our Lord comes before the Millennium.

We are shown here in the Word to expect the gradual and complete triumph of righteousness in this dispensation. The tares are the children of the wicked one, and they are to grow together with the wheat in a mixed condition till the harvest. The harvest is the end of this age. There is no place for a Millennium of blessedness there. The secret working of the spirit of Antichrist is to go on until it heads up in the full development of the man of sin, and the Lord destroys him with the brightness of his coming. But the Millennium is after Antichrist's destruction. In John's great epistle, which says most about the secret working of Antichrist, the Holy Spirit is promised to keep the Christian from being led away by him, to give him a spirit of discernment as to his wiles, but not to destroy him, either gradually or suddenly. No, he continues working till the end of this age. There is no room for a glory time on this age before it comes, but after.

Carefully collate the passages that speak of Antichrist, and there will be seen to be no possible place to get a Millennium in till after the appearing of our Lord. There will be found to synchronize several very great events—the destruction of Antichrist, the binding of Satan that he should deceive the nations no more, the coming of the Lord, the resurrection of the saints of the first resurrection, the restoration of Israel, and the beginning of the Millennium. It is folly to expect the regeneration of nations, even our own, while Satan is deceiving them as he does till that time comes.

Let me read one more passage that pictures for us the state of things when the Lord comes. Luke xvii. 26-30 (R. V.): "And as it came to pass in the days of Noah, even so shall it be be also in the days of the Son of Man. They ate, they drank, they married, they were given in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise even as it came to pass in the days of Lot, they ate, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but in the day that Lot went out from Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. After the same manner shall it be when the Son of Man shall be revealed." As he took out Lot from Sodom, so will he take out his people first before any destruction, but surely, there is no place to get in a Millennium before he comes. So far as I have seen this is the uniform, consistent teaching of the Scriptures.

III. Let me now, as briefly as I can, reply to some objections that have come to me, and that you may have heard.

1. It is objected that the doctrine advocated is founded on a quite literal interpretation of the Scriptures.

Answer. It is founded on the idea that the Bible can be understood and was written for the purpose of being understood; that it needs not so much to be interpreted as to be believed. The great trouble is that man does not want to believe anything he cannot measure.

2. It is objected that this doctrine is pessimistic. I repel that charge with all my might. I am getting hardened to being called a pessimist, but I know I am the very best kind of an optimist. I see things for this old earth of ours and for its society, the glory of which has not even entered into the thoughts of modern reformers. I most heartily pity the man, that feels under the necessity of being an optimist in these days of thickening gloom, who sees not God's plan o. the ages, as it is revealed in the Word of God, and is expecting all from the development of man.

"Well roars the storm to him who hears
A deeper roar across the storm."

3. It is objected that such a doctrine cuts the nerve of missions. It is too late to say that now. Thousands of the most devoted missionaries in the very hardest fields are ardent premillennialists. All of Muller's missionaries and Muller himself, all of the men of The China Inland Mission, nearly a thousand strong, who are following up the great interior waterways of China, going where no others will dare go, pushing out into Mongolia and into Thibet itself, all the men and women of the International Missionary Alliance scattered now in all parts of the world, going without the promise of a definite salary, in the heat of the Soudan, and on to the Congo, in China and India; these missions are entirely on this basis.

(To be continued.)

Many a Christian trusts Christ to carry him through the valley of the shadow of death, who does not rely upon him to take him through the dread to-morrow. If you are Christ's you have no right to worry. He is a safe pilot. You can trust him in the shallow, quiet river, as well as in the sea beyond.

Announcement.

The Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of Indiana, will be held at Plymouth, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 12, 1896.

This meeting will be held in the new church building that has been built the past summer, and it is expected that Brother and Sister Woodward will be here, as the dedication will be at this time. An invitation is given to all brethren and sisters to attend this meeting. The Plymouth congregation are anxious that as many as can will come and aid in the "house-warming," as they are pleased after meeting in a little hall so many years, to have a house separate of their own. Come, all who can, it is the Lord's work we are engaged in, and let us be energetic in its advancement.

The Special Evangelist Fund.

This fund is raised and controlled by the Sisters, for the purpose of placing some young man in the field as a proclaimer of truth. Hereafter in making donations to this fund please say whether or not you intend to give a stated amount regularly each quarter. This work is continuous, and quarterly contributions are asked for, though single time gifts are very welcome. Send all monies for this fund to Mrs. Eva L. Underwood, Plymouth, Ind.

Books and Tract List.

"THE SCRIPTURES OPENED."

Thoughts and themes for Bible students, by Robert Ashcroft. This is a new work of 376 pages, containing a variety of lectures and short articles on important Bible subjects, exhibiting the revealed purpose of God concerning the earth and all its families, how we may become identified with those purposes, "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ" of all that God hath promised. It is believed the book will commend itself to the unprejudiced mind, and be useful in leading to a more perfect understanding of and love for the Scriptures of truth. Numerous testimonials of a very satisfactory character concerning the merits of the book have been received from prominent brethren scattered abroad, and which we can find no place for in this brief notice. Sent by mail, post paid, on the receipt of $1.00. Address this office.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

FUTURE PROBATION.

Is that awaiting any of the unrighteous? A 150-page pamphlet by Wm. Glenn Moncrieff. This work was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid for ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for any who are interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send ten cents to this office for a copy.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 6 cts each or 30 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, with gamut for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 20 cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conant," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in RESTITUTION, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the RESTITUTION of April 22, 1896. 2 cts. each or 15 cts per dozen.

Address, THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Ind.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter, can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Poetry.

"Yet Rejoicing."

"Passing through the valley of weeping they make it a place of springs." Psa. lxxiv. 6—R. V.

Pilgrims in life's valley, oft we sow in tears—
Oft joy over sorrows and our faithless fears.
"He our Shepherd leadeth, doth each want supply,
Plans the path before us, guiding with his eye.

In the place of weeping living waters spring;
They who wept in silence hallelujahs sing;
For through all the desert—in afflictions vale
Flow his founts of blessing that can never fail.

Wells of Christ's salvation draw we from with joy,
While to do his bidding is our glad employ.
There's no place for mourning while our Lord and King
By his Spirit cheereth—on our way doth bring.

Passing through "strange trials," pilgrims hasting on—
Soon to share the glory that by faith is won;
Passing through and bringing showers upon our way;
Looking for the morning, longing for the day!

The Spirit.

Dear Household of Faith:

We read in John xvi., "When he the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." John xiv. 26, "But the comforter which is the Holy Ghost whom the Father will send in my name he will teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you." Acts ii. 38-39, shows plainly that the spirit is for us as well as for them. The bride will never be made perfect without it. It will guide you into all truth. Paul says in 1st Cor. x. "Now I beseech you brethren by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ that you all speak the same thing and that there be no divisions among you but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1st Cor. ii. 12, "Now we have received not the spirit which is of God that we might know the things that are freely given us of God, which things also we speak not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual." Eph. i. 17-20. That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of Glory may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him. The eyes of your understanding being enlightened that ye may know what is the hope of his calling and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe according to the working of his mighty power."

Read Eph. iii. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Then read chapter iv. 4, "There is one spirit even as ye are called in one hope of your calling one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Verse 12, "For the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. "Grieve not the holy spirit of God whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Eph. v. 26-27, "That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but that it should be Holy and without blemish." Now dear ones there is something wrong with us, we have had a form of godliness but denied the power. We have prayed so earnestly for the healing of the sick, the elders of the church have anointed them in the name of the Lord according to James v. 14, but they did not recover, turn to 1st John iii. 22, and whatsoever we ask we receive of him because we keep his commandments and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.' v. 2, 3, "Hereby this we know that we love the children of God when we love God and keep his commandments, for this is the love of God that we keep his commandments and his commandments are not grievous." Chap. ii. 7, "Brethren I write no new commandment unto you but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning." Then Christ gave a new commandment that we should love one another, but it did do away with his Father's commandment, it was written by the finger of God on tables of stone to stand forever. Read Deut. v. 29, "Oh that there were such a heart in them that they would fear me and keep my commandments always that it might be well with them and with their children forever." Read chap. vi. how they were to teach them diligently to their children, and it shall be our righteousness if we observe to do all these commandments, but did Jesus teach them? He said he come to do his Father's will. Matt. v. 17, Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophet, I am not come to destroy but to fulfill. We turn to the dictionary and find that fulfill means to perform what is required to answer a law by obedience so he come to obey God's law. 19th verse Whosoever therefore shall break one of the least commandments and teach men so, shall he be called the least in the kingdom of heaven. Rom iii. 31, Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea we establish the law," but you say the law was done away in Christ, there was a law done away, it points back to the passover and circumcision. Read Mark vii. 7, 8, 9, "for laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men." Jesus said if thou wilt enter into life keep the commandments. We know he did not bind the Sabbath on us as strict as it was on the children of Israel, he said it was right to do good on the Sabbath, if your ox fall in the ditch, will you not pull him out? Acts xviii. 4. Paul departed from Athens and came to Corinth and he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath day, but I thought we had one place that said they met on the first day of the week. Acts xx. 7, God's time counts from sun till sun. When the sun went down Sabbath evening the first day of the week commenced. Gen. i. 18, "And the evening and the morning were the third day." So Paul preached all night and departed on Sunday morning. I fear this is too long but there is so much I want to say, will let the rest wait till another time. I rejoice day and night for the light. The church may condemn me, but God will take care of his own. Your sister in Christ.

NANCY BOGGS.

"Their Silver and their Gold shall not be Able to Deliver Them."

I want to write a short article on the above question, for I see such a need of it. The world is now agitated over this all-important subject, and I want to sound the alarm and tell what the final result will be, and warn the brethren against mixing up with political parties. I would say: Stand aloof from all mixing with those ungodly parties. Take the warning given by James, v. 1-6; let us read: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rest of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire; ye have heaped treasures together for the last days." What days? The last days. The rich have kept back the wages of the poor, and the poor have cried unto God, and their cries have entered into the ears of the Lord: and these days are in connection with the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Read again, verses 7-9; "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord.....Be ye also patient, establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.....Behold the judge standeth before the door." We learn, then, that this gold and silver question is in the "last days." It is at the coming of the Lord; it is at the judgment of the last days.

Now, how will this gold and silver question be settled? The answer is given by the prophets as well as James. See Zeph. i. 11-18. Read, brethren, read; "Howl, ye inhabitants of Maktish, for all the merchant people are cut down; all they that bear silver are cut off." Verses 14 and 15: "The great 'day of the Lord' is near, it is near and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty man (men with much wealth) shall cry there bitterly. That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness." Surely we are now having days of distress, gloominess, darkness and trouble. All faces are gathering blackness, and the end is not yet. We may expect worse things before the Lord comes.

Now read the 18th verse: "Neither their gold nor their silver shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole land shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy; for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land."

Are we in the last days? What say you that profess to be brethren? Will you still say: "I will vote once more with the old corrupt parties and then if things don't get better I will quit voting." Listen to Paul, please: "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Again read: Ezek. vii. 5, 27: "An evil, an only evil, behold, is come, saith the Lord God." After which follows a description of the wrath that shall be poured out upon them that deserve his wrath. Don't fail to read it. Now verse 19: "They shall cast their silver in the streets and their gold shall be removed; their silver and their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord: they shall not satisfy their souls, neither fill their bowels, because it (silver and gold; riches) is the stumbling-block of their iniquity." Read on to end of chapter.

Oh, what a terrible picture of the last days! They are upon us. I have been sounding the alarm, and for so doing I have not as many brethren as I once had. But I can truly say: "None of those things move me; neither count I my life dear to me (this mortal life) that I may win Christ and be accepted of him" (and attain immortal life). I shall be satisfied.

Again read, Isa. ii. 1-22, There the prophet tells what will come to pass in the last days. Read 16th verse: "And upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures (pictures of desire, margin). As far as our country is concerned, just look at the pictures in nearly every window in the land. Verse 20: "In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats." Never was such a time of gold worship, silver worship (mammon) as is now. And the object of this great expenditure of money and lung power now going on to elect a standard-bearer for a corrupt party is to make it possible to legislate and make laws which will fill the pockets of the rich even fuller. A man of God, a true Christian, cannot mix with them and vote without defiling himself. A clean thing cannot come out of an unclean. A corrupt party cannot better the condition of things. But each brother and sister can, in an individual way, work and do some good, and perhaps save some. The mission of Christ is to come and purify the governments of earth, not men.

I will refer you to Zech. ix. 3, 4; Joel iii. 9–17; Ezek. xxxix. 1-22; Rev. xiv. 15–20. Read them. They describe the conditions which will exist in the last days at the coming of the Lord. No doubt we are in the perils of the last days, so let us be on our guard. Let us watch and be sober and let Cæsar run the governments of earth until a greater than he comes, even the Lord Jesus Christ.

J. S. HATCH.

Vice stings us even in our pleasures, but virtue consoles us even in our pains.—Dec. L.

"Rejoice."

"Let the heart of them rejoice who seeketh the Lord." 1 Chron. xvi. 10.

Those who seek the Lord have great reason to rejoice. "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Sometimes "the Word" does not dwell in us richly, and we stray from the path of duty.

We are not only invited to the throne of grace, but we are bidden to "come boldly." Do our hearts not rejoice at such a privilege?

Again, "Rejoice in as much as ye are partakers of his sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye shall be glad with exceeding joy." The heart that is now rejoicing in hope of the soon coming King, will then be glad with exceeding joy. Men's hearts will no more fail them for fear as they do now. But those who seek the Lord will rejoice, because "He cometh to Judge the earth." No more vain rallies for those who cannot rule in equity, or lift the hand of oppression from the poor. "If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher than the highest regardeth, and there be higher than they." Eccl. v. 8. We need not marvel at the matter. Human hands have never ruled in equity. They have never judged righteously the poor of the people, or saved the children of the needy, or broken in pieces the oppressor. Soon, very soon, the righteous rulers will come, Christ the King will be seen coming in the clouds of heaven.

"Give the King thy judgment, O God, and thy righteousness unto the King's Son. He shall judge the people with righteousness, and the poor with judgment, he shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." Think of such a ruler as this, 'tis not alone in one little province, but "He shall have dominion also, from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth, yea, all kings shall fall down before him; for he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also and him that hath no helper." Psa. lxxii. 1, 2, 4, 7, 8, 11, 12.

What a contrast between human rulers, and he that is to rule in righteousness. Now, while they are crying peace and safety, every nation is preparing for war. We cannot affiliate, or prepare with them. No, no, far from that. "When ye hear of these things," says the blessed Master, "Lift up your heads and rejoice," not because one nation is about to overthrow another or one party gain for a short time victory over another, but rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof. Let the field be joyful and all that is therein: Then shall all the trees of the woods rejoice before the Lord: for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth."

May we indeed be partakers of his sufferings, and found worthy that we may be glad with exceeding joy, is the prayer of a Sister striving to be an overcomer.

"Holy Men of God." 2 Pet. 1. 21.

Editor Restitution:

To call the teaching of those "holy men," "Half truths of the Old Testament," amounts to saying that, "The Holy Scriptures are not able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. iii. 15.

"If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one," or Jesus, "rise from the dead." Luke xvi. 31. Jesus is the originator of this story, and the Seed of Abraham. Gal. iii. 16. "And Abraham at this time is asleep, and ignorant of what is going on, even of those who are walking "in the steps of that faith which he had before he was circumcised." Rom. iv. 12; Isa. lxiii. 16, etc. "And seeing Abraham after all," the distance here is measured by time, and it only requires time to bring about something similar to the results in this story. See Luke xiii. 23, 28, 29; Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 14, 15, etc.

"Ye shall not surely die." Gen. iii. 4, is certainly the doctrine of the devil, and, to say that Jesus teaches it, is a false accusation, and brings us to the fulfilment of the prediction of Paul. 1 Tim. iv. 1, etc., and 2 Tim. iii. 3, etc. What next? The coming of the Lord, for does not this system exalt man above all that it calls God? See 2 Thess. ii. 2-4. Teaching that man has both body and parts, but its God has neither. The devil said, "Ye shall be as gods or angels." Gen. iii. 5; and in harmony with this, we are told that the dead are equal to the angels, and know more than the living. "Mystery Babylon" and her protestant daughter. Rev. xvii. 5. teach that there is no death, that what we call death is only a separation. But we are pleased to see the accuser in THE RESTITUTION condemned out of his own mouth, yea, his head has been cut off so to speak, with the sword that he professes to wield, and we hope that, 2 Tim. ii. 26, can reach his case. Amen.

Paul in harmony with Jesus, and the rest of the apostles preached Jesus and the resurrection. Acts xvii. 18; iv. 2; and John xi. 25. Paul's hope, Phil. iii. 10. And he, Paul, expected the crown of life at the appearing of Jesus, and his kingdom. 2 Tim. iv. 1-8. Amen! Paul teaches that, if there is no resurrection from the dead, that his service in Christ would be of no advantage whatever to him. And let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die, or are liable to die. 1 Cor. xv. 32. We are pleased with the spirit and patience manifested by the negative in this discussion. And claim for him the approval of a workman,—rightly dividing the Word of truth. Amen!

Selected.

[Selected by D. Howard.]

The Jew is the Key to History.

When the Most High divided the nations, he divided them according to the number of the children of Israel. After the scattering of the families of men at the tower of Babel, God began to choose a peculiar people, and he has been dealing with them ever since according to a definite revealed plan.

First, He called Abraham, and separated him from his own people, giving him the promise of the land and a numerous seed. His immediate descendants were called out of the land of their inheritance into Egypt, and the book of Genesis closes with the picture of a Hebrew coffin in a foreign land.

Then he led them out of Egypt and brought them under the discipline of law at Mount Sinai. Now we find all his promises taking a new form. Formerly it was "I will bless;" but now there is an if in every promise. That generation did not enter the promised land, but the second one did. It is always the regeneration that enters in.

Next came the reigns of Saul, David, and Solomon's failure, the breaking up of the monarchy, and in due time the fall of Israel, and the captivity of Judah from which the exiles came back for a little under Ezra and Nehemiah; and their ancient promises for a little seem to be about to be fulfilled. And their long-promised Messiah comes at last according to the prophecies of four thousand years. But they reject him, and the armies of Titus are sent to avenge their fearful crime in the crucifixion of their Lord.

Israel's history is henceforth under a dark and terrible eclipse, waiting the completion of the times of the Gentiles and the return once more of the Gentiles, and the return once more of the rejected Lord. But now let us pass through Israel that is, and survey the condition of the Hebrew people today.

The ten tribes are lost, and God alone can find them. Nor does it seem anything but waste of time for us to search for what God has hidden. When he is ready he will find these scattered tribes and bring them once more to the foreground of history.—Christian Alliance.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Judah is not yet extinct, but her children have suffered for eighteen centuries the extremest pressures of reproach, shame, and bitter sorrow.

In the year 54, the Roman soldiers butchered forty thousand Jews in Palestine. In the year 70, eight hundred thousand were put to death, and the survivors to more horrible sufferings. In 130 five hundred thousand perish under the cruelties of Hadrian. In the fifth century all their civil rights were abrogated. In the year 720, Canute banished them from England. In the eleventh century the Crusades began, and the Jew was the target of every possible outrage. They were fined, their property confiscated, and they were banished from England. In France, Louis the seventh, and Louis the ninth confiscated all their property and decreed their banishment from the country. Spain which had been their refuge, became at length their bitterest foe, and under Ferdinand and Isabella, eight hundred thousand Jews were ordered to leave the country, and hurry to the coast. They tried to embark in boats, but most of them perished, a few reaching the African coast where their descendents are found today in Morocco, and other regions.

As many as fifteen thousand Jews were killed at one time in Salonica in the sixteenth century. These are but a few of the unspeakable horrors of their sad story for nearly two thousand years, and had they not been God's chosen people, and possessed a charmed existence, they would long ago have been exterminated.

But let us turn to the third picture of the Jew as he is to be. The very fact that God has fulfilled his threatenings to them, makes it certain that he will keep his promise. Were I to read to you all the prophecies of this Book concerning Israel's glory, I would read you one quarter of the Book. You will find these promises in Deuteronomy and Leviticus, in Amos and Joel, in Isaiah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and especially in Zechariah the glorious vision of Israel's golden age.

Are there any indications today that these prophecies are about to be fulfilled? In Jeremiah xxx. 8, we read the promise that God is to break the yoke of their bondage. In the middle of the eighteenth century, the English Parliament began to restore to the Jews their civil rights and liberties, and the other nations of Europe have steadily followed, until in 1858 the Jew became entitled to the rights of citizenship in almost all civilized countries.

In the course of one hundred years their yoke was thus gradually broken. Again, Isaiah prophesied that God would take the cup of trembling out of their hands, and put it into the hand of all them that oppressed them. Isa. li. 22, 23. This began to be fulfilled in the hours of the French Revolution, when the people that had oppressed them began to taste of the same bitter cup. In Isaiah lxi. 6, it was announced that they should possess the riches of the Gentiles, and the fact is that one single Jewish family—the Rothschilds have loaned to European governments, in ten years, the enormous sum of twenty-four hundred million dollars. In a recent visit to Europe I found that in Central Europe seventy-three per cent of all the land is owned by Jews, and ninety-two per cent of the German banks are in possession of Hebrews. Seventy-five per cent of all the students in the Austrian universities are Jews, so that all the Hebrew holidays have to be kept by the colleges. In scholarship the leading authorities, in political economy, mathematics, languages, and science are Jews. In music, they are almost without a rival. The names of Strakosh, Verdi, Rosalsi, Rubenstein, tell their own story. Even in Christian theology, the leading authorities, both on the evangelical side of higher criticism, are such men as Neander, Delitzch, Meyer, and others, whose very names bespeak their Hebrew origin.

Yes, the Sun of Israel begins to rise. God's mighty footsteps are marching to Jerusalem. Happy they that understand his plans and enter into the partnership of his purpose of long oppressed Israel. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: for they shall prosper that love thee."—Cornelius Woelfkin in ———

EDITORIAL STAFF,
Directors of the C. P. Association.

M. JOBLIN, Corresponding Editor.

PLYMOUTH, IND. NOVEMBER, 11, 1896.

STOCKHOLDER'S MEETING.

The Stockholder's of the Christian Publishing Association will meet at Plymouth, Ind., Nov. 14, 1896, at 1:00 o'clock P. M. to elect a Board of Directors and transact such other business as may come before the meeting.

ROBERT RAILSBACK, Pres.
A. R. ENDERWOOD, Sec'y.

Now that the presidential election is over, and the country is settled so far as the policy of the government is concerned, we look for our patrons to fulfil their promises to us and send in the amounts owing us at once. We have a right to expect that you will be as good as your word. We have struggled along through the excitement of the campaign with very little money, and now that the time is here that you should remit, we expect you to favor us promptly. Do not lay this aside till you have arranged this little remittance. Each individual one may be small, but remember the littles from each will aggregate a large sum for us. We need money right now. It is our money that we want.

The money we have earned and should have. Remember we need it NOW.

WHERE Christianity is only fruitful of speculations and barren of good conduct, infidels abound.

PLEASE remember the wants of THE RESTITUTION. If our patrons will remit as fast as subscriptions expire, and friends that are able, will afford some extra help, all will be well.

UNDER all discouragements, we should bear up cheerfully, remembering that it is by trouble that God puts temper into the steel. If it will not bear tempering, it is not worth much.

So temperate was Cyrus in his youth that when Astyages urged him to drink wine, he answered, "I am afraid lest there should be poison in it; having seen the reel and scottish after having drunk thereof."

As a rule men confess everything but their own besetting sins. They steer clear of these. Who ever heard a man say, O Lord! I am as proud as Satan, humble me;" or, O Lord! I am so mean and stingy, that 'tis only with great pain that I can open my fists. Make me generous?

"IF you really wish to know your faults, ask your enemies. What your friends will never tell you (in that, of course not acting the true part of a friend) your enemies will. When they aim an arrow, it will be at the place where there is a break in the harness. They can hit the sore place in you with unerring aim."

DISTRACTED one, consider Jesus as having entered heaven and appearing in the presence of God for you. Consider him as infinite in wisdom to know your wants,—infinite in love to sympathize with you in all your sorrows,—infinite in power to support and strengthen under all your trials. And then consider what infinite riches of God's grace are stored up in him to supply all your needs now, and for disbursement by and by.

THE Transvaal Advertiser says it is not generally known that there are two or three small tribes of colored Jews dwelling under Magato. Though possessing the complexion and hair of the ordinary Kaffir, these people are of a very decided Semitic cast of countenance, and preserve most of the Jewish rites and ceremonies. They keep themselves isolated from the surrounding tribes, never leaving the country, and are described as a most industrious people. To the ethnologist these people would offer a very interesting field of research."

JESUS says; "Judge not, that ye be judged; for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged, and with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brothers eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or, how wilt thou say to thy brother: Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye," and behold the beam is in thine own eye. Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye," Matt. vii. 1.

THE formal opening exercises for the new church building at Plymouth will be held next Sunday morning, and the brethren and sisters expect to have a joyful time then. For years they have occupied a hall that was only reached by stairs, and was often too small, and now that a neat and comfortable house is completed, they feel like taking a fresh start in the work of the Master, and pushing on with renewed energy. Brother and Sister Woodward will be with us, and we hope for good results. Pray for us that God will bless our efforts to serve him.

Why Jesus Spake in Parables

Reader did you ever ponder over the passage where the disciples inquired of Jesus why he spake to the people in parables? If not we trust you will before you are much older. "He answering said to them, 'Because you are permitted to know the secrets of the kingdom of the heavens, but to them this privilege is not given. For whoever has [has what?] to him more will be given, and he shall abound; but whoever has not, from him will be taken even that which he has. For this reason I speak to them in parables; because seeing they do not perceive; and hearing, they do not understand; nor do they regard. And in them is fulfilled that prophecy of Isaiah, which says, 'By hearing you will hear, though you may not understand; and seeing, you will see, though you may not perceive; for the understanding of this people is stupified; they hear heavily with their ears, and their eyes they close; lest seeing with their eyes, and hearing with their ears, and comprehending with their mind, they should retrace their steps, and I should restore them. But blessed are your eyes because they see, and ears, because they hear," etc. If in connection with this you read 2 Peter ii. 12-16 you will see that men can so far forsake the right way,—go astray so far that they cannot retrace their steps; "cannot cease from sin." Have you taken heed how you hear the Word? If not be warned lest indifference cause the hardening process to set in; and the mist of darkness be reserved for you for ever. See 2 Peter ii. 17.

Conscience.

Conscience has furnished a theme for thousands to discuss from different points of view. The philosopher, the theologian, the socialist, the rationalist, the skeptic and the evolutionists have attempted to define it, and have given definitions as widely variant as their schools of belief or thought. Its relation to the mind has constituted the chief ground of dispute. Many teach that conscience represents a principle or faculty in man that discerns the right or wrong of actions. We do not understand that conscience holds any such office. Conscience, in our opinion, is not a knowing faculty at all, and therefore cannot discern the right or wrong of actions. It might be objected here that the Scriptures use the Word as if all expected to obey it, and that that fact militates against our position; but we do not think so. The conscience, as we understand it, impels, or incites one to do what is BELIEVED to be right. A person being taught that such and such things are right, and such and such things are wrong,—conscience bids that person do what is believed to be right, or to avoid what is believed to be wrong. But this is no guarantee that any particular course of action is either right or wrong. A person may have been wrongly educated, and therefore may believe that wrong is right, or right wrong. Conscience, as we understand it, takes its cue from the intellect, and incites a person to do what he believes to be right; and that being the case, any one can see that conscience, of itself, is by no means a safe guide for our conduct; and therefore it is a great mistake to make it an infallible monitor. The same Paul who lived in all good conscience before God while persecuting the saints, also lived in all good conscience before God as one of the saints, and labored night and day to call others to saintship. The same conscience impelled him to follow two opposite courses of conduct. His intellect, however, had in the mean time been enlightened. He had discovered that he had made a tremendous mistake, and hence he was led to say to the Lord of the Christians, "What wilt thou have me to do. Being told what to do, he at once did it."

It is the duty of [illegible] the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty to ascertain what the will of the Lord is, and what the commandments of Jesus are, and then give conscience full play, and then our acceptance will be assured. Conscientiousness permits those in whom it is largely developed, to be just in judging of the conduct, opinions and talents of others. Such persons are scrupulous in the performance of promises; and when they make mistakes that subject them to criticism, they are as ready to condemn themselves as others, who may be guilty of the same errors.

We think the fact that great crimes have grown out of good intentions, proves the correctness of our claims regarding conscience. Even veneration for God and the Bible have prompted to evil doing, and brought people to a most disgraceful end. Indeed nothing will prompt people to greater extremes of crime than a mistaken sense of duty. Morbid religious feelings have frequently led to murder. And the most sanguinary pages of history are those that record the religious wars of nations, and the persecutions of religious zealots. At first it would seem as if we must ascribe downright insanity to the supporters of the Spanish Inquisition, and the English Authorities who counselled the outrage upon the Scottish Coventers,—but no; they were not insane in the proper sense, but fired with zeal in behalf of their faith,—which was commended by vast numbers of people. It will not be necessary to speak of the conscientious barbarities perpetrated in India."

Brethren and Sisters in the Anointed One, let us praise and magnify the Lord for having found the Key of Truth with which to regulate the faculty of conscience; and then praise and magnify Him more by the use of it.

Current Events.

Throughout the world Bismark is regarded as one of the ablest of living statesmen and we give below an article contributed by him to the Hamburger Nachrichten on the Anglo-Russian conflict which he says is sure to come, which reads as follows:

"All that is happening in the Orient and in east Asia is only the prelude to the decisive struggle which Russia will some day force upon England. While the northern colossus, which already has pushed forward its forposts to the very doors of India, is ever intent upon developing and guarding its military roads to the frontier, and upon freeing the Black sea and the Pacific fleets from the restraints now laid upon them, England prepares to defend herself. She prepares to defend herself by seeking, in nervous haste, to gain possession of those positions from which she can threaten Russia's advance by land and can prevent Russia's fleet from getting to sea. Therefore, England has fixed her eye on Arabia, and Syria, and Armenia. From these lands she could make a flank movement on Russia's line of operations against India. Therefore, also, has she looked recently to Crete, where she could establish a naval station from which she could operate to check the Russian Black sea fleet. In east Asia she seeks to obtain the land of Quelport (off the southern extremity of Corea). This island would give her the same position as to Vladivostok that Crete would give her to the Black sea. These English plans suffice to explain the incendiary policy which England pursues unremittingly.

England's object in making the trouble in the Orient is not only to gain possession of the military and naval bases referred to, but also to keep Russia so busy that the English cabinet will have free hand in east Asia, and thus be able to restore English prestige and influence in that part of the world. In east Asia this task would be very difficult, however, as recently Russia's influence there has grown extraordinarily. Enormous interests are at stake for both in east Asia. Years ago it was predicted that east Asia was about to play a more conspicuous part than ever before in the world of international politics. We think that the beginning of this new condition is apparent in England's effort to further her east Asiatic interests by spurring on the powers of the European continent to a general war. It was apparent also in her policy of setting Japan and China upon each other, although in this case she has failed to secure the expected benefits.

In their struggle for the predominating position in east Asia, Russia and England seek first and foremost to control the peninsula of Corea, which owing to its geographical situation between China, Japan and Russia, is exceedingly important. The transsiberian railway will enable Russia to act in Corea with much more decision and force. The construction of this railway was a matter of life and death, as far as Russia's maintenance of her incomparable naval station at Vladivostok was concerned. Without such railway connection with Europe there could be no lasting guarantee of the safety of that station, which has cost endless labor and uncounted millions, and is of the greatest importance for the far reaching plans of Russia in the Pacific. Vladivostok is a thorn in England's side, for she knows that, in case of war, Russia could operate from that port to destroy the English trade with east Asia, India and Australia, and could compel her to weaken her European fleets to re-enforce her east Asiatic squadron. The transsiberian railway will increase enormously the value of Vladivostok, as by it Russia can transport troops and materials in a tenth the time it now takes by sea.

However, Russia is not content with the possession of Vladivostok which, while a valuable naval station, is not always free of ice. She wishes to gain another strong position, namely, the island of Gensong (Port Lazareff), which lies five degrees further south, off the east coast of Corea, and is open all the year around. On the other hand England has tried twice to seize the island of Quelport, off Corea's southern extremity, where Port Hamilton offers her an excellent naval station. In both stations, however, she has given up for unknown reasons the pushing of these efforts to the point of actual possession. Should she get this island England would have a well situated base of operations for the protection of her commercial interests in east Asiatic waters, for Quelport would serve England as haven, arsenal and coaling station for her navy. Moreover, from this base she could hold China in check by threatening Nagasaki, or Yokohoma while barring the way of the Russian fleet from Vladivostock, Nikolajevsk or Port Lazareff, to the Indian ocean. Were Quelport in English hands the warships in Russia's east Asiatic ports would be virtually blockaded, and, with small effort, England could promote her Chinese and Indian enterprises, despite Russia's opposition.

It was to hasten this opportunity that England in 1894 egged China and Japan on to war. In August, after the war had broken out, the world was surprised by that treaty of commerce in which England, without apparent compensation from Japan, granted her such an important concession as the submission of Japan's resident Englishmen to the laws of the land. That treaty indicated very close relations between the two countries. It was then clear, even to persons not intimately connected with the circumstances, that it was English diplomacy which had pushed Japan into the war with China so that England, according to her cherished custom, might fish in troubled waters to her own advantage. For Russia the war was exceedingly inopportune, as before the completion of the transsiberian railway it would be very difficult for her to develop the needed strength in the Yellow sea. Therein, however, lay England's opportunity, in view of her eagerness to secure Quelport, to push Japan at once to the decision of arms as regards the possession of Corea. We see by this that the English policy in the far east was then substantially the same as the English policy in the Orient. In 1894 England wished to throw Corea into Japan's hands, so as to gain from this secret ally the island of Quelport, with Port Hamilton; today, for exactly similar reasons, we see England advocating the annexation of Crete to Greece, or, still more to her liking, Crete's autonomy, in order that she might obtain Suda Bay, already assured to her by secret treaty, and thus be in a position to blockade the Russian Black sea fleet in either the Black sea or the Aegean.

It may be rightfully regarded as the retribution decreed by a just Providence that England was condemned to lose the fruits of her mischievous and reckless policy in east Asia. Since 1894 England's position in east Asia has grown substantially weaker. The war to which she incited Japan necessarily drove China into the arms of Russia. The understanding between these two great empires was all the easier in view of the fact that Russia always had been very considerate with China and once had even given back to her territory which had been taken away by conquest. Today there is an alliance between them. Russia may now build a railroad through Manchuria, in connection with the transsiberian railway, and soon it will be possible to go by rail directly from St. Petersburg to Pekin. This is an achievement of immeasurable importance, and a terrible blow to England's ocean trade.

Recently we have heard much of an understanding between Russia and England. One report was that they agreed fully upon a course of action regarding Crete. Such report indicates how earnestly certain circles of the English, Danish and Greek courts desire to lead Russian diplomacy into an unnatural channel. But Russian diplomacy has shown itself always too steadfast and purposeful to be guided by such intrigues. Water and fire will mingle before Russia and England come to an understanding in international politics. This is sufficiently evident from the foregoing sketch of the Anglo-Russian conflict of interests.

As for common action between Russia and England against Turkey, there is absolutely no chance of such a thing. Turkey is regarded by Russia as a buffer country, perhaps also as a possible ally against England. Many persons are inclined to underestimate the vitality and importance of Islamite fanaticism which easily could be fanned into flame in a war against England. All that Turkey lacks, in case of war, is money, and money is just what Russia is able to give her. Russia certainly will not try to break that sword which some day may be of the greatest use to her. Russia would be foolish, indeed, to consent to an English protectorate over Armenia, Syria and Crete, for England wishes these positions merely to use them against Russia.

An attempt was made some time ago to interpret the strengthening of Russia's Mediterranean squadron as indicative of Russia's intention to make common cause with England against Turkey. The fact is, Russia's action had exactly the opposite to this in view. There had long been a suspicion that England was planning to repeat her performances at Alexandria in 1882, and was hoping, after the capture of the seaports of Candia, Retimo, and Canea to proclaim her protectorate over the island. Therein is to be found the reason for the Turkish commander's sudden order to concentrate all the troops at these forts. England need not deceive herself; Russia and France never would tolerate such a performance. What then? There is the danger?"

In a letter dated Jerusalem Aug. 21, 1896 a correspondent of the Advocate writes: "We are in great trial now. Many of my European friends have arranged to leave for Egypt, although the cholera is raging there fearfully, but they say we do not fear the cholera as much as we do the Moslems. Our Pasha will be changed this week, and I hear that the Pasha who will take his place is a Christian (Greek).

There is a rebellion at Damascus. The governor has refused to send out any more recruits for the government, as also has the Effendi and Pasha of Jerusalem. The Druses are well armed by the Greeks with dynamite and guns. They have been victorious in every battle this summer, and the Turks are afraid of them, as well they may be. The Bedouins have joined them and Damascus is in danger. What is most feared here is the low class brutal; they are strong, and believe that Christians are the cause of all this trouble. The Russian and Latin churches are all arsenals, filled with military stores. Also in every Christian village, every man is armed with a knife and a gun. It is admitted by all classes that we are in a very critical time.

There will be no tourists this year, and the poor dragomen and Jewish wood-workers will starve. There were several hundred Italian pilgrims started on the way here last week, but were warned not to venture. There are fifteen days quarantine in the ports, and nothing can be sent from Jaffa or Haifa by ships."

Another letter dated Jerusalem Sept. 26, 1896 says: The last two weeks have been a time of terror and uncertainty. No telegrams are allowed. It is rather quieter today, but there are all kinds of rumors. The Armenians are in such a state of fright that they are unable to attend to business. Our postmaster has news that his own brother has been cut to pieces, and he has other relatives of whose fate he is in the dark. Private letters arrive by every post telling of more sorrow.

The Armenian Patriarch is a prisoner here, guarded by soldiers. The Pasha is doing all he can to keep peace. The Mosque of Omar is strongly guarded, and it is closed before six o'clock. The Armenian church and convent is also guarded by Turkish soldiers, and all these places have been searched by the police. We don't [illegible] much at night, fearing robbers [illegible] are prowling about all night,—this, [illegible] the barking of the dogs and the firing of guns keeps us awake till we fall asleep from exhaustion. But the poor Jews are the greatest sufferers. Mr. Johnson, an American Jew, said to me yesterday, "My father and I who live alone expect every night to have our throats cut before morning."

Last week notices were posted about the city warning the people to keep their doors locked all the time, as there was but slight protection. We are assured that the Effendis will try to keep the peace as they are large real estate owners and they know sure that they themselves would be the greatest sufferers.

The Russians are quiet, but are active. They are firing guns, and their flags are seen flying more than ever before.

We hear that cholera is still raging in Egypt, and there is no travel to and from that country. Our mails are often delayed five or six days, and the Turkish post is nearly deserted. It seems to be doing very little business, but the Austrian post is so crowded every day that it is nearly impossible to reach the delivery window. Last Saturday I waited over an hour to get a chance to speak to the clerk, but had to come away without seeing him. It seems that friends of the people here are very anxious about the state of this country, and they are writing every day to their friends, wishing to hear of their fate.

Our future is dark and clouded during this present anti-Christian, bloody age. Oh, that it might soon end. The people are in a condition to imagine many things that are not real. The best remedy for this is implicit faith in God,—that he rules. He is Almighty and will protect us in the path of duty. We have his unerring Word that he will be the strength and hope of his people and defend them in these last great conflicts at Jerusalem. "Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity and passeth by the transgressions of the remnant of his heritage? He retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy." How in accord with the loving character of Israel's God. He will turn again, he will have compassion upon us, and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea. Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and thy mercy to Abraham which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old." Who can help loving such a God as this?

Yours in trial.—

Home and Friends.

There's a power to make each hour
As sweet as heaven designed it;
Nor need we roam to bring it home,
Though few there be that find it.
We seek too high for things close by,
And lose what nature gave us;
For life hath here no clarms so dear
As home and friends around us.

We oft destroy the present joy,
And future hopes, nor praise them,
While flowers as sweet bloom at our feet,
If we'd but stoop to raise them.
For things as fair still greater are
When youth's bright spell hath bound us;
But soon we're taught that earth hath naught
Like home and friends around us.

The friends that speed in time of need,
When hope's last reed is shaken,
Do know us still, that come what will,
We are not quite forsaken.
Though all were night, if but the light
From friendship's altar crowned us,
'Twould prove the bliss of earth was this—
Our home and friends around us.

Smith and Wilson Discussion. Number 1.

Proposition:—The second coming of Christ spoken of in Matt. xxv. 31, Acts i. 9-11, will be pre-millennial, and may reasonably be expected within a few years. Wilson affirms and Smith denies.

The above proposition was written by Elder Smith, who also selected the two passages of Scripture cited. Acts i. 9-11, prove beyond successful controversy, that the second coming will be literal, personal, and visible. As he ascended from Olive's brow, "they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up," "and a cloud received him out of their sight." As the loving disciples gazed after the ascending form of their Lord and Master two angelic visitants said: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven, this same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." If he comes "in like manner," it will be just as literal, personal and visible, as was his ascension "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him." Rev. i. 7.

"They shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Matt. xxiv. 30. This glorious coming will be visible to the tribes of earth. The literality of the coming cannot be doubted by any reasonable student of the Scriptures. I affirm that this coming will be pre-millennial. Elder Smith denies. The word pre signifies before, and when connected with the word millennial, means before the millennium. It is derived from two words: mille, a thousand, and annus, a year, and means a thousand years.

The next passage in the proposition is Matt. xxv. 31, which plainly teaches the pre-millennial advent of Christ, or in other words, that he will come in his glory before he sits upon the throne of his glory. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." When he shall "come in his glory," it will be visible to "all the tribes (or nations) of the earth," and it is when he comes in this manner that he shall "Sit upon the throne of his glory." If he does not "sit upon the throne of his glory," until after "he shall come in his glory," is it positively clear that his coming is before his reign, in place of a thousand years after his reign, as our post millennialists teach? They call the church the kingdom, and in their social meetings you will often hear them talking about "extending the kingdom," and new converts are spoken of as "born into the kingdom," and by means of Sunday schools, churches, missionaries, and mission societies, etc., etc., they talk of converting the world, and extending the kingdom, until the whole world shall become a brotherhood of nations, and the world be restored to its primal state of blessedness. Thus by human instrumentalities they expect to bring about a period of restitution before the advent of the Lord Jesus. The above is all a vain dream. This will be brought about by the millennial reign of Christ. When will this restitution begin? See Acts iii. 20, 21: "He shall send Jesus Christ, which was before preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

The heaven is to retain Jesus "until the times of restitution of all things," begin, and not until they have become historic facts. What will be restored among other things? See Acts i. 6: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" See Matt. xix. 28: "In the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory ye shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging (or ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel." Notice it is "when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory," and not after he has reigned a thousand years.

In harmony with the above is Acts xv. 14-16: "Simeon hath declared how God at first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name. (By the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom)  After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up."

When will he "build again the ruins?" "I will return, and will build again," etc. Post-millennialists teach the reverse.

Says Isaiah: "Shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called the repairer of the breach. The restorer of paths to dwell in."

"Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion: put on thy beautiful garments O, Jerusalem, the holy city: for henceforth there shall no more come unto thee the uncircumcised and the unclean. Shake thyself from the dust; arise and sit down O, Jerusalem; loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion." Isa. lii. 1, 2.

When will this take place? Psa. cii. 16: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." That don't indicate that it will be a thousand years after but "when the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."

Post-millennialists have to wrest the Scriptures, and do a great deal of misconstruing, spiritualizing, and all manner of false interpreting to make out a case at all. The readers will get some samples of this, if Eld. Smith is a pentecostal church-kingdom, post-millennialist of the old type.

The Lord Jesus will be the great restorer of the breach, and he will come before in place of after that work is done. In Rev. xxi. 5. he says: "Behold, I make all things new." It is Jesus who does this work. "I make all things new." and not some one else. He does not make all new things, restore, build again. The heavens retain Jesus until the time for the restoration of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets, and not a moment longer.

If we have to wait for the church-kingdom with all its human agencies to accomplish this, we may give up in despair, it is beyond their power to accomplish it. It amounts to nothing but a vain dream, an air-castle. It is just about as likely to be realized as an inheritance, as the sky-kingdom for so-called immortal ghosts they love so well to picture to their deluded hearers.

W. H. Wilson.

Reply—No. 1.

A good man who does not understand Paul's direction "rightly dividing the Word" can make the Scriptures a tangled mass of confusion. To him all Scripture is on a level. He does not distinguish between poetry and prose, perceives not the vast difference between the two covenants or the three dispensations. The letter that killeth is of sole importance to him, the spirit which giveth life is unobserved, even the Old and the New are quoted as though they were the same.

There are two Israels, three Jerusalems, five baptisms and several comings of Christ in the New Testament. It is easy to work dire confusion by ignoring distinctions which the Holy Spirit has made.

Duty is plain; interpretation is most difficult. Young, in his Concordance, gives over seventy rules of exegesis, with instances from the Bible. Suppose a man to pay no attention to these rules which are the garnered experiences of centuries of devout and intelligent study of the Bible, can he expect to rightly understand the Word? Just in proportion to the strength of his conviction that the Bible is one book, easily understood, with its literal interpretation, the only interpretation, will it be difficult for him to discover the truth. The probability is that he believes today just what he did twenty-five years ago. He goes to the Bible to prove his theory, and a man who seeks, finds. In the article above, the ancient earthly kingdom of Israel, the restored kingdom which the apostles hoped for, the spiritual kingdom of Christ, and the everlasting kingdom are jumbled together.

In the opening of a discussion there ought to be a definition of terms, a statement of what is to be proved. The affirmative ought to tell us what he means by millennium, what by the kingdom, the reign of Christ etc. He appears to think that Christ is not now sitting on the throne of glory. "Heaven is my throne and earth my footstool." There are not two thrones in any kingdom, there could not be a more glorious throne than that of God.

Jesus is now a King enthroned. In his prayer Jno. xvii. 5, Jesus said: "And now, O Father glorify me with thine own self with the glory I had with thee before the world was." In Luke xxiv. 26, "Ought not Christ to suffer these things and to enter into his glory." In Heb. ii. 9 we see "Jesus because of the suffering of death crowned with glory."

In Phil. ii. 9, "God highly exalted him and gave unto him the name which is above every name." In 1 Cor. xv. 24-28. we are taught that Christ must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet, then he will deliver up the kingdom to the Father." 1 Tim. iii. 16, says he was received up in glory. In Acts vii. 55. Stephen, and xxii. 7-11, Paul saw Jesus in glory. In Rev. iii. 21, Jesus says he is seated in his Father's throne. in xxii. 1. the throne is shown to be one, "the throne of God and the Lamb." So Jesus is now king, he is seated upon the throne of glory, and of course he will be when he comes at the judgment day.

As to restoring, making new, Jesus is doing that now. The passage quoted and misapplied by the affirmative will be found in Acts xv. 14-19. Read it and see for yourself that Jesus is now rebuilding the tabernacle of David. He is making men and women new. 2 Cor. v. 17 every day, six thousand on an average every day in the year.

Since Eld. Wilson has not told us what the millennium is, we turn to the Bible. In one chapter only is it named. Six times it occurs in Rev. xx. Read it and you will see that Satan is to be bound for a thousand years so that he cannot deceive the nations. That would be universal righteousness. After the thousand years are finished Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall deceive the nations, raise a war and be overcome. After that the devil will be cast into the lake of fire to be tormented forever. Now turn to Matt. xxv. 31-46, which the affirmative coolly says is pre-millennial, and note that it describes the judgment day. There the devil and those whom he deceived are consigned to the lake of fire. Turn again to Rev. xx. 11-15, and you have Matt. xxv. 31-46 repeated. Matt. xxv. 41, "Depart from me ye cursed into the eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels" is Rev. xx. 15, "If any was not found written in the Book of life he was cast into the lake of fire." The last verse of this chapter in Matthew says it is everlasting. No room whatever for Satan to come forth and deceive the nations after that judgment of Matt. xxv.

In the above two articles you have practically the whole discussion. The affirmative can jumble Scriptures together which have the same word used, in a different sense by the sacred writers and to one who looks only at the surface it will appear plausible. A half column of such mingling would require three columns to show the true idea demanded by the circumstances and context. No passage he can quote will come near to proof of his proposition. Let him choose one he considers the strongest and the negative will show it either has no bearing, or proves the opposite.

The truth is God does not wish us to know the time of the second coming of our Lord. The attempt to find it out is sinful. To know it would be a fearful calamity. More than that, the very thing which these good brethren long for, the personal, literal coming of Jesus to live in Jerusalem or in Chicago, would be of no advantage to the cause of Christ, but a great misfortune. To men of hard common sense to whom the Word is a finality in argument, we think these things can be shown.

Books and Tract List.

"THE SCRIPTURES OPENED."

Thoughts and themes for Bible students, by Robert Ashcroft. This is a new work of 375 pages, containing a variety of lectures and short articles on important Bible subjects, exhibiting the revealed purpose of God concerning the earth and all its families, how we may become identified with those purposes, "Heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ" of all that God hath promised. It is believed the book will commend itself to the unprejudiced mind, and be useful in leading to a more perfect understanding of and love for the Scriptures of truth. Numerous testimonials of a very satisfactory character concerning the merits of the book have been received from prominent brethren scattered abroad, and which we can find no place for in this brief notice. Sent by mail, postpaid, on the receipt of $1.00. Address this office.

"A LETTER TO A FRIEND."

We have received a new supply of this valuable work, which treats of the "Covenants of Promise, and their connection with the one hope, one faith, one baptism," by the late Mrs. C. C. Woodruff. This will need no introduction to many of our readers, as they already know of the good that has been accomplished through its circulation. Price 10 cents. Send to this office.

FUTURE PROBATION.

Is that awaiting any of the unrighteous? A 160-page pamphlet by Wm. Glenn Moncrieff. This work was issued and sold at 25 cents. We have a good supply and will send them post paid for ten cents per copy. This is an excellent opportunity for any who are interested in this subject to get this work by a talented author. Send ten cents to this office for a copy.

"GLAD TIDINGS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is the title of a tract containing 12 large size pages, and is a reprint of a work issued many years ago, and we suppose was written by Brother Benjamin Wilson. It is clear and comprehensive, and can be had for 6cts each or 50 for $1.00.

"THE POCKET HYMNAL."

"The Pocket Hymnal," containing 100 excellent hymns, with gamut for writing the air of the first line of each. Flexible cloth; 20cts a copy. Published by Wiley Jones. Send to this office for them.

"Necessity of Baptism," is a 4-page tract, written some years ago by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and it appeared as a newspaper article. It is so good we thought best to preserve it in this way, and offer it at 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Bible Plan of Salvation," is a 4-page tract, telling how to interpret the Scriptures, the development of God's plan, etc. Price 2 cts each, or 15 cts per dozen.

"An open Letter to J. A. Conant," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Brother Daniel Howard, and printed in RESTITUTION, April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cents per dozen.

"Letter to Dr. Talmage," a 4-page tract, being a letter written by Sister Abbie A. Howard to Dr. Talmage, and printed in the RESTITUTION of April 22, 1896. 2 cents each or 15 cts per dozen.

Important Notices.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION," Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money order, or registered letter. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all Things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME XLV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 18, 1896. NUMBER 43.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Plough Deep.

Plough deep!
Sow not thy precious seed
Among the scorns uprooted weeds,
Or thou shalt weep
To find thy crops all choked and dead,
And nought but thorns and tares instead.
Then plough down deep.
The promise ringing in thy ears,
That those who sow their seeds in tears
In joy shall reap.

Joonas (Jonah C. V. & R. V.) Chapter 1.

1. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Joonas, the son of Amathi, saying,

2. Arise and go thy way unto Nineve that great city and herald therein, because the cry of the evil thereof hath come up unto me.

3. And Joonas arose to flee to Thasis from the face of the Lord, and he went down to Joppee; and he found a vessel bound for Thasis and gave his passage-money and embarked therein to sail with them to Thasis away from the face of the Lord.

4. And the Lord gave a wind (spirit) to be upon the sea, and there became a great billowy surging in the sea, and the vessel was in danger of being wrecked.

5. And the sailors were alarmed and called for help, each one unto his god, and they cast out into the sea the wares that were in the vessel, that it might be lightened of them; and Joonas had gone down into the hold of the ship and had lain down to sleep and was snoring.

6. And the lookout came to him and said, Why art thou snoring? Arise and invoke thy god, that God may save us and we perish not.

7. And each one said unto his neighbor: Come let us cast lots and find out on whose account this evil is upon us: and they cast lots and the lot fell upon Joonas.

8. And they said unto him, Tell us what thy employment is and whence thou comest, and from what sort of a laity thou art.

9. And he said unto them, A bond-servant of the Lord am I and the Lord God of the heavens I venerate, him who made the sea and the dry land.

10. And the men were alarmed with great fear and said unto him, Why hast thou done this? For the men had become aware that he was fleeing from the face of the Lord, because he had told them.

11. And they said unto him, What shall we do to thee and the sea shall assuage from us? Because the sea was going its way and stirring up still more billowy surging.

12. And Joonas said unto them, Take me up and cast me into the sea, and the sea will be assuaged from you: For I am aware that this great billow surging is upon you because of me.

13. And the men made strenuous efforts to return to the land and were unable, because the sea was going its way and wounding itself more and more against them.

14. And they called unto the Lord for help and said, In no wise, O Lord, may we perish on account of this man's soul, and give not justified blood to be upon us: For thou hast done in the way thou didst counsel.

15. And they took Joonas and cast him out into the sea, and the sea stopped from its vaulting.

16. And the men feared the Lord with great fear, and sacrificed a sacrifice unto the Lord and vowed the vows.

Chapter 2.

1. And the Lord directed a great sea-monster to swallow Joonas; and Joonas was in the belly of the sea-monster three days and three nights.

2. And Joonas offered [illegible]-prayer unto the Lord his God from out the belly of the sea-monster.

3. And he said I cried in my tribulation unto the Lord my God, and he heard my cry from out the belly of Hades, my voice did hear:

4. Thou didst cast me away into the depths of the heart of a sea and currents encompassed me, all thy high billows and waves went over me.

5. And I said I am thrust away from thine eyes. Surely I shall never again look unto thy inner sanctuary.

6. Water was poured around me unto my soul; a farthest abysmal depth encompassed me; my head sunk down into rifts of mountains;

7. I went down into an earth whose bars are age-lasting constraints: and let destruction of my life arise, O Lord my God.

8. As my soul was failing me, I remembered the Lord, and that my votive-prayer might have come unto thee into thy inner-sanctuary.

9. Those who watch to guard vanities and lies have failed of their mercy.

10. But I with a voice of praise and confession will sacrifice unto thee; all that I have vowed will I pay unto thee, the Lord of instrumental-salvation.

11. And direction was given from the Lord unto the sea-monster, and he threw Joonas out upon the dry land.

Chapter 3.

1. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Joonas a second time:

2. Arise, go thy way unto Nineves that great city, and herald therein according to the former heralding, which I told thee.

3. And Joonas arose and went his way to Nineve even as the Lord had said. Now Nineve was a city great for God, about a journey of three days in extent.

4. And Joonas began to enter into the city about one day's journey, and he heralded and said, Yet three days and Nineve will be overthrown.

5. And the men of Nineve put faith in God, and heralded a fast and put on sackcloth from their great unto their small.

6. And the word of the Lord drew nigh unto the king of Nineve, and he stood out from his throne, and took off his kingly robe himself and put on sackcloth, and seated himself upon ashes.

7. And it was heralded and decreed from the king in Nineve and from his grandees, saying, Let the men and the chattels and the cattle and the sheep not taste nor be pastured nor drink water:

8. And the men and the chattels (slaves) put on sack-cloth and called unto God for help continuously; and they turned each one from his own way his wicked way, and from the iniquity in their hands, saying,

9. Who knoweth whether God will not change his mind, and turn away from the wrath of his anger, and we be not destroyed?

10. And God saw their works, that they had turned away from their wicked ways; and God did change his mind in respect to the calamity which he had talked of doing to them, and did not do it.

Chapter 4.

1. And Joonas was distressed with great sorrow and discouraged:

2. And offered votive-p ayer unto the Lord and said, O Lord, were not these my words, while I was yet in my land? Therefore I anticipated fleeing to Thasis, because I knew that thou wert merciful and pitiful, forbearing and very merciful, and one who dost change thy mind in respect to the calamities.

3. And now, O Lord, sole master, take my soul from me, because it is a good thing for me to die rather than live.

4. And the Lord said unto Joonas, Thou hast been exceedingly grieved hast thou?

5. And Joonas went out of the city and sat down away from the immediate presence of the city; and made for himself there a tent and sat down beneath it, until such time as he should see what would be to the city.

6. And the Lord gave direction to a gourd, and it came up over the head of Joonas to be a shade above his head, to shade him from his ills: and Joonas rejoiced with great joy because of the gourd.

7. And God gave directions to an early morning worm, and he smote the gourd and it withered.

8. And it came to pass that with the rising of the sun God also gave directions to a hot scorching wind (spirit) and the sun smote upon the head of Joonas; and he became depressed and was giving up his soul, and said, It is a good thing for me to die rather than to live.

9. And God said unto Joonas: Thou art very much grieved on account of the gourd art thou? And he said I am very much grieved, I am unto death.

10. And the Lord said, Thou wast sparing of the gourd, for which thou hadst suffered no ill, and which thou didst not rear, which came to pass in a night and perished in a night,

11. And should not I be sparing of Nineves that great city, wherein dwell more than twelve myriads of men, who do not know their right hand or their left, and many chattels?

COMMENT.

The book of Joonas is so well-attested, and since the Christ himself accepts the validity of his testimony as a true prophet as well as the credibility of his narrative and his personal experience of his being swallowed by a great sea-monster, from whose belly he escaped alive after a definite period of three days and three nights, and as there still are so many doubters of the "fish-story" at least, I have thought that a translation from the Greek text of the Septuagint which was in fact "the Bible" of Christ's day, might be of interest and profit to the general reader, and I send it herewith.

There are a good many variations from the C. V. and R. V. and some of them very important in their bearing on other portions of Scripture.

In the first place his name was Joonas not "Jonah" and the "son of Amathi" not of Amittai, and he was sent to "herald unto that great city Nineve" not to "cry against it." All he was responsible for was as a true herald to deliver the message committed to him. Results must be left with God. This the denouement shows Joonas was not willing to do. He was not willing to be simply a herald, and that is the great trouble with most of the "preachers" now. They do not realize that they are only "heralds" of the gospel and that their responsibility, authority and official-power even ends with performing this work faithfully.

This I consider one of the most important lessons of this book.

Again Joonas does not state in the ninth verse of the 1st. chapter that he is "a Hebrew;" but does state that he is "a bond-servant of the Lord."

The text says nothing about a "fish" but does state specifically that "the Lord directed a great sea-monster to Joonas." There are other great sea-monsters in the sea besides "fish." This is the best answer to the fish-story objections.

Then the kind of "prayer" that Joonas offered "from out the belly of the sea-monster" was "votive-prayer." This is not unimportant. Again Joonas says God heard him "from out the belly of Hades" The C. V. and R. V. say "the belly of hell." The general idea of "hell" is that it is a place where there is not any too much water, and this was a place of water was it not? The next verse says it was "the heart of the sea." The 6th verse says "a farthest abysmal depth environed me." The 7th verse says "I went down into an earth where bars are age-lasting constraints." Who were constrained here? The whole idea of "constraint" is left out of the C. V. and the R. V. Is this not the place perhaps referred to by Peter and Jude, where disobedient spirits were held in constraint awaiting the judgment of the great day? Who knows whether the deepest place of this planet earth may not be in the sea somewhere? There is no word for "pit" in the text.

The significance of Joonas votive-prayer is brought out in the 9th verse R. V., 10th verse (Septua), "all that I have vowed will I pay," and in this text it reads "unto the Lord of instrumental-salvation." In the 2nd verse of the 3rd chapter "herald" is "preach" in the C. V. and R. V. Before it was "cry against." Again, in the 3rd verse of the 3rd chap. the text reads "Now Nineve was a city great for God" instead of "was a great city" merely—and "about three days journey in extent" instead of "three day's journey." "Heralded" instead of "cried" all along here in the 4th, 5th and 7th verses. In the 7th and 8th verses the word rendered "beast" and "beasts" is "chattels" or "chattel" meaning "slaves" no doubt. They were not commanded to put sackcloth on the "beasts" probably, neither is it probable under the circumstances that "beasts" called unto the Lord for help as stated in the C. V. and R. V. By the term "Tharsis" was meant the country known to us as "Thrace" —called "Tarsish" in C. V. and R. V.

God is said in this 3rd chapter to have "changed his mind" and the word so-translated is the word usually translated "repent." The trouble with this idea is that theology has given a peculiar bias to our word "repent."

The great moral lesson of the whole book is the divinely taught truth that God is more merciful by far than any human conception of mercy, even an enlightened one as was that of the prophet Joonas.

CHAS. GARDNER.

The Record.

As we read and search the record that God has given us, plain simple truths which theology cannot get away with comes to our mind; "And this is the record that God hath given to us, eternal life and this life is in his Son." 1 John v. 11.

God has not given us eternal life, but a record of eternal life, and this life is in his Son. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Then if you and I have the Son of God we have eternal life. Why? For the simple reason that, this eternal life is in his Son, and if we have not the Son of God we have not life. How does this harmonize with theology; one teaching us it is conditional, the other we inherit it?

Let us examine the record and see what it does teach. 10th verse: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath a witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son." The record that God gave of his Son, is: that eternal life is in him, and he that does not believe this, hath made God a liar, because he believeth not the record. Pretty plain language, isn't it?

Then for us to say [illegible] eternal life independent of Christ is the first, and greatest step in denying the record. So the first step in believing the record is, that we are now mortal and when we die we are dead both soul and body, and dependent upon Christ the Life-giver for a future life.

2nd, Another essential thing is: that the promise to Abraham is yet future, and when Christ who is Abraham's Seed (Gal. iii. 16) comes, he will possess the land forever.

3rd, That Christ is the descendant of David, and the rightful heir to his throne. Acts ii. 30.

4th, That the kingdom which Adam sold to the devil will be brought in subjection to the will of God, and will be yours and my future home, if we are an overcomer. Dan. vii. 22, 27; Rev. v. 9, 10.

"If ye believe these things," then what? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark xvi. 16. What are we baptized for? For the remission of sins. Acts ii. 38. Can we receive remission of sins if we have been baptized, without repenting before baptism? Peter says, repent, then be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Why not baptize in the name of Paul, or Apollos? "For as many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Gal. iii. 27. And he (Christ) is the Son of God, so if we put him on by being baptized into his name, we have the Son of God, and he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." Do not carry the idea that as soon as you put on Christ you come in possession of eternal life, for we are to seek for it through faith, and obedience, and when Christ who is our eternal life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 4. "We shall be like him for we shall see him as he is." 1 John iii. 2. Why is it that people will believe theology instead of the Bible?

If you believe that you have eternal life abiding in you now, then you are not seeking for it, and will not receive it. But if you believe you have not got it, and are seeking for it, then you do with patience wait for it. Therefore, brethren, it behooves us to be ready when the Life-Giver comes, and hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Yours in the hope,

FRED EDDY, Jr.

Bible Immortality.

The word is used only [illegible] times in the Book. My text is [illegible]m. ii. 6, 7) God (in his righteous judgment) "will render unto every man according to his deeds: to them, who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Here is a promise of eternal life to all who seek the future glory, honor and immortality, in the way described, and will be given in the day "when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." (16 verse) Paul wrote to Timothy (iv. 1) "I charge thee before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom." "Preach the Word." The great reward must follow the judgment at the "Second Appearing." Then the seekers for glory and immortality and the highest honor that can be gained, will surely find the promised gift of a glorious, immortal life. We should seek for an immortal body instead of the present corruptible body. Paul wrote to the church at Philippi. "For our citizenship (Politeuma) is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Why seek for immortality? Because we are entirely destitute of it. The Bible never calls men immortal in this life, but calls him immortal? or 8 times. Job enquires "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" Paul in his letters calls him mortal, declares several times that "this mortal shall put on immortality" at "the resurrection of the just." (1 Cor. xv.) He says, when "mortal shall put on immortality, and death will be swallowed up in victory."

We should seek for immortality by a patient continuance in well-doing, so that when we obtain it, God will render eternal life to us at the time promised. We must become immortal first in order to live forever, so we are told that "Christ brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." By this light, those who do not seek for the blessing of an immortal body will not live forever in any place. When and how may these two gifts be obtained? Not by man's worst enemy —death. Let the plain words of the Prophets and those of Christ and his Apostles answer. Isaiah says: "Thy dead men shall live, with my dead body shall they arise." "Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust." Isa. xxvi. 19. David declares, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Psa. xvii. 15. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life." Dan. xii. 2. Jesus said unto her, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." John xi. 25, 26. "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." "Those alive at his coming will be changed to immortality without death." Paul writes to the mourners, "I would not have you ignorant brethren concerning them who are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others who have no hope. For if Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Paul assures them by the Word of God, these sorrowing friends that these sleepers will meet the coming Savior as soon as those who will be alive at his coming. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Then he asserts that the saints changed, without death, will meet the Lord with risen ones. Thess. iv. 3. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ all shall be made alive—they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv.

The Solidarity of the Jewish People.

It is the marvel of history that this little people, beset and despised by all the earth for ages, maintains its solidarity unimpaired. Unique among all the people of the earth it has come undoubtedly to the present day from the most distant [illegible], Forty, perhaps fifty, centuries rest upon this venerable contemporary of Egypt, Chaldea, and Troy. The Hebrew defied the Pharaohs; with the sword of Gideon he smote the Midianite; in Jephthah, the children of Ammon. The purple chariot-bands of Assyria went back from his gates humbled and diminished. Babylon, indeed, tore him from his ancient seats and led him captive by strange waters, but not long. He had fastened his love upon the heights of Zion, and like an elastic cord, that love broke not, but only drew with the more force as the distance became great. When the grasp of the captor weakened, that cord, uninjured from its long tension, drew back the Hebrew to his former home. He saw the Hellenic flower bud, bloom and wither upon the soil of Greece. He saw the wolf of Rome suckled on the bank of the Tiber, then prowl, ravenous for dominion, to the ends of the earth, until paralysis and death laid hold upon its savage sinews. At last Israel was scattered over the length and breadth of the earth. In every kingdom of the modern world there has been a Jewish element. There are Hebrew clans in China, on the steppes of Central Asia, in the desert heart of Africa. The most powerful races have not been able to assimilate them, the bitterest persecution, so far from exterminating them, has not eradicated a single characteristic. In mental and moral traits, in form and feature, even, the Jew to-day is the same as when Jerusalem was the peer of Tyre and Babylon. In the greedy energy of the Jewish trader smoulders some thing of the old fire of the Maccabees. Abraham and Mordecia stand out upon the sculptures of Nineveh marked by the same eye and beard, the same nose and jaw by which we just now recognize their descendants. Language, literature, customs, traditions, traits of character, these, too, have all survived. The Jew of New York, Chicago, St. Louis, is, in body and soul, the Jew of London, of St. Petersburgh, of Constantinople, of the fenced cities of Judah in the days of David.—The Miracle of Judaism.

Love the Bible.

When you open the Bible, never forget that it is the Word of God. That he is as really speaking to you there as he spoke with Moses on the mount. As you read, let Scripture explain Scripture; and use the more easy portions to shed light upon the more deep and difficult. Never be satisfied with merely skimming the surface of the Bible. You are to search the Scriptures. "Plough into the Bible," was the saying of a wise and good man.

David often tells how he stood in awe of God's word; and so of many other of the saints and holy men of old.

It is said of King Edward VI. of England, that once, when quite young he could not reach to some book, and an attendant put down a large Bible that he might stand on it to reach up. But the king refused reverently, and rebuked him for his careless disrespect shown to the Word of God. There may sometimes be outward respect without inward piety; but in his case we know it arose from the real love of the truth, and honor to the Author of the book.

PLYMOUTH, IND. NOVEMBER, 18, 1896.

Now that the presidential election is over, and the country is settled so far as the policy of the government is concerned, we look for our patrons to fulfil their promises to us and send in the amounts owing us at once. We have a right to expect that you will be as good as your word. We have struggled along through the excitement of the campaign with very little money, and now that the time is here that you should remit, we expect you to favor us promptly. Do not lay this aside till you have arranged this little remittance. Each individual one may be small, but remember the littles from each will aggregate a large sum for us. We need money right now. It is our money that we want.

The money we have earned and should have. Remember we need it now.

CECIL said people looked at him six days in the week, to see what he meant on the seventh.

"To the generous mind, the heaviest debt is that of gratitude, when it is not in our power to repay it."

APPLICATION is the price to be paid for mental acquisition. To have the harvest we must sow the seed.

BISHOP HALL said that those who give not till they die, show that they would not then if they could keep it any longer.

"IT is not money, nor is it intellect that governs the world; it is moral character; it is intellect associated with moral excellence."

"RUFFINI says nothing is so wholesome, nothing does so much for people's looks as a little interchange of the small coin of benevolence."

"NOT only to say the right thing at the right time and right place, but far more difficult is it to leave unsaid the wrong thing at the tempting moment."

"ANOTHER word to struggling weary souls; Let us wipe away our tears, lift up our hands and gird ourselves for brave and cheerful toil. In due time the release will come, rest will be so sweet after the toil is over; glory so bright after the darkness has passed; victory so grand, that we shall not wish the conflicts to have been less fierce, or the perils of the way less numerous or painfull."

THE meetings that are being held in Plymouth are very interesting. Brother and Sister Woodward are as usual, doing a grand work in the preaching of the Word. Three have already come out on the Lord's side, and we feel sure that others are almost persuaded. May God help them to decide before it is too late. We are glad to be able to say that we have taken no step backwards, and that never did Plymouth have a better working church, not a drone or fossil among them. We ask the prayers of all God's dear ones, that he will continue to bless our efforts.

"HAVE you ever seen those marble statues in some public square or park which art has fashioned that, through the lips or through the hand the water flows in perpetual stream, on and on, for ever, while the marble stands there, passive, cold, making no effort to stop it? Just in that way time flows through the hands of men—swift, never pausing till it has run itself out, —and there is the man petrified into a marble sleep, not feeling what it is which is pouring away forever. In this way the destiny of nine men out ten accomplishes itself—slipping away from them, aimless and useless till it is too late."

THOLUCK said he was bound to confess that, the further his studies extended, the more clearly he saw that the religion of the Old Testament and the gospel constitute one Revelation; and the higher has been his estimate of the loftiness and depth of the Jewish economy! This is partly right and partly wrong. It is true that both testaments go to make up one book, and one system of truth. But it is decidedly wrong to speak of the religion of the Old Testament, and that of the gospel. This gives the impression that the gospel was introduced in the New Testament. And we ask, If that be so, can Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, David, and all the prophets be saved without Gospel? Do we not read that Abraham's faith was reckoned to him for righteousness, or justification from all sin? We do. What then, did Abraham believe? What did Abraham's faith take hold of? What did we ask again, did he believe? He believed the wonderful promises God made to him,—that he and his seed, the Christ, should have the land of Canaan for an everlasting inheritance, and dominion over all the earth, which included everlasting life to enjoy the inheritance for ever. Was not this glad tidings? And when to this was added that he and his seed should bless all the families of the world, I ask, could there be better news than this brought to man? And what is Gospel but good news? And does not Paul distinctly say in Gal. iii. 8, that these promises to Abraham were Gospel to him? Most assuredly he does. We conclude then, that all the saved, will be saved by Gospel. The difference only being that other conditions are exacted of man now; repentance and remission of sins are now preached in the name of Jesus, and his commandments have to be observed to the end of life's journey.

Resurrection Matters.

It is an undeniable fact that the doctrine of the Resurrection of the dead is taught in the Bible, and by this one fact alone it is distinguished from all other systems of religion that ever existed. No other book teaches such a doctrine except those that have copied it from the Bible. And there is no system of religion that teaches it but that founded upon its precepts and doctrines. The Atheist denies that the Bible is a revelation from God. He may deny what he will, but one thing he cannot deny, and that is, that the Bible exists. It is a favorite argument with them when asked to account for its existence, to say that it was written by hypocritical and designing priests, and foisted upon an ignorant and credulous people. If this be so, then there must have existed a religious system that held and taught that when a man died, he was really dead, and needed a resurrection, in order to have a future life. And we call upon Atheists for evidence that such a system ever existed since the days of the apostles, apart from their teaching.

We hold that no such evidence can be produced from history, and that therefore the Atheist's theory that it was written by the priests falls to the ground,—seeing such priests never existed except in the Atheist's mind. But the Bible does exist without such priests, and how came it into existence is the question for them to grapple with again. In all the ancient writings of heathen philosophers not the slightest reference is made to a resurrection of dead men. It is foreign to all experience, and far away from man's thoughts. Whence came it then? Nature could not reveal it. Darwin, when written to by a young man about a future life, replied: "Nature teaches nothing concerning it". Just so; it is more than natural,—it is divine. No truth is more clearly taught in the Bible; but it has always been met by the objection that the body laid in the grave and soon decomposes into its elements, which are scattered over the earth, and enter into new combinations, even forming a part of other living bodies. But science teaches us that the identity of the body consists, not in a sameness of particles, but in the same kinds of elementary matter, combined in the same proportion, and having the same form and structure. Hence it is not necessary that the resurrection body should contain a single particle of the matter laid in the grave, in order to be the same body, which it will be, if it consists of the same kinds of matter, in the same proportions and has the same form and structure. The particles of our bodies are often changed during our lives, yet no one imagines that the old man has not the same body as in infancy.

We have read of a man who through illness forgot that he had a wife and children, though he recollected the accident that caused his illness. And of another who recollected names and events, but did not recollect the house in which he lived for years. And we know by experience that we are only aware of our individuality by recollection. How does a person in the morning know that he is the same person that went to bed the night before? Is it not by remembrance,—and as sleep resembles death by being a state of unconsciousness, what difficulty is there in believing that God can and will re-create and make conscious those who are now dead, more especially when we bear in mind that a "book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the LORD and that thought upon his name," Mal. iii. 16.

The Resurrection of Christ.

"We cannot begin to appreciate the importance of the resurrection of Christ or its place in the Christian system if we do not extend that system beyond New Testament Times. While Christ is unquestionably the central figure of the New Testament, this is only the opening of another chapter in Redemption's story. The doctrine of the Anointed permeates the writings of Moses and the prophets and the Psalms—extends back to Abel and the garden of Eden. Since the promise that the seed of the woman would be the crusher of the Serpent's seed it has constantly been the theme of promise, so that the deliverance and the Deliverer have been inseparably connected.

As the Divine plan was gradually unfolded, the faithful eye peered into the future, and feasted upon the prospect. Near the last days of the Israelitish commonwealth "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law," Gal. iv. 4, but that was only the initiation of the Divine purpose in and through the Messiah. His life-work and death were only links in the chain of Divine Purpose. Had he remained in the grave the promised deliverance could never have been effected. His resurrection, then, was another link in the Divine chain, and of equal importance with any that had preceded it, or any that may follow. Each link has its own place, in its own time. If the link of resurrection had not been added the chain could never have been completed. The woman's seed would have no power to crush the Serpent's head. The reign of sin and death would have gone on and on. Yes, the non-resurrection of the promised seed would have destroyed the hope that death would die.

The resurrection of Christ was part of Jehovah's programme. By his prophets he had foretold not only his sufferings, but the glory that should follow. Luke xxiv. 25–27; also 44–47. And Acts xvii. 2, 3. The importance of the resurrection of Christ is plainly seen by the words of the Spirit in 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. No deliverance from the grave, no glory to follow if Christ be not raised. But Paul never doubted the resurrection of Jesus after his eventful journey to Damascus; and his argument here is so clear and powerful that it is absolutely incontrovertible. We have also the testimony of those who accompanied the Lord during his public ministry, to whom he showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, being seen of men for forty days. Their united testimony was, "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we are all witnesses." They were not testifying to a theory about the resurrection, but the FACT that the Lord was risen.

The idea that the apostles were willfully deceiving others is preposterous. They had everything to lose and nothing to gain by such a course. They were reproached, persecuted, made outcasts, stoned, imprisoned, and yet they persisted that the Lord had risen. Their conduct can only be explained in the light of their repeated declaration that they really saw the Lord after God raised him from the dead.

We repeat that his resurrection was not an after-thought made to fit into the Christian system, but an indispensable part of it; and so much so, that if the resurrection of Christ be a myth the whole system falls to the ground, being not of God, but a vain imagination. God either did, or did not raise the Christ from the dead. If he did not, then the golden chain stretching down through the ages, reaching beyond our day into that glorious future when sin and death shall be no more, is, alas, not a golden chain, but a rope of sand. If God did raise Jesus, the Christian system is Divine, the Bible is true, the plan it unfolds meets the wants of man and the purpose of God; and the light that streams from it will by and by illumine the whole world,—the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord.

It was the Creator of all that brought Jesus again from the dead, and why should it be thought a thing incredible that he should raise the dead? Let us once see his all-powerful hand in the matter and there will be no need to deny or waver. A wavering loses the assurance of future things that God has given. The death and resurrection of Christ go hand in hand. "He was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." Rom. iv. 25. Where is there any ground for justification if men deny or doubt that God raised up his Son Jesus from the dead?

In the resurrection and exaltation of Jesus we have the evidence that God has accepted him, and that a way of deliverance has been opened up from sin and death. This in every way we may look at it the resurrection of Christ is of supreme importance to all who claim to be his followers; for if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead and became the first fruits of them that slept.

Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ.

AN ADDRESS.

In writing to the Elect ones scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia, Peter seems to overflow with gratitude and praise for the signal position he and he and his brethren occupied. After the address he gives vent to his feelings in this way: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time."

Doubtless you are all familiar with the words of Jesus to Nicodemus in the third chapter of John, "Except a man be born again, (or from above,) he cannot see the kingdom of God!" To be born is to be brought forth. "The natural birth counts for nothing; wealth, position, learning, and descent from Abraham, even, count for nothing by way of passport into the kingdom of God; a man MUST be born again—brought forth again; an absolute condition. The ruler was amazed and perplexed beyond measure at these words of the young prophet of Nazareth; but they are repeated again and again, showing that this being brought forth a second time was a matter of life and death with every one." But, as in nature, begettal must precede birth, so in grace, or favor; for in James i. 17, 18, we read that the Father of Lights "begat" him and his brethren, "with the word of truth." This agrees with Peter, for the Father of Lights is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. As the first birth brought them into natural life, the second birt would bring them into

SPIRITUAL LIFE.

As the natural father was the author of natural life, so a spiritual father must be the author of spiritual life. God is a spirit,—God had begotten them. God was their father. They were his children,—not by birth yet, but by faith in Jesus Christ. Legally they were sons by adoption; they had been baptized into the name, but their natures would not be changed till they came to the birth. The begettal, then, is mental and moral, not physical. It affects the mind, character, disposition. It does not change the nature of our existence. This change of mind called begetting is produced by God; not by a sovereign exercise of his will or power; there would be nothing moral about such a change; therefore is it moral means are used. The love of God is manifested in the gift of his Son; and in promises of good in the future through him; and wherever there is any response in one's heart to the manifested love of God, it produces a change of mind and conduct toward him, and results in obedience to him. In other words, having fallen in love with and believed in and complied with the conditions imposed, they hope for what is promised; that is, they desire and

EXPECT WHAT IS PROMISED,

and they have a perfect right to. They have laid hold upon the hope SET BEFORE THEM, and therefore have a valid hope—a good hope through grace, or favor. By that I mean that God was under no obligation to make such promises, but did make them—that we cannot earn or purchase a share in them, for it is by favor we are saved, through faith; or as Peter in this passage puts it, "That according to his abundant mercy he hath begotten us."

Observe, Peter says God had begotten them again? What! had they previously had a hope and lost it? It appears so. But how had they lost their hope? What had they hoped for? Follow the two disciples on the way to Emmaus after the crucifixion, and hear them sorrowfully saying to their unrecognized fellow traveller, "We trusted (hoped) it had been he who should have redeemed Israel. And why should they not? Had not God by his prophets for ages foretold the coming of a son of David who should re-erect the throne of David, and restore again the kingdom to Israel? Did not the wise men say, where is he born king of the Jews? And back of this, did not Gabriel positively say to his mother that the Lord God would give him the throne of his father David? Had he not gone everywhere telling the people that the kingdom of God and of Israel was coming? Had he not promised each one of them a throne with jurisdiction over a tribe when he should occupy the throne of his father David promised him? Did he not witness the good confession before Pontius Pilate, that he was born to be

KING OF THE JEWS?

This cannot be denied. This being promised and believed they of course hoped for it. We trusted it had been he who should have redeemed Israel. And then, after all this to see him seized, and mocked, and spit upon, and crowned with thorns and nailed to the accursed tree till he died, and then laid away in Joseph's new tomb, is it any wonder they lost their hope for the time being, seeing they had the idea that the kingdom of God should immediately appear? No; it was no wonder, seeing they misapplied the order of events, and failed to understand the purpose of his death. But imagine their joy when they found that he was alive again!

I think the bluff old Peter must have been thinking all this over just before writing this letter; thinking of his own disgraceful denial of him the night of his betrayal, and of the bitterness of the reproaches he heaped upon himself after the cock crew and he saw Jesus look at him. Yes, it seems to me that he had been going over all this, mentally, and thought of the having mentioned him by name after his resurrection, to let him know that he had not discarded him on account of his base conduct. Said he, "Go and tell my disciples, and Peter, they must meet me in Galilee." In a happy frame of mind to write a letter to the Elect, was Peter, and so he begins: "Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a living hope—a hope that's vital—a hope of living by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and defiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God—the Gospel through faith, unto the life ready to be revealed in the last time. Yes, "hid with Christ in God, in the meantime, and when he who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. iii. 3, 4.

Yes, the assurance that their Lord was alive again, rekindled hope. The crowns and thorns loomed up as brightly as ever they did; they saw that since death was no barrier to him, it would be no barrier to them. No, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his ABUNDANT MERCY, hath begotten us AGAIN unto a living hope"—a hope of unfading, incorruptible life; and my poor heart says, amen, amen. Dear friends, dwell upon the fact that Peter's hope was begotten by

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS.

Important Current Events.

FROM ABROAD.

The latest reports from the watchers over the water are to the effect that the terrible state of affairs in Turkey is overshadowing everything else. It is indeed the question of the hour. Public meetings are being held in the cities and towns throughout the united kingdom to express indignation at the fiendish work, and to urge the government to take active measures. Everybody is agreed that the misgovernment in the Ottoman Empire must come to an end.

There is a growing feeling that an understanding has been arrived at between Britain, France and Russia and that an attempt of a settlement of some sort will shortly be made. Great hopes are being founded upon the Czar's visit to the Queen, and of his enthusiastic reception in Paris. Nothing, however, has been made known, officially of what is engaging the attention of the cabinets of the great Powers. But clearly important developments in connection with Turkey will shortly take place. The alternatives suggested on all hands are the deposition of the Sultan or the dismemberment of the Empire.

The London Spectator says that dismemberment will be the end of the matter. It does not believe in reformed Pharaohs. The system which allows such a scene as has been presented for the last eighteen months in Turkey is a system which must be swept away and it will not be swept away until shells have exploded in Constantinople.

The revolt in Macedonia still continues, and is spreading. The insurgents have recently had several successful encounters with Turkish troops. The financial situation is getting worse from day to day, and even in quarters where hitherto optimism prevailed, the view is now taken that bankruptcy is staring the Ottoman Government in the face.

The London Spectator believes that if the Russian people could be convinced that the British People intended to allow them to take Constantinople rather than that Ottoman rule should continue, they would put a pressure upon their Czar, which would be nearly or entirely irresistable. Here, they would say, is the chance of realizing the dream of ages, of obtaining the proper capital of the Orthodox faith, of bringing Russia once for all straight to the water, without access to which no people can have either wealth or external dominion?

It is hardly necessary to say that the drying up of the Euphratean power is almost complete. Writing under date of Sept. 27th, the correspondent of the Daily News, says: "The only hope of saving the situation and the Armenians is for England to concede the dominating power of Russia in the Turkish question, and let her occupy Constantinople. It would be merely anticipating history by a few short years, since it is now a foregone conclusion that sooner or later Russia will possess the Bosphorian capital, in spite of any one or all the powers of Europe.

But one may ask what connection these things have with prophecy and religious matters? A great deal. In fact, events are now happening that the Bible student has long expected. For more than forty years they have said that before the end of this age, Russia would possess Constantinople. This was regarded till quite recently, as an impossible thing; now, however, it is openly advocated by the leading newspapers in England. We venture to say that ere long Russia will be in Constantinople, and that for a set purpose,—for Rev. xvi. 12 says, "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great Euphrates and the water thereof was dried up that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared." The process is almost complete.

Everything indicates that it will not be long before the last great battle, Armageddon, is fought; and the prophecies of Ezekiel and Jeremiah reveal the result of this battle. From these sure words of prophecy we learn that while it is proceeding, Jesus, the King of the whole earth, accompanied by all his saints, appears upon the scene, and takes a hand in the controversy. And as we do not know how time may elapse between the resurrection and their appearance with him, it behooves us who have named his name to keep our garments pure, and be constantly on the outlook, so that we meet his approving smile.

On the 18th startling news reaches by a correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin in China, that the Czar has massed 112,000 in the divisions of Vladivostock, and commenting upon this fact, says the continuous warlike preparations are anything but assuring,—and says it behooves the British government to thoroughly investigate this important matter. Possibly this demonstration may be for the purpose of creating a diversion in the far East that will enable him to seize the long coveted prize of the West—Constantinople.

NEARER HOME.

We have the late advices from Cuba which say that General Weyler, who has lately taken the field in person has already suffered a serious repulse, losing two of his general officers and many men, causing him to retreat eight miles.

And a special from Washington to the Chicago Inter Ocean says that railroad running to Key West, New Orleans and other Gulf Ports are told to be prepared to transport soldiers and heavy war material.

We cannot live on probabilities. The faith in which we can live bravely and die in peace must be a certainty so far as it professes to be a faith at all, or it is nothing.—Froude.
